Wines, sold by the glass or bottle, are selected by connoisseurs and recommended week by week. There is also a good variety of domestic and imported beer.

Like Queen St. a few years ago, King St. West is enjoying a revival. Not only have the solid, older buildings been refurbished, given a face lift and a fresh look. There are new condos and townhomes in the area as well; and CIBC and Bell have opened new offices. E.A.T. at Le Marché is part of this revival.

Lunch is from 11:30 to 2:30, dinner from 5:30 to 10:30; Saturdays, closing time is a little later, about 11:00. Prices are reasonable, within a modest budget. Take-out service is also available.

"Dan beat me for 18 years until Na'amat changed him!"

Na'amat Israel's five Centres for the Prevention of Domestic Violence have aided over 5,000 women victims. The centres' criminologists and social workers run support groups for battered women and rehabilitation services for the batterers. Na'amat's efforts to rehabilitate these dysfunctional families have been outstandingly successful. Ilanit's story is just one of thousands with happy endings:

"Dan beat me for 18 years! I was afraid all the time. I took my nervous tension out on my children until they became rude and nasty to me like their father. Then one day, I phoned the number that Na'amat publicizes to let people like me know where to go for help. It's been two years since Dan and I first went to Na'amat's Violence Prevention Centre. I can't believe how he's changed. I learned to stand up for myself and Dan learned to understand what he'd been doing to us. Even our children have changed. I don't know where we'd be without Na'amat's help."

With a rehabilitation success rate of more than 90%, Na'amat Israel has shown the world that violent batterers can be treated. But Na'amat cannot bear the costs of running five centres across Israel without help form concerned supporters. A gift to Na'amat's Department for the Prevention of Domestic Violence can change the entire future of a dysfunctional family.

Won't you help?

$300 provides individual support counselling for the victim for the first week.

WEIGHT-WINNERS OFFERS AN ANTI-DIET PROGRAM

You can have your cake ...and eat it too!

More and more people are finding that the only way to lose weight permanently is to give up dieting forever! Even traditional weight loss programs have recognized the need for a new approach. The problem with conventional diets is that they tell us WHAT to eat, WHEN to eat, and HOW MUCH to eat, irrespective of whether or not we are hungry. The diet is in control, not us. This "famine and feast" form of eating can result in further weight gain, health problems and feelings of failure and low self-esteem.

Weight-Winners, an internationally successful anti-diet approach to weight loss, has recently come to Canada. What makes Weight-Winners truly different is that it is a research based program, developed by a psychologist and run by clinical psychologists, dietitians and kinesiologists. The program is unique because it deals not only with the symptoms of being overweight, but more importantly, with the causes. Throughout the highly effective and successful program, participants are taught to take back the control that they once gave to diets and to trust themselves around food.

"It is not a matter of 'will power' or of 'making up your mind'," says Dr. Michelle Flax, consultant to Weight-Winners. "There are no forbidden foods on this program. Participants learn to separate feelings from eating and learn strategies that allow a normal relationship with food - something that 'naturally thin' people already have," adds Dr. Flax. Weight-Winners provides the tools to take control and to develop a normal, healthy relationship with food.

Through the Weight-Winners program, participants uncover their own self-destructive eating patterns, discover what led to the problem in the first place, and learn what triggers their overeating. "One way that Weight-Winners accomplishes this is by having participants eat a meal together, "says Dr. Flax. "During this meal, group members are taught to implement new and constructive patterns of eating behavior and it is a turning point in the program. They are often surprised to find the origins of their eating difficulty can stem from childhood."

Other components of the program include exercise and nutrition education, and a focus on attitude, body-image and self-esteem changes. "Steady and consistent weight-loss is a result from this program", says Maureen Kark, psychologist and founder of Weight-Winners, "but more importantly, there is continued weight loss following the program as a result of significant behavioral and attitudinal changes."

Carol Mark, who lost 43 lbs. on the program and who became Administrator of Weight-Winners after working for many years in the area of eating disorders, says, "I am eating what I want for the first time in my life and I feel great! I do not feel deprived at all. I will never go on a diet again."

Weight-Winners is led by registered psychologists and is covered by most private insurance plans. Contact Carol Mark at 469-9622 for a free introductory consultation.

Introducing Nefeli to the Danforth strip

Nefeli is not only one of the newest restaurants on the Danforth. Owner Triandafalos Pacharidis asserts with confidence that his new restaurant venture is the best. After being in operation just over a month, he already has a good number of regular customers who come back once a week, or even more often.

Nefeli takes pride in offering the patrons genuine Greek cuisine prepared the traditional way, with no short cuts. Meat, fish and vegetables are fresh daily, and prepared with care. Among the items on the menu are roast lamb, lamb chops, souvlaki of various kinds, several different Greek salads, and a variety of fish dishes such as calamari and red snapper. The roast lamb is tender, served in a generous portion with rice and potatoes, and a tangy lemon-based sauce for the rice.

There is a whole new selection of vegetarian dishes like dolmadis, stuffed tomatoes and fasolada (lentil soup). For dessert, there are tasty sweets like baklava for dessert. Among its selection of beer, wine and spirits, Nefeli carries many red and white wines from Greece, as well as Marathon beer.

Generous Portions

The atmosphere is relaxed and friendly, with an open front for warm days in late summer or early fall. Mr. Pacharidis, who believes that human companionship is an essential part of life, encourages his patrons to enjoy the pleasures of social life and lively talk along with their meal. Like every successful restaurauteur, he is offering his guests not only good food, but service and atmosphere as well.

The environment is clean and bright, with the main colors being white and pastels. There are marble columns at the entrance, patterned on the columns of the Acropolis; the marble for the floors was imported by Mr. Pacharidis specially from Greece. The walls are white stucco, with murals depicting Greek mythological themes on one side, and posters with mythological themes on the other. The murals were copied from the wall paintings at Knossos by an artist from the Toronto Greek community.

If you're strolling down the Danforth come by to Nefeli and try their delicious cuisine and you'll be sure to become a regular patron! Nefeli is at 407 Danforth Ave., not far from the Chester subway station; telephone 465-4559.

New laser approach removes wrinkles, lines and heavy eyelids

An advances laser treatment that makes facial wrinkles, lines and blemishes disappear in minutes is now available for the first time in Canada.

Dr. Andrew Same has opened the Vitalase SurgiCentre in Mississauga to provide a treatment he says makes previous approaches obsolete.

"Laser skin resurfacing is considerably easier on the patient than chemical peels and dermabrasion," he said. "There is no bleeding or bruising and remarkably little pain. And a patient doesn't have to go into hiding until the skin heals."

Not only women are interested in retaining their youthful looks. Men who have lost their jobs – or who may be threatened with a layoff – want to improve their chances of getting or keeping a job by projecting a youthful image.

Dr. Sarne was trained in California by Dr. Laurence M. David, who developed the resurfacing technique using an ultrapulse CO_2 laser beam.

This gives the surgeon the ability to remove precise amounts of skin without damaging adjacent areas. The laser, in effect, evaporates the damaged skin, exposing the unblemished tissue below.

"The laser actually has a rejuvenating effect on the skin," says Dr. Same. "It stimulates the regeneration of natural collagen and new cells. The result is a newer, younger appearing skin brought about by a natural process."

The pinpoint accuracy of the laser beam is a major advantage over procedures based on the use of chemicals or dermabrasion tools. In a chemical peel, acid is brushed over an area of the skin and eats away at blemishes.

"Patients often experience a great deal of the pain," said Dr. Same. "Bleeding, crusting and a swollen red appearance are common and it is often weeks before they venture out into the public eye."

The ultra-pulse laser treatment, by contrast, is done in a clinic on an outpatient basis. The procedure requires little or no sedation and takes only a short time.

In addition to surface wrinkles, lines and blemishes on the face and hands, the laser is used to remove the effects of aging around the eyes. Bags under the eyes and heavy eyelids can be removed quickly without the swelling and bruising associated with scalpel surgery often used for this procedure.

The treated skin turns pink which takes about one week to fade, leaving an even-colored and natural-looking complexion, says Dr. Same. Complete healing takes about six weeks. Another major advantage is that the laser treatment is permanent.

"If somebody takes care to avoid the effects of sun and wind, the youthful look will last a long time," says Dr. Same. "It is also just as effective on black, olive, brown and oriental complexions as it is on fair skin."

By SHELDON KIRSHNER
CJN Staff Reporter

Tales of high adventure figure prominently in travel literature. Yossi Ghinsberg's riveting book, Back From Tuichi (Random House, $29), fits snugly into that genre.

Born and raised in Israel, Ghinsberg has travelled the world, having been a construction worker in Norway, a fisherman in Alaska, a cook in New York and a simple tourist in Las Vegas.

Some years ago, he went to Bolivia, where he teamed up with three fellow backpackers for an expedition deep into a remote part of the Amazon rainforest.

His companions were Karl, an Austrian geologist whose uncle was supposedly a Nazi; Marcus, a frail but testy Swiss mystic; and Kevin, a resourceful American photographer.

Trip becomes a nightmare

Their trip turned into something of a nightmare. After several weeks of wandering aimlessly in the jungle, they split up. Karl and Marcus set off for La Paz, their starting point, while Yossi and Kevin foolishly decided to continue by raft down the treacherous Tuichi River, a tributary of the Amazon.

On their first day on the river, their raft crashed into a large rock, sending Kevin into the swift-flowing water and leaving Yossi clinging to a rope. Kevin made it to shore, while Yossi was swept into a canyon of sheer rock face, and then over a raging waterfall.

Having been separated from Kevin, Yossi was absolutely on his own. For the next three weeks, Yossi fought for his life in a compelling struggle for survival, fighting off poisonous snakes, fire ants, termites, a jaguar and terrible pangs of hunger and physical pain.

Toward the end of his ordeal, he found himself in quicksand, not once but twice.

Demoralized, Yossi was ready to give in and die. But, fortified by faith and a plastic-wrapped book of passages from the Kabbalah, Yossi conquered his weaknesses and survived.

Back From Tuichi is a vivid account of an adventure that turned sour, filled with graphic descriptions of an unforgiving landscape and of characters who pulsate with passion.

In short, it's a book you can't put down.

TRAVEL TALK

By BILL GLADSTONE

Pegasus Bridge in Spotlight: The famous Pegasus Bridge, located in the town of Benouville in the French province of Normandy, was the first place to be liberated by the Allied invasion on June 7, 1944. Today the town is literally in the spotlight by being featured in a sound and light show that recaptures the experience of the liberation.

Some 300 spectators sit on benches about 100 metres behind the bridge. The presentation is narrated by an actor impersonating a civilian in 1944, discussing his worries and telling anecdotes. On the right are the marshes where the gliders landed. The narration is punctuated with sounds — voices, cries, hushed military orders, explosion, conversations of resistance fighters.

The show is scheduled to run nightly to mid-October, and again each summer for the next 15 years. For more details, contact the French Government Tourist Office, 30 St. Patrick St., Suite 700, Toronto ON M5T 3A3. (416) 593-4723.

Cycling Main Street U.S.A.: Once called "Main Street," the famous American highway called Route 66 was a network of two-lane highways that carried millions of vacationers across the United States during auto travel's heyday 40 years ago. The Oklahoma Route 66 Preservation Society has preserved 666 kilometres of the route intact. Most of the main street towns along this segment have maintained their nostalgic charm.

As in the many movies and TV shows that have featured Route 66, towns lining this ribbon of blacktop reflect some of America's best-known symbols. General stores where Coca-Cola was 10 cents a bottle, hearty dinners made by Mom, and wonderful kitschy stores where travellers could buy everything from souvenir mugs and key chains to one-of-a-kind crafts.

There are almost a dozen museums along Route 66 and seven state parks where visitors can camp overnight. The highway is also being promoted as a bicycle path of moderate difficulty. The trail lies along relatively flat, paved highway but is occasionally hilly.

For a copy of the Oklahoma Bicycle Route Map and a guide to travel in Oklahoma, contact the Oklahoma Travel and Tourism Division toll-free at (800) 652-6552.

That's Life explores '90s dilemmas

By GERRY MORRIS
Special to The CJN

NEW YORK — The Jewish Repertory's 20th season is closing with That's Life, an insightful view into the diverse dilemmas of 1990s Jewish American life through songs and poignant vignettes.

A team of talented composers and lyricists, fronted by five exuberant actors/singers, mirthfully explore the question: "What is the status of Jews today?"

There are good-natured swipes at such subjects as assimilation, intermarriage, parenting and cultural stereotypes in the 18 sketches, some bittersweet — and nary a clinker in the lot.

Highlights include show-stoppers like Rhinoplasty in which a love-struck 16-year-old questions whether she should be like her friends and get her nose reshaped, and the heart-rending Mama I Want To Get Downstairs, a girl's plea for spiritual equality sung from an Orthodox shul's balcony.

One charming number concerns whether the nice Jewish boy is an endangered species ("They are no longer in the Catskills/Where my Mother met my Dad"). Another, It's Hard To Be A Patriarch Today, bemoans the loss of paternal authority.

My Calling is all about shopping as philanthropy ("How else to empty closets for worthy causes?"). Tap My Potential features four overachievers groaning about their parents' expectations ("Gentiles have free time — not me").

The Geshrunken Meshugene Rag is a sassy caricature of psychiatrists, Jewish guilt and various idiosyncratic traits ("Do you turn on the news after 6 p.m.? If so you're probably Jewish").

This tasty tzimmes of American Jewish life is deftly conceived, directed and choreographed by Hellen Butleroff.

That's Life is appearing for a limited run at Playhouse 91, 316 East 91st St. For tickets call (212) 831-2000 or Ticketmaster (212) 307-4100.

By SHELDON KIRSHNER
CJN Staff Reporter

Buddy Ackerman is your garden variety Hollywood tyrant, a self-absorbed Jewish producer whose capricious moods, arbitrary whims and noxious outbursts keep his minions in tow.

Whether Ackerman is a typical Hollywood type is debatable. But the manner in which he is depicted in The Buddy Factor, George Huang's black comedy, seems quite plausible.

Keven Spacey is brilliant as Ackerman. A performance like his is a rarity and a treat.

BILL GLADSTONE'S

EYE ON ARTS

A Theatre Goes Dark: Just one month ago, this column conveyed the happy news that the Leah Posluns Theatre's upcoming season, its 18th, would be highlighted by such potential winners as Twilight of The Golds, Broadway Bound and Yiddle With A Fiddle. However, the number 18, which traditionally symbolizes chai, or life, has in this instance brought an unexpected death.

Late in August, in a bid to rescue the Jewish Community Centre of Toronto from insolvency, the Jewish Federation of Greater Toronto abruptly brought down the curtain on the theatre, closed the theatre school, changed the locks on the doors, and handed pink slips to some 31 JCC employees. At present, the theatre is dark, silent, and entirely without life; a place, seemingly, where only ghosts walk.

But the JCC 31 apparently have no intention of going gently into that good night. When the Federation launched its UJA campaign at the Inn on the Park, they haunted the sidewalk outside, waving placards with messages like "If This Is A Rescue, Then Let Us Drown!"

Like a congregation of ghosts, they appeared again with friends and supporters on a sidewalk outside the JCC on Sept. 11 (the UJA's Super Sunday), carrying placards, handing out leaflets, and listening as sympathetic performers like Salome Bey sang on their behalf. Reva Stern, the theatre's former artistic director, helped direct this street production; Laura Martin, the former publicist, helped attract reporters from the CBC, CFTO, The CJN and other media; and the theatre's former technical director helped set up the performers' equipment. Meanwhile, groups of protestors were chanting "Save Our Theatre!" as they marched back and forth along the boulevard and along a short stretch of Bathurst Street.

'I'm not going away so easily'

Stern told this reporter that she felt the federation had disposed of the theatre staff as a homeowner might dispose of raccoons found in the attic — by trapping them, then summarily dumping and abandoning them in the wilderness. "I've worked here for 20 years," she said. "I put the first shovel into the ground for this theatre, and I'm not going away so easily."

She said she recently attended a meeting of the Association of Jewish Theatres in Detroit, where directors of many smaller Jewish theatres across the continent approached her for advice. "We were the largest one, the one to whom the others looked for guidance; we were the beacon. Now I'm getting phone calls from them — they can't believe what's happened."

The loss of this theatre is obviously a major blow to the Jewish-Canadian cultural community. Stern said that it will directly affect the sense of Jewish identity felt by the many Jews who attended the theatre religiously but were otherwise uninvolved with Jewish affairs. "The federation talks about the need for Jewish continuity, so how can it turn around and do a thing like this?"

Other placards were quite succinct in their astonished anger, asking only "How?" and "Why?" One senses there is another act to this unfolding drama, one that may contain some important disclosures. All that's fully clear at this point is that this matter is terribly sad for all of us, especially the JCC 31 — and sadder still that it came just before and during the annual Days of Awe.

Krystallnacht Commemorative Concert on CD: On the 50th anniversary of Germany's "Night of Shattering Glass," a unique concert, Crystal Psalms, was performed. The music was performed simultaneously by ensembles in six nations, and mixed live in stereo, and broadcast on radio across much of Western Europe.

The ensembles included mixed choruses of 16 and 32 voices, string and wind quartets, a percussionist and an accordionist. A pre-recorded tape added sounds such as a shofar, wailing voices, the cries of Jewish orphans, a ship's horn, a train, and breaking glass.

Written by composer Alvin Curran, Crystal Psalms is available on CD from New Albion Records, 584 Castro St. -515, San Francisco, CA 94114.

Israel's survival, Holocaust linked in Lanzmann's film

By SHELDON KIRSHNER
CJN Staff Reporter

In Shoah, Claude Lanzmann, the celebrated French-Jewish filmmaker, delved into the Holocaust, the systematic destruction of European Jewry. Now, in Tsahal, he explores the theme of Jewish survival through the prism of the Israeli armed forces.

There are obvious parallels between Shoah and Tsahal, which had its North American premiere at the Toronto International Film Festival recently.

Both are exhaustive marathons. Shoah ran for nine hours. Tsahal clocks in at five hours. Both rely almost exclusively on on-screen interviews, or talking heads. Both eschew history for the here-and-now. In Shoah, Lanzmann skimmed over the causes of the Holocaust. In Tsahal, he sets aside the genesis of the Israel Defence Force, concentrating on the 1973 Yom Kippur War. Only in passing does he mention the 1948 War of Independence, the 1956 Sinai Campaign, the 1967 Six Day War, the 1968-70 War of Attrition and the 1982 Lebanon War.

There is a logic in Lanzmann's focus on the Yom Kippur War. It was a war with frightful casualties which consumed part of a generation. It was a war which Israel almost lost in the first few days of combat.

These sombre facts are most significant to Lanzmann because Israel is the homeland of the Jewish people which the Nazis tried to destroy in the Holocaust. The symmetry is irresistible.

The thread which connects all of them, not surprisingly, is the Holocaust, an event seared into the consciousness of virtually every Israeli.

The typical Israeli may not think about it obsessively, but Israel's survival can never be taken for granted. Even now, following Israel's long overdue rapprochement with the PLO, there are Palestinian factions and Arab countries which are unreconciled to Israel's very existence.

Yaffee, a reservist, was sent to the Suez Canal front in August 1973, just before Egypt and Syria attacked Israeli forces in the Sinai Peninsula and on the Golan Heights.

An Israeli soldier in Tsahal.

When the Egyptians crossed the canal, capturing the fortifications along the Bar-Lev Line, Yaffee recorded the unfolding chaos and terror. He is still haunted by the event.

The soldiers in Tsahal who relive their impressions of wars are neither haughty nor arrogant warriors, but ordinary men who were unlucky enough to have been caught up in the vortex of armed conflict. To a man, they were seized by the cold sweat of fear which accompanies war. No bravado or false heroics here.

Lanzmann's subjects are self-effacing and thoughtful — the soldier, now a brigadier-general, who appeared on the cover of Life magazine right after the Six Day War; the kibbutznik who never forgets that his parents are Holocaust survivors; the ex-general who himself barely survived the inferno of the Holocaust.

Lanzmann, who is nothing if not inquisitive, spends several minutes interviewing Israel Tal, the guiding spirit behind the Merkava, Israel's locally-developed tank. Tal, a former general, is loqacious and knowledgeable.

Lanzmann also talks with Merkava crews. The tankists are convinced, with nary a shred of supporting evidence, that the Merkava is the finest tank in the world. Some actually exhibit affection toward their mammoth machines. Love affair with a tank.

Lanzmann's cameras train on fuzzy-faced, nervous paratroopers making their first jumps. At least two neophytes hesitate before plunging headlong out of the airplane.

He speaks to air force cadets trying to make the cut at flying school. One cadet, in endearing broken English, explains that he wants to fly a helicopter, rather than a jet, because he "can't see too well."

Israel's physical vulnerability, a recurring leitmotif in this generally absorbing documentary, is underlined by the flight of a plane from Netanya to the West Bank, a distance of only about 10 kilometres. It takes the aircraft less than one minute to reach the Green Line.

Ehud Barak, the Israeli chief of staff, ruminates on Israel's military doctrine and elucidates on his participation in a 1973 commando raid in Beirut in which he was disguised as a woman.

Lanzmann presents the intifadah — the Palestinian uprising in the territories — as a moral challenge to the soldiers on patrol in the warrens or Gaza and Nablus and to Israeli society at large.

His conversation with a religious Jewish settler on the West Bank is both tense and affecting. Lanzmann makes no effort to conceal his sympathies. He's clearly skeptical about the occupation.

Reflective comments by novelists David Grossman and Amos Oz and civil rights lawyer Avigdor Feldman reinforce Lanzmann's view that Israel's occupation is a doubtful enterprise. (It should be noted that Tsahal was filmed before Israel's September 1993 Declaration of Principles with the Palestinians.)

Tsahal covers a lot of ground, but its impact could have been greater had it been edited down to two or three hours. Lanzmann is a talented documentarian, but enough is enough.

By BERNARD BASKIN

Over the past five decades, America's involvement with Israel has been more positive and intense than with any other nation. Despite periodic rifts and drifts this political and strategic alliance has held fast.

The authors of this insiders' account estimate that Israel has received some $100 billion in various forms of aid from the United States since 1948. In addition, of course, there has been close cooperation between the military and intelligence communities of the two nations.

Why does the United States have a special affection and concern for Israel? The answers include feelings of guilt for the Holocaust, the role of the Holy Land in Christian religious thought, the effectiveness of the Jewish lobby and mutual democratic ideas and values. In addition, sympathy and admiration for Israel's manifold accomplishments and successful defence of the country should not be overlooked; nor should the strong positive attitude of most U.S. presidents.

CBS correspondent Dan Raviv and Israeli journalist, Yossi Melman — authors of the highly successful, Every Spy A Prince, (1990), a brilliant and skilful description of Israel's major intelligence services, now offer a balanced, even-handed, anecdotal account of the complex U.S.-Israel encounter.

Several unhappy events through the years placed a severe strain on the relationship. During the Six Day War, Israeli war planes and ships mistakenly strafed and torpedoed the U.S. navy spy vessel, Liberty, killing 34 seamen and injuring many more. As a result Israel paid over $100 million in compensation to the families of the dead sailors and top officials of both nations decided to put the incident behind them.

The 1985 Pollard spy scandal was extremely embarrassing for Israel. An attempt was made to mollify the Americans by claiming that senior political echelons had not been aware of Pollard's activities — that he had been involved in a rogue operation. Israel even agreed to cooperate with the United States in gathering further evidence against Pollard.

The authors write, "In the annals of modern espionage, there had been no case in which a country ran a loyal spy in another country and then cut him off, while helping the other country in bringing criminal charges." It is significant that Israel didn't publicly indicate that several American spies had been caught and returned home. Evidently, it was felt that the relationship was too precious to be frayed by mutual acrimony and recrimination.

President Bush believed that building settlements on the West Bank prejudged the future of the area as well as Gaza and had to stop. When Prime Minister Shamir met Bush at the White House it was, "a case of hate at first sight. Never in the history of relations between the two countries was there such antipathy — true emotional dislike — between their heads of government . . . Shamir was always puzzled as to why his personal chemistry with Bush was so bad."

Bush opposed guarantees for a multi-billion dollar loan to Israel and insisted that Israel not retaliate against Iraq during the Gulf War. Overwhelmingly, the authors point out, Jews expressed their feelings during the presidential election in 1992. Four years earlier Bush had received 27 per cent of the Jewish vote, in 1992 he received only about 10 per cent.

The authors are convinced that Jewish political strength in the United States and the ability to lobby successfully for Israel is diminishing. One out of four Americans is of African, Asian or Hispanic origin, and the proportion continues to rise. "Members of these growing minority groups, even if they are not hostile to Israel, have their own pressing priorities . . . To most Americans the $13 billion appropriated for foreign aid in fiscal 1994 was difficult to defend, even though that was seven per cent less than the previous year."

This thoroughly researched work, is of interest from beginning to end. It is highly recommended.

TORONTO — Albert Lok, a furniture manufacturer, didn't get his favorite chair too often. His 8-year-old daughter Bridget, was constantly sitting on it. But she was no longer interesed in sitting in her father's chair after he and his partner, Paul Lam, came up with a new product.

They had been trying to get into the children's market, Lok said. "General spending on kids was a lot more. Suddenly we had an idea. A chair for kids." So they went to work on a prototype. It was wood-frame foam-padded chair, upholstered with a children's fabric and scaled down in size for a child.

Lok brought home the new chair for Bridget. She was delighted with it, he said. So was he. He had finally developed a new product line for his company, Eastwood Products Inc. That was three years ago.

Today the company manufactures a line of upholstered furniture for children — arm-chairs in two sizes, two- and three-seater couches, sofa pull-out beds, and ottomans which retail from $89 to $209. This furniture and along with a line of touch top lamps in matching fabrics is marketed under the name Tobo for Kids. Tobo is the name of a very well-known Japanese designer, but there's no connection with Eastwood, Lok said.

The furniture may be small in size, but it is constructed with the same quality standard's as adult furniture, he said. It is all made of sturdy wooden frames, polyurethane foam, and it is upholstered in 100 per cent cotton which is Scotchgarded and treated with a fire retardant.

All the fabric patterns, like the dinosaur and jungle scenes, for example, are designed for children. The company began with five patterns, four of which are animal motifs. "Most kids like animals. The first thing they learn is animals," Lok said. There is also vinyl material in primary colors, which is primarily used by day cares.

This year the company became an approved licensee of the Walt Disney Company, and so it is introducing two new fabrics with Mickey Mouse and other Disney characters that have been specially designed for Tobo at the Disney Creative Studio in Canada. He expects the Disney patterns to be very popular. "The dream in any kid's head is about Mickey," he said.

Eastwood has sales agents, but he and Lam do most of its own marketing, Lok said. They attend seven North American trade shows a year, three of which takes place in the U.S. Trade shows are expensive, he said, costing as much as $10,000, because on top of the trade show fees there are transportation and accommodation expenses.

But the exposure is worth it he said. Last April Tobo for Kids furniture was shown on CBS This Morning when Lok and Lam were exhibiting at the High Point Market in North Carolina, one of the largest international furniture shows in the world.

In Canada Tobo for Kids is sold at the Brick, Eatons and some juvenile specialty shops. In the U.S. it is available at Bellini, a chain of Juvenile specialty shops. And it is possible to buy extra fabric, accept for the Disney, for about $15 a yard from the retailers. The company also does custom upholstery.

There are plans to introduce three new products for next year, Lok said. "We would like to focus all our business on children's products and build up Tobo for Kids as a brand name for premium quality."

This week The CJN features ... Toronto Driveaway Service

By RUTH SCHWEITZER

The year was 1959 and Coady was 27, a recent immigrant from England. He was working as a printer in Toronto, "not exactly making big money." In those days one could earn twice as much in the United States, so he applied for a green card — they were easy to come by in the '50s — he remembered.

The ad, one of many such ads in Toronto papers at the time, was from a Detroit drive-away service that wanted drivers to deliver vehicles across the United States. "I had seen those ads and they intrigued me," said Coady. "I'd only been here two years and it was an opportunity to see North America."

He took a month's leave of absence from his job and embarked on a financially-rewarding adventure that was to set him on the road to self-employment.

He spent the month criss-crossing the United States, delivering cars for the service. Coady picked up a brand-new Cadillac in Detroit and drove it to Dallas, where he got a car whose destination was California. In San Francisco, he got a vehicle for delivery to Ohio. On the last leg of the journey, he drove from Miami to Buffalo. "At this point I decided I can run a business like this and I knew there was nothing like it in Canada," he said. He couldn't believe his luck.

When he returned to Toronto, he immediately founded Toronto Driveaway Service, and he has never looked back.

At the time Coady thought the bulk of his business would come from used car dealers who sent vehicles out West. He had no idea there were so many snowbirds who wanted their cars delivered to Florida and returned, he said.

"We've become kind of an institution among retired people. The cars being sent down now — we sent their parents' and grandparents' car down." Currently two-thirds of Coady's clients are snowbirds who winter in Florida. The snowbirds are either "bored of driving down themselves or their doctors recommend they don't drive down."

One of the bonuses of running a driveaway service, he said, is the opportunity to meet some interesting people. When Coady's Florida clients were working, many of them were the movers and shakers of Toronto — they were judges, lawyers and politicians.

The company delivered cars to California for the SCTV crowd — Eugene Levy, Andrea Martin and Martin Short. Anne Murray sent her car to California through Toronto Drive-away, and Sheila Copps drove a car out West in her student days. As recently as two years ago Copps delivered one to Canada from Tampa.

In the past 35 years Toronto Driveaway has sent thousands of vehicles, mainly cars but also buses, vans and trucks, to destinations across Canada and the United States. One summer, usually a slow season for the service, Coady had about 200 army jeeps for delivery to various points across Canada.

Toronto Driveaway screens drivers, which includes checking their driving records and ensuring that they are respectable members of the community. There is a detailed application form. However, selecting the right drivers requires experience and intuition. "You have to be able to read people," Coady said.

While the majority of drivers — 80 per cent — are male, he finds more women than ever are driving for his service.

New driveaway services are popping up these days, he said, since many people who have taken early retirement are opening businesses. Coady advises people who want their cars driven anywhere, especially over the border, to take their business to an established service.

Paperwork, which includes customs forms and photocopies of insurance documents and ownerships, has to be done properly or else the car will be turned back at the border, he cautioned. "Newer companies may not be aware of this."

The Toronto Driveaway Service is staffed by Jean Scott, who has been there for 22 years, and Ken Moude, who has been with the company for five years. Coady's 25-year-old son Dan recently joined the business after finishing university. "He's decided to come into the family business," Coady said, "so we expect him to carry it on."

World Bank Signs $30 Million Loan

JERUSALEM — In advance of the meeting of donor countries in Paris, the World Bank recently signed a $30 million loan agreement in Gaza for infrastructure projects in Gaza and Jericho.

The agreement, signed in Gaza by PLO Chairman Yasser Arafat and World Bank vice-president Caio Koch Weser, had been expected to boost the Paris meeting.

Palestinian Authority Finance Minister Mohammed Nashashibi told reporters "the $30 million agreement signed is for badly needed projects including sewage, schools, roads, water and energy."

Ahmad Qreia, the Palestinian Authority's Trade and Economics Minister, said that donor countries originally pledged $128 million in projects in 1994, Al-Quds reported.

In Paris, donor countries are expected to decide to release some $30 million a month for on-going expenses and projects.

Coordinator of Government Activities in the Territories Major-General Danny Rothschild and Foreign Ministry Director-General Uri Savir will represent Israel in the three-day summit.

Donor states pledged $2.4 billion in a Washington conference last October, but have made it contingent on Palestinians establishing clear accounting procedures and a taxation system.

Agreement was reached at a conference in Washington, attended by Israeli and Palestinian representatives, that funds would be channeled to the Authority monthly and the Authority would set up a tax system within six months.

State Revenues Rise

JERUSALEM — State revenues rose 8.2 per cent to NIS 6 billion last month from the same period last year, as the economy continued expanding, State Revenues Director Yoram Gabbai reported

During the first eight months of the year, tax revenues grew 13.1 per cent to NIS 48 billion.

Income tax revenues jumped by 18.3 per cent in August to NIS 3.5 billion. Since the beginning of the year, income tax receipts shot up 21.2 per cent.

By contrast, Value Added Tax (VAT) and customs receipts fell 3 per cent to NIS 2.5 billion from the same period last year.

Although VAT revenues are good indicators of economic activity, Gabbai said the drop did not reflect a slowdown in the economy, but rather the fact that August 1993 VAT receipts were uncharacteristically high.

Based on overall VAT and customs receipts since the beginning of the year, the economy is growing at a rate of 6 to 7 per cent, said Gabbai. VAT and customs revenues rose 4.3 per cent.

Jewish Telegraphic Agency

JERUSALEM — The appearance of McDonald's on the Israeli fastfood scene last year left some people here with a bad taste in their mouths.

Inaugurated with a flurry of media coverage, McDonald's Israeli outlets chose to serve non-kosher food, and thousands of people responded. Though the meat that is served is reportedly kosher, the cheeseburgers most definitely are not.

While no one has lost sleep over the mixing of meat and dairy at McDonald's — or at the other Israeli eateries without kashrut certificates — many observant Jews were a bit peeved when the fastfood giant opted to serve non-kosher food at all its branches, including in Jerusalem.

For this reason, the recent opening of the world's only kosher, Sabbath-observant branch of the Burger King chain has drawn cheers from Israel's religious community.

The Jerusalem branch — one of five Burger King outlets in the country — has been overrun with customers since it opened in May.

Thanks to its kashrut certification, and its location in the capital's most popular indoor mall, the restaurant has become the place to get a burger and a pareve milkshake.

The crowd, a combination of religious and secular, teenagers and families, Israelis and Americans, sounded just like customers at any of Burger King's 7,000 non-Israeli branches — except, perhaps, for their pronunciation of the word "Whopper." Since the Hebrew language has no "w," in Israel the Burger King signature sandwich is popularly known as the "Vopper."

David Birger, the night manager, explained that while the food in all of the Burger Kings in Israel is kosher, only the Jerusalem one is closed on Shabbat.

"Most Jerusalemites care about a kashrut certificate," he said, "but you can't get one for a restaurant that's open on Shabbat. As it is, the vast majority of restaurants in Jerusalem are closed on Shabbat anyway, so it seems quite natural."

Neil Ackerman, a 20-year-old yeshiva student from London, said he was "ecstatic" when he heard that a kosher Burger King had opened in Jerusalem.

Sitting with a bunch of British friends, Ackerman explained, "You have to understand, coming from England, good kosher fast food is almost non-existent. It makes us appreciate this even more."

"It tastes too good to be kosher," said Simon Hammelburger, 22, biting into a Whopper.

Their friend Danny Ormond, 21, said that he is disappointed that McDonald's doesn't serve kosher food as well. "It doesn't seem right that such a large restaurant chain would come to Israel, only to serve treif food. They should at least be kosher in the branch that's next to B'nei Brak," he said, referring to the fervently religious neighborhood near Tel Aviv.

Though they didn't seem particularly concerned whether the food was kosher or not, members of the Lazovsky family of Jerusalem pronounced the meal "very good."

It tastes just like Burger King in America, they said, except for the absence of cheeseburgers.

There was one complaint, however: "Look at this milkshake," said 18-year-old Gidi. "It tastes awful, but what can you expect? It's pareve."

The real taste test came from Joe Dawson, an American basketball player from Birmingham, Ala., who now plays for Maccabi Jerusalem, the city's basketball team.

"This is a good hamburger," Dawson said, "and it tastes as good as an American one."

But, he confessed, "I go to McDonald's when I want a cheeseburger."

Living in Israel for the last three years, Dawson said that "of all the countries I've lived in, Israel is the most like America. There's fast food, cable TV, call-waiting for the phone. Israel is a great place for an American."

Ron Lapid, manager of the local Burger Ranch fast food chain, an Israeli company, believes that having American fast food restaurants on the Israeli scene has helped his business.

Asked if business at his 56 branches — the most of any chain in Israel — has been hurt by the foreign competition, Lapid said, "We haven't experienced any direct impact, but I can tell you that business is booming.

"In 1992 we earned $25 million; in 1993, $31 million; this year we expect to make $40 million. We also plan to open four new branches by the end of the year.

"If anything, I think that the American chains are making the hamburger even more popular in Israel," he said, adding, "That's good news for us."

NASDAQ begins to take shape

Jerusalem Post Foreign Service

JERUSALEM — When the idea of a second stock exchange was floated late last year, it was greeted with considerable skepticism. Few could have expected that a tender would soon be published and five groups would submit bids.

The idea of the second bourse has its roots in the expansion of the Tel Aviv Stock Exchange (TASE) and the lengthening queue of companies seeking to list their shares on it. As the market boomed over the last five years, it became obvious to businessmen and financiers that the TASE was an easy source of cheap money.

But as investors were becoming less and less discriminating over the quality of the companies in which they invested, the TASE began to impose ever-tighter regulations governing who could list their shares on the exchange.

The main bone of contention, which is the subject of ongoing litigation, is the minimum amount of shareholders' equity required before a company can apply for a listing.

Most recently the TASE raised the threshold to $3 million from $2 million and tightened the requirements concerning previous trading records as well as the information a company seeking to list its shares must provide in its offering prospectus.

This stiffening of requirements appears to have been a response to criticism of "bubble" companies — firms with no business and few assets, which had been able to list their shares and raise significant amounts of money. These companies posed, many believed, an inordinate danger to investors.

But critics, led by MK Sylvan Shalom, the chair of the Knesset finance committee's capital markets subcommittee, argued that the tighter listing requirements prevented many promising smaller companies from raising capital.

High-technology companies with considerable promise (and commensurate risk) have been forced by the regulations to raise money on NASDAQ in the United States, where, although listing is more expensive and regulation in some ways more demanding, there are no shareholders' equity or track record requirements.

Cable TV, cellular telephone and biotechnology companies, for example, need to raise huge amounts of capital to develop their products or operating infrastructure before they see a penny in revenue, let alone profits. There seems to be little sense in denying them access to public equity markets.

NASDAQ, which was launched to compete with the New York Stock Exchange, has succeeded to such an extent that multi-billion dollar companies like Apple Computer, Microsoft and biotech giant Amgen declined to list on the big board when blessed with success. NASDAQ, though, is not the only model of a second or smaller companies' stock exchange.

The Unlisted Securities Market in London, set up to solve problems similar to those a second bourse here would be designed to alleviate, ground to a virtual halt and ultimately ceased operating, as trading all but dried up in many smaller issues, leading to huge bid-ask spreads and leaving investors unwillingly locked in to non-liquid investments. No one has explained how this problem would be avoided here, where many firms will probably be even smaller than those on the USM, and where floats could be really tiny.

"Caveat emptor," said an international expert on stock markets familiar with the local market who asked for anonymity. "No one is putting a gun to anyone's head to invest," he said when challenged with issues of liquidity and measures needed to protect investors.

"I don't like artificial rules being imposed on what should be a free market; they are the function of a poor legal system."

While he agreed that, if the TASE functioned properly, there would probably be little need for a second exchange, he doubted that such changes would ever come about. "Competition can only be a good thing," he added.

His support for a second bourse, though, was not without reservations. One key issue, he said, was the quality of due diligence investment bankers would be forced to carry out before bringing a company to market. The smaller the company, the higher the risk and the more necessary the due diligence.

He was also critical of the obsession with the location of the bourse — the trend is towards computerized trading, so a whole new set-up seems unnecessary.

Shalom Singer, a partner in the Singer Barnea Investment House and a former director-general of the Finance Ministry, took the view that a second exchange is premature and no substitute for improving the existing one.

"In principle, another sophisticated and efficient stock exchange will contribute to the business sector and the economy. But it is difficult to seriously consider a second stock exchange while the current exchange is not operating properly," he said.

"The problems that have reached the courts include criteria in listing securities for trading and definition of market makers. In principle, if the existing stock exchange works well, I am in favor of a second exchange and even a third."

If the second exchange becomes the place where genuinely promising high-tech companies choose to raise capital, rather than on NASDAQ or from increasingly costly venture capital, it may become a resounding success. However, if regulators prove unable to police shady dealings, the market could easily become a haven for questionable companies and disreputable characters.

Israel's often overenthusiastic investors will have to learn to tell the difference.

GRIN AND BEAR IT

An action shot of a banker at the Tel Aviv Stock Exchange (TASE) issuing sell orders. The recent government decision to impose a 10 per cent capital gains levy on stocks cast a somber cloud over the average market player. The exchange closed for two days in an attempt to let the faint-hearted assess the situation and hopefully not sell every stock. Upon re-opening, as much as 15 per cent was wiped off share values. Matters improved and by the close, the main index showed a decline of 10 per cent.

Finta ruling taken before international rights body

By PAUL LUNGEN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — The League for Human Rights of B'nai Brith Canada has filed a petition with the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights asking for a declaration that Canada is in violation of its international obligations to bring Nazi war criminals to justice.

The petition arises from the Supreme Court of Canada decision in the case of accused war criminal Imre Finta. It asks the Washington-based commission, which was established by member nations of the Organization of American States (OAS), for a declaration that the Finta decision is contrary to the principles of international law.

A former Hungarian gendarmerie captain, Finta was charged with war crimes and crimes against humanity, in connection with the round-up and deportation of 8,617 Jews in the southern Hungarian city of Szeged in 1944. He was charged with robbery, forcible confinement, kidnapping and manslaughter, but a jury acquitted him of all charges and the Supreme Court of Canada upheld that judgment.

The ruling came under fire from a number of Jewish groups, including the Canadian Holocaust Remembrance Association and B'nai Brith Canada, which argued that, in effect, the decision allows for a defence of racial prejudice to war crimes charges.

"Canada, through the decision in the [Finta case], by not enforcing international criminal law against international war criminals and international criminals against humanity. . . is offering an effective immunity to these criminals," the petition states.

"The duty to punish human rights violations is not limited to the organs of government. It encompasses the whole apparatus of the state, including the courts, for which the state is responsible internationally, though the courts are independent from government," the petition argues.

The High Court listed nine circumstances Finta could rely upon in his defence, including "the general publicly stated belief in newspapers in Hungary that the Jews were subversive and disloyal to the war efforts of Hungary," the League stated in its petition.

The result of that legal reasoning is that "those who killed Jews because they felt, or they thought the public felt, that Jews had a basically hostile attitude to the Hungarian military objectives may not have the requisite mens rea [guilty intent] to be guilty of a war crime or crime against humanity. . . .The petitioner [the League for Human Rights] submits that the notion that there is a 'Jewish problem' or that Jews were 'basically hostile' to the military objectives of Hungary is unadulterated racial prejudice. The petitioner further submits that the majority [of the Supreme Court] appears to hold that some forms of racial prejudice that lead to killing may not be malevolent.

"The Court has read the international offenses in an illogical and senseless way," the petition argues. "It has incorporated into the notion of [guilty intent]. . . an element that excuses the very evil that the offences seek to punish. It has read the international offenses in a way so that domestic political and social attitudes could excuse criminal conduct.

"By setting up a potential defence of racial prejudice, or at least some forms of racial prejudice, by holding that committing prohibited acts while feeling some forms of racial prejudice may mean the requisite [guilty intent] is lacking, the court would excuse the very evil the offence was seeking to punish — those who kill Jews out of a belief that Jews are hostile to the war effort of the perpetrators. When what is supposed to be an element of the offence instead turns out to be a defence, the court has frustrated the obligation of Canada to bring to justice war criminals and criminals against humanity."

Paul Marcus, national director of B'nai Brith's Institute for International Affairs, said a favorable ruling by the commission would not be binding on Canadian courts. But it would have a persuasive effect in international law and influence courts in other countries.

"You don't want another country to look at the Finta decision and think it's good law," he said.

The Finta case is "an extremely dangerous precedent." It has implications in other war zones, including Bosnia and Rwanda, where war crimes have been committed, Marcus said.

The author of the League's petition, lawyer David Matas, is hoping the Canadian government will support the petition. "We urge the government of Canada, which joined our unsuccessful application to the Supreme Court for a rehearing of the Finta case, to also support our initiative in this international forum. We also call upon our government to amend the war crimes legislation so that racial prejudice can never be a defence to war crimes and crimes against humanity."

Christopher Amerasinghe, the Justice Department lawyer who headed the Finta prosecution, said he agreed that "the Supreme Court cut across the accepted principles of international law."

Although he was unfamiliar with the petition, Amerasinghe said, "I wish [Matas] well. If he is able to get a positive statement from the commission on the merits of the case and if they feel there was a misstatement of the law, it would be a useful thing" in other jurisdictions.

Amerasinghe acknowledged there have been discussions in the Justice Department addressing the legal issues raised by the High Court's rulings but no decision on further steps has been taken.

Jay Feinberg to appear on the Shirley Show

By LEILA SPEISMAN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — A talk show program with a difference.

The popular Shirley Show will feature Jay Feinberg, the young New Jersey man suffering from chronic myelogenous leukemia, whose only hope for survival is to find a compatible bone marrow donor.

Host Shirley Solomon is urging Toronto's Jewish community to come to the taping of the Feinberg edition, to be held Tuesday, Oct. 4 at 6:30 p.m. at the studio, 98 The Esplanade.

"I want to have an audience who really cares about him," Solomon told The CJN. "We as a Jewish community have to stand behind him. This is a chance to show that we do."

Feinberg will be accompanied by his mother, Arlene; an 11-year-old cousin who also has leukemia; and, Solomon hopes, a doctor who has cared for him.

Solomon said she also plans to introduce bone marrow recipients to those who donated the marrow to them.

The Shirley Show has been in touch with comedian Howie Mandel, and it is hoped that he will come and show his support as well.

"I really hope we can help him," Solomon said, noting that since her show is syndicated in the United States and internationally, including in Israel, it can drum up potential donors who might not have heard about Feinberg's story.

Hundreds have turned out at mass blood screening clinics in Toronto, Montreal and other Canadian cities, as well as in other countries, to offer the healthy bone marrow needed to save Feinberg's life. But so far, a suitable donor has not been found.

Those who wish to attend the taping of the Shirley Show should call for tickets as soon as possible at (416) 366-2345.

The show will air nationwide on Monday, Oct. 17, on CTV affiliates. (Check local listings for times.)

Serpa Pinto survivor recalls harrowing ordeal

By BEN ROSE
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Fifty years ago Cecile Metrick, then 14, spent a night in a crowded lifeboat in the Atlantic Ocean, while a German submarine captain waited for word on whether to blow up the Serpa Pinto, a Portugese ship carrying 350 refugees to North America.

Later this year Metrick will meet in Montreal with a few other people who huddled in lifeboats that night of June 2, 1994, people she has not seen since that time.

The Serpa Pinto passengers were allowed to row back, because Berlin decided not to scuttle the neutral ship and Cecile Metrick, her parents, Leon and Mary Tenenbaum, and her brothers, Serge, 21, and Andre, 17, spent the next night on deck in sleeping bags, afraid the Germans would go back on their word.

Today those events are like a dream to Metrick who has made a full life for herself in her adopted country, as treasurer of Elte Carpets and Home, a large company her father founded, and as an art patron and former member of the National Planning Commission and its art committee in Ottawa.

Her husband, Fred, is chair of the firm, while one son, Ken, is president; another son, Laurence, of Metrick Systems, is advertising manager; and Mary-Ann, their daughter, is head of public relations.

Even through the mist of time, Metrick remembers how her father, Leon, insisted — against great odds — that the whole family should clamber down to the same lifeboat in the rough seas.

Fifty years ago, Cecile Metrick, then 14, spent a harrowing night in one of the Serpa Pinto lifeboats. A German sub had stopped the Portugese ship and the U Boat captain threatened to blow it up. Her brother, Serge, took this picture through a porthole as the refugees rowed back to the ship.

Father kept family safe

(Three people lost their lives in accidents during this disembarkation, including an 18-month-old baby and the ship's doctor who fell off a Jacob's ladder.)

Metrick also credits her father with the wise decisions which kept the family safe during their two years in France and his advice to deny their Jewishness and to claim at the border of Spain that they were members of the Greek Orthodox Church.

"What he had to do to get us false passports and visas on the black market would fill a book," she said.

Only 80 of the 350 aboard the Serpa Pina were headed for Canada and they were held in bond in Philadelphia and put aboard a sealed train.

"My brother Serge got a picture of the surfaced German sub as it cruised among the lifeboats scaring the life out of us," she said. "But at Philadelphia the U.S. Navy took his films on security grounds and though they sent him back the pictures of refugees in the lifeboats, he never did receive the picture of the sub. Incidentally, the sub took three Americans off the Serpa Pinto and never returned them. There is still a mystery surrounding their fate and why the Germans took them."

The carpet company that Leon Tenenbaum began in Toronto with three employees has grown to one that now employs 160 and recently acquired Gingers.

Unfortunately, Leon Tenenbaum died in 1952 while a relatively young man of 52, his wife died in 1960 at age 64, and Metrick's two brothers, Serge and and Andre, also involved in the business, died early in life, Serge in 1970 in Montreal at age 50 and Andre at age 37 in 1962.

In an album at the Metrick's Forest Hill home are graphic photographs Serge took through a porthole of the refugees rowing back toward the Serpa Pinto. Cecile will take them to Montreal where, just possibly, a few survivors will be able to identify themselves.

Report angers activists

By RON CSILLAG
CJN Staff Reporter

Sergio Marchi

Susan Davis

TORONTO — Jewish Immigrant Aid Services (JIAS) of Canada has mixed reviews for a leaked government document that proposes changes to this country's immigration system — among them, restricting family class immigration.

Any changes which narrow chances for family reunification generally do not bode well for Jewish immigrants, who tend to leave close relations behind, JIAS national executive director Susan Davis told The CJN last week.

On the other hand, the proposals include changing the point system to select more independent immigrants on the basis of education, experience, language ability and long-term potential, rather than their ability to fill current labor market needs. That, Davis says, would mean good news for Jewish emigres from the former Soviet Union and South Africa, who tend to be educated, highly skilled and proficient in at least one of Canada's official languages.

The 18-page report, prepared for Immigration Minister Sergio Marchi, has angered some immigration activists, who contend the proposals were never aired during eight months of public consultations, which included JIAS.

Among the proposals, drafted by civil servants, are:

- cutting immigration levels to 200,000 from this year's expected 250,000, but staying with the long-term goal of keeping annual immigration levels at one per cent of the total population;
- narrowing the family class definition. Currently, spouses, dependent children, parents and grandparents — barring serious health problems or criminal records — are virtually guaranteed entry to Canada if they are sponsored by citizens or landed immigrants. The change would allow only spouses and dependent children to be sponsored. Parents and grandparents would be put in a secondary category subject to more restrictions.
- and doing away with granting automatic citizenship to children of refugee claimants, even if they are born here.

Davis is focusing on the proposal to redefine the family class. "We would be very concerned to see those kind of controls," she said, pointing out that Jewish immigrants often leave aging parents and grandparents back home, with the intention of bringing them over eventually.

Over half of JIAS clients come to Canada as independents, 20 to 30 per cent under the family class and the rest either as refugees or assisted relatives (aunts, uncles and cousins of those already here), Davis notes.

JIAS opened 1,200 new cases last year, almost all of them dealing with Jews from the former Soviet Union.

Davis and other immigration activists say they may favor the government's imposing a fee on immigrants who come as entrepreneurs.

Marchi is to announce his sweeping 10-year strategy for immigration policy next month.

Israelis among largest group of refugee claimants in 1994

By JANICE ARNOLD
CJN Staff Reporter

MONTREAL — In the first six months of 1994, Israel continued to be one of the largest sources of refugee claimants in Canada, with 434 such cases being heard to completion by the Immigration and Refugee Board (IRB).

Only India, Iran, Somalia and Sri Lanka were the countries of last residence of more claimants in that period, according to statistics released in September by the IRB.

The 434 figure represents those cases where a judgment was rendered, and excludes those pending either a hearing or final decision. Those numbers were not released according to country.

In the first half of this year, 268 Israeli cases were granted Convention refugee status and 366 were rejected. Another 57 claims were withdrawn or abandoned.

The latest figures show a continuation of a trend that began in 1992 when Israelis — most of them originally from the former Soviet Union — suddenly jumped to near the top of the IRB tables.

Israeli cases heard in Montreal had a far higher rate of approval than those heard in Toronto; in fact, the figures are almost reverse.

Between Jan. 1-June 30, the Montreal office made a positive decision in 223 cases and said no to only 59, while in Toronto only 23 cases were accorded status and 274 were dismissed.

On the Prairies, the IRB accepted eight cases and rejected none; in British Columbia 15 decisions were negative and only two positive; and in Ottawa and the Atlantic provinces (these statistics were combined by the IRB), 12 cases were ruled in favor of the claimants and 18 against.

In 1993, a total of 1,894 claims from Israelis were referred to the IRB, and during that period, only 157 were granted status and 729 were rejected, whiled 303 were withdrawn.

Again, those cases heard in Toronto were far more likely to be rejected (508 vs. 44), but Montreal was also rejecting almost twice as many as it accepted (203 vs. 108).

In 1992, 667 claims were made by Israelis, and 68 cases were granted refugee status and 103 were rejected.

People who make refugee claims in Canada are referred to the IRB's Convention Refugee Determination Division by the immigration department and have a single refugee determination hearing. This hearing normally takes place before a panel of two IRB members, although a claimant may consent to have just one member hear the claim.

In most cases, only one of the two panelists needs to decide in favor of the claimant.

In the first half of 1994, the IRB granted refugee status to 68 per cent in 13,297 claims cases.

In August, the IRB held a daylong information session for its members on the situation in Israel of immigrants from the former Soviet Union, a significant number of whom are not Jewish by religious definition. The speakers were Israeli lawyers Lynda Brayer and Jonathan Livny, and McGill University law professor Irwin Cotler.

Transnistria Survivors Association launched

TORONTO — A Transnistria Survivor's Association has been formed, announced association president Felicia Carmelly.

Around 80 Toronto-area residents formed the association in August to support each other and to educate the community about the Holocaust atrocities committed in the Transnistria region (see CJN June 23). Most of the members are survivors, their spouses and their children.

Association members and the nine-member executive committee are looking for books, documents, photographs and memorabilia to help raise awareness. This is in addition to asking rabbis to mention Transnistria in future Yizkor and commemorative services.

Those wishing to donate documents should contact the association's resource librarian, Mordechai Alberton, at (416) 638-1029.

If you wish to join, call Carmelly at (416) 482-1813.

Abused women in Israel get help

VICTORIA — More than 200,000 women in Israel are abused by their husbands, according to Judy Mandleman, national president of Canadian Hadassah-WIZO.

Speaking to members in Victoria recently, and earlier the same week in Edmonton, Mandleman explained why the Canadian organization is launching a new Women for Women program to raise funds for the ongoing activities of Women's International Zionist Organization (WIZO) in helping Israeli women in distress.

"The Israel Federation of WIZO is involved in the daily work of assisting women in crisis," said Mandleman. "We have decided to help in this phase of its work because of the horrendous stories we hear of battered women and the need for hotlines, legal assistance, shelters and so much more."

WIZO operates five 24-hour hotlines for battered women seeking shelter. The hotlines are all over the country and the phone numbers are well known.

WIZO volunteers have been trained to handle calls for help and take immediate action to get women and children out of abusive homes and into shelters, half-way houses or even hotels, Mandleman said.

Location of the "safe houses" is kept confidential to prevent husbands from coming there to look for their wives and families.

The main task is rehabilitation rather than reconciliation, said Mandleman, because the pattern of abuse can be repeated.

Israeli women, like women in most western countries, have learned to speak up and defend their rights. Mandleman said wife battering by Jewish husbands has not been regarded as a topic for open discussion in North America because "it's a shanda — a shame."

But abuse by husbands "has come out of the closet" and the Israeli women have led the way in declaring: "It's something you don't have to put up with. It's out in the open and that's the way it should be."

Under the Women for Women project Hadassah-WIZO members pledge whatever amount they can. Those contributing $180 receive a specially designed pin. Money raised through this project will be allocated to WIZO specifically for the task of helping battered women.

Mandleman said she hopes the project will become an annual fall program in Canada, followed by the Youth Aliyah campaign and then Hadassah-WIZO's various medical projects.

Mandleman added that Women for Women will also assist women in distress in some Canadian centres. For example, in Winnipeg, Hadassah is providing kitchen appliances for a shelter which is being rebuilt after being destroyed by fire.

Local assistance must be to a recognized, registered charity, she emphasized.

Mandleman announced that Hadassah International, which supports Hadassah hospital in Jerusalem, will hold its annual convention in Montreal beginning April 30, 1995 — the first time the convention has been held in Canada.

In Victoria, pioneer member Steffi Porzecanski was honored on the occasion of her 75th birthday. To mark the occasion she enlisted in Hadassah-WIZO's heritage fund which requires at least 10 members in a chapter to pledge $1,000 each. A heritage member has a plaque in her name placed on an Israel project of her choice.

Mandleman is officiating at a national leadership conference in Toronto from Sept. 30 to Oct. 2. A national executive meeting is scheduled for Nov. 19-22, also in Toronto.

Western Canadian Jews set to gather at CJC conference

By MAURICE LUCOW
CJN Western Correspondent

VANCOUVER — Sixty years ago the Western region of Canadian Jewish Congress (CJC) was founded at an emergency meeting in Toronto.

It was the first and last time the westerners met officially as a unit, except for informal caucuses at the national Plenary sessions.

But from Oct. 22 to 23, community delegates from Winnipeg to Victoria and the Northwest Territories will gather in Vancouver's Jewish Community Centre for the first-ever CJC Western conference, as part of national CJC's 75th anniversary observance.

While Montreal and Toronto have played the dominant role in Congress, some believe a national CJC would not have been possible were it not for the insistence of the Western Jews.

The records show that the seeds were sown in Winnipeg for a unified democratic national body as far back as 1915.

"In Manitoba and Saskatchewan," says a CJC document, "the drive for a representative institution was fuelled by immigrants seeking to preserve their Jewish culture and traditions when they were under pressure to integrate as Canadians." There was also an urgent desire to combat anti-Semitism.

Finally, in March 1919, Congress was founded in Montreal at the Monument National Theatre. H. M. Caiserman was appointed general secretary, but there was no consensus on the permanence of Congress.

Current CJC president Irving Abella says in his history of early Canadian Jewry, A Coat of Many Colours, that "Congress was inert" despite the many problems facing the Jews.

There were no follow-up conferences, and Caiserman was so pressed for operating funds that he had trouble raising the $8 per week to pay his secretary.

Eastern leaders caved in

In May 1933 some Jewish groups met in Winnipeg to form a Western Canadian Jewish Congress Committee.

Delegates agreed unanimously to re-establish Congress to combat the raging anti-Semitism and to try and develop plans to ease the plight of Europe's Jews.

Abella says Toronto and Montreal were slow to respond to the West. In those cities "the established community (the Yahudim as Caiserman referred to them) were reluctant to convene a congress they knew would be dominated by immigrant 'hotheads'."

The westerners kept up the pressure and the secretary of the WCJCC, Morris (Moishe) Gray, warned Montreal that "I am afraid the West will be compelled to shoulder the entire responsibility of organizing Canada as we feel we cannot remain dormant in the face of the present events affecting the Jewish people of Canada and the world over."

The Eastern leaders caved in to western pressure and convened the second national CJC convention in Toronto in 1934. The western region was created with offices in Saskatchewan, Alberta, British Columbia and the Northwest Territories. Winnipeg personalities like Myer Averbach and Heinz Frank dominated.

The agenda of the October conference will pay special attention to the multicultural links of the western centres and deal with such matters as civil liberties, human rights, media influence on minority-majority relations, racism and other pertinent subjects.

The Jewish component will examine Diaspora-Israel relations and Jewish continuity.

The Pacific region is hosting the event, with assistance from the provincial and federal governments and the Vancouver Federation.

For more information contact Erwin Nest, executive director of the Pacific region, by phone (604) 252-5101 or fax (604) 257-5131.

Alberta government planning to take Keegstra case to top court

CALGARY — Alberta Attorney General Ken Rostad announced recently that the province will take the case of former school teacher Jim Keegstra to the Supreme Court of Canada.

Jewish groups applauded the announcement. "James Keegstra stands as the epitome of hatemongers and anti-Semites in modern day Canada," said Hal Joffe, national chair of community relations for Canadian Jewish Congress. "Today's decision reinforces Canada's commitment to prosecute and convict those who would wilfully promote hatred against identifiable groups."

Joffe said Congress would review its options to determine whether a legal intervention is appropriate or necessary.

Mark Sandler, senior legal counsel for B'nai Brith's League for Human Rights, said, "By bringing Keegstra back to court, the government of Alberta is sending the clear message that hatred will not be tolerated in that province. . . Both of his previous convictions have been overturned on issues other than his blatant promotion of hatred."

Keegstra, who now works as an auto mechanic, has twice been convicted of promoting hatred against Jews. Both convictions have been overturned by the Alberta Court of Appeal on technical grounds.

During his years as a social studies teacher in Eckville, near Red Deer, Keegstra taught Grades 9 and 12 students that Jews were evil and were responsible for wars, revolutions and upheavals as part of a grand international conspiracy for world domination.

Israeli windsurfers flying high

By MYRON LOVE
CJN Prairie Correspondent

WINNIPEG — Israeli windsurfers acquitted themselves well at the 1994 IYRU World Boardsailing Championships held last month on Lake Winnipeg.

Sixty-two male windsurfers competed from August 26 to Sept. 3 off Gimli, a popular beach community about 60 miles north of Winnipeg.

The three-man Israeli team was lead by 22-year-old Amit Inbar, who finished fifth. Teammates Amir Levinson, 17, a three-time world youth windsurfing champion, came in 41st, while Gal Friedman, 19, finished 35th.

Inbar got off to a poor start in the initial three races but came on strong when the wind picked up.

"I think Amit suffered from the light airs in the first few races," said Charley Burns, the championship's general manager and former manager of outstanding Manitoba boardsurfer Murray McCaig.

"His weight — about 170 pounds — cost him at the Olympic Games in Barcelona in 1992 as well. The boards we were using at the Olympics were not weight sensitive as are the newer Mistral boards."

Burns got to know Inbar when he and McCaig, who was ranked fourth in the world in 1992, went overseas to train for Barcelona. The Canadians linked up with the Israeli windsurfer and trained on a kibbutz for a month.

"It was an interesting experience being in Israel," Burns said. "It was fascinating."

Inbar was one of three Israeli Olympic medal hopes, Burns recalled, and was under a lot of pressure. He finished in the lower half of the top 20.

Israel will be hosting the 1996 World Championships just prior to the Olympics.

THE TORONTO HOSPITAL
(Toronto General Hospital and Toronto Western Hospital)

SHIFF FAMILY MEDICAL EDUCATION ASSISTANCE FUND – 1995/1996

The purpose of the Shiff Family Medical Education Assistance Fund is to assist those Israeli physicians interested in doing research or obtaining specialized clinical experience at the Toronto Hospital in Toronto. The Toronto Hospital comprises the Toronto General and the Toronto Western Hospitals and is a major teaching hospital of the University of Toronto. The fund is open to both staff doctors and senior trainees from Israel who wish to come to Toronto for a one or two year period or for a sabbatical. The physician must then return to Israel.

Applicants will be expected to have already been accepted by a senior staff member at the Toronto Hospital who would oversee his or her work and who would be responsible for providing the basic salary.

Applications for additional financial support should be submitted by November 15, 1994 and should be addressed to:

Israeli educators start schools for poor Sephardi youth

Jewish Telegraphic Agency

JERUSALEM — Do Sephardi children from poor neighborhoods get an inferior education compared to their middle- and upper-class Ashkenazi counterparts?

As the government and Sephardi activists continue to debate this decades-old question, a group of teachers and parents has banded together to open two schools for underprivileged Sephardi teenagers.

The brainchild of Kedma, the Israel Association for Equal Education, the two junior high schools began operating in poor Jerusalem and Tel Aviv neighborhoods early this month.

The grassroots organization, which is partially funded by the Ministry of Education, was set up in 1992 by a group of predominantly Sephardi intellectuals and educators who hoped to provide enriched educational programs to the kids who need it most.

Clara Yonah, principal of the new Kedma intermediate school in the Gilo section of Jerusalem, believes such measures are needed because poor children in Israel — Sephardim in particular — "have traditionally received short shrift from the education system."

For decades, she said, "educators have assumed that most children from lower-class neighborhoods were unsuited for an academic education, and were therefore placed in vocational high schools.

"There was the assumption — a completely false assumption — that children from large Sephardi families did not receive encouragement and attention at home, due to both social and cultural reasons, and that they were a lost cause before they even entered school," she said.

Though she agrees that many Sephardi children now receive a good education, due in large part to the higher standard of living among many Sephardim, Yonah contends that "Israeli secondary education remains elitist."

To prove her point, Yonah said that only 20 per cent of working class Mizrachi (Sephardi) and 12 per cent of Israeli Arab high school students now finish high school with a full bagrut, or matriculation certificate.

The bagrut certificate is a prerequisite for all university study and most skilled jobs in Israel.

Yonah, herself one of five children from a poor Sephardi family, added that those underprivileged children who do excel in their local schools are routinely "shipped out" of their neighborhoods and sent to academic high schools in more affluent neighborhoods.

"I was an excellent student, at the top of my class in junior high school, and I was given the opportunity to go to a good high school outside the neighborhood," she said. "Before I went to high school, I considered myself a good student. But from the first day at my new school, I found myself way behind the other students, due to the inferior education I had received earlier."

Looking back, she recalls feeling culture shock, as well as shame for her poor performance in school.

"It was the first time I came face to face with Ashkenazi society, and it came as a big shock to realize that there were two Israels. One Israel had what it needed, the other didn't."

If the teachers and parents associated with Kedma have their way, Sephardi children from poor neighborhoods will no longer feel inferior.

Both of the new schools, which serve 12- to 15-year-olds in their own communities, were designed to instill a sense of ethnic pride in the teens as well as provide a top-notch education, officials with the schools said.

Determined to help the kids catch up with their peers in other, better schools, Kedma decided to limit each class to 25 kids. The national average is about 40 per classroom. And, in order to provide more individualized instruction, the organization is providing two full-time teachers in the subjects of Hebrew, math and English.

While most regular schools end at 12:30 or 1 p.m., Kedma's schools provide lunch — paid for jointly by the parents, the municipality, and the Ministry of Education — followed by an afternoon enrichment program and homework sessions led by Kedma teachers.

The teachers, who had to complete a special six-month training program as a prerequisite for teaching at Kedma, say their commitment doesn't stop when the teens go home at 4 p.m.

Ezra Avnaim, an enthusiastic young art teacher at the Jerusalem school, said the program is a "totally encompassing experience, for the teachers, students and parents."

Interviewed in the modest teacher's lounge, Avnaim explained that "the teachers are intimately involved in the students' education. Rather than having a homeroom teacher keep track of the students each day, each teacher is responsible for 10 of the school's students."

Prior to the school's opening earlier this month, Avnaim and the other teachers conducted home visits.

"It gave us the opportunity to meet the parents and to encourage them to be involved with their child's education," he said. "Now that school has started, I talk to the child, and if necessary to the parents, to learn if the child is having problems in a certain subject, for example."

Something else that makes Kedma schools unique is the attention given to Eastern subjects.

"In a regular school," Avnaim said, "I would be teaching art from a European perspective. Here, instead of being Euro-centric, I started the year with a study of art in India and China."

The reason is simple: "I looked at the population of the class and found that all but a handful of students' families hail from the Middle East. In order not to favor one group over another, I chose countries that are exotic and unfamiliar to everyone.

"The history teacher is doing the same thing, so the learning is multidisciplinary," he added.

Kedma's perspective has already lead to some interesting questions, according to Avnaim. "Did you ever wonder how the Jews of the Middle East were affected by the Holocaust? Israeli schools approach the subject from a European perspective, forgetting that all Jews were affected, one way or another."

Yonah, the school's principal, said that such an approach "gives the kids pride in their backgrounds and heritage. This is something they sorely lack."

"I like the Mizrachi emphasis, and the fact that the classes are so small," said Shriki, whose family lives in Patt.

Shriki said her son has always floundered in school. "He's borderline in math and reading, and knows virtually no English," she said. "His classes were huge, and there wasn't much attention given to individual kids."

Of her two older children, Shriki said, "One is getting out of the Army and struggling to pass his bagrut. The other never did bagrut and is a mechanic. Given the opportunity, both would have done the exam before entering the Army."

Gili, she said, "is bright but needs special attention. Given the right encouragement, I know he will graduate and do something with his life."

RELIVING EXODUS

More than 500 Jewish teenagers from around the world particpated in "Exodus" this past summer. Sponsored by the World Zionist Organization and the Jewish Agency, the program sought to recreate the journey of thousands of Jewish refugees who fled to Palestine in the 1930s and 40s. The teens boarded a boat in Brindisi, Italy, and spent three days at sea, imagining themselves as refugees, before docking in Israel. [Photo: Avi Horowitz]

Right-wing Jewish groups explore idea of starting settlements in Jordan

Jewish Telegraphic Agency

NEW YORK — Offering King Hussein an unexpected — and unwanted — peace dividend, right-wing Jewish groups are looking into establishing settlements in Jordan.

These groups argue that the time has come to implement the ideology of Zionist leader Vladimir Jabotinsky, who more than 70 years ago advocated Jewish settlement on both sides of the Jordan river.

And, they say, they plan to send delegations to Amman to look into buying real estate.

Peacemaking, however, does not seem high on the agenda of the would-be settlers.

"We're saying there is no peace, and Jordan is not moderate. If such a tiny thing, like Jews wanting to buy a little land and settle there, causes an uproar, then it's proof this isn't much of a peace," he said, referring to the Washington Declaration, ending the state of war between Israel and Jordan.

Guzofsky said he is organizing the effort for Kahane Chai after Binyamin Ze'ev Kahane, son of the late Rabbi Meir Kahane, announced the idea earlier this month in Israel and sparked the Jordanian government protest.

"We think it will be a lot easier for us to do it from the U.S.," explained Guzofsky.

Kahane Chai is banned as an extremist organization in Israel.

The early Zionist thinker, Jabotinsky, broke with the labor-dominated Zionist Organization in 1923, and the Revisionist Zionist movement he lead fathered today's Likud Party.

Throughout the years, Jabotinsky's youth movement, the Betar Zionist Youth Organization, kept "both banks of the Jordan" as a slogan.

Now, Betar leaders plan on moving forward with Binyamin Kahane's initiative, though they say they are working independently of both Kahane and Guzofsky.

"Jabotinsky's dream has always been (Jewish settlement on) both sides of the Jordan river," said Ronn Torossian, national coordinator of Tagar, Betar's college wing.

"We feel with this breakthrough in peace, we have the ability to do this," said Torossian, a student at the State University of New York in Albany.

Implementing Jabotinsky's ideology

Leading the way is Betar's Cleveland chapter.

"Yes, it's possible, and we should do as much as possible to get Jews to live in biblical Israel," said Daniel Lubitz, the chapter's director and a student at Cleveland State University.

"Right now in Cleveland, we're setting up a delegation of people to travel to Jordan to buy land. We have people who have the ability to invest in real estate in Jordan," Lubitz said, adding that he has people who have agreed to put up the airfare for the delegation.

"It is a feeling of accomplishment, as Jabotinsky is actually coming true," he said.

Abraham Foxman, a Betar member in his youth and today national director of the Anti-Defamation League, denounced the scheme as "silly and counterproductive."

He said that Jabotinsky's concept of "both banks of the Jordan, as annunciated and when annunciated, was both prophetic, and ideological and political.

"Today it is a nostalgia concept, and anyone who takes it verbatim, literally, is fantasizing or smoking something," he said.

Foxman noted that Benjamin Netanyahu, who as leader of the Likud Party is the successor to Betar ideology, has just met with Jordanian Crown Prince Hassan "to talk about how the two countries could live together."

Torossian, however, said that his organization "categorically rejects the so-called peace agreement between Israel and Jordan," just as it rejects the peace initiative between Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization.

Calling Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin "a swindler, a liar," Torossian added, "We intend to raise any voice we can to get Rabin out of office, and see the Jewish state remains safe.

"The prime minister feels this is peace," he said, "then we're going to test this peace process."

He said that "Jordan is occupied Jewish territory. Jews lived there in the times of David; we were promised it in the Balfour Declaration."

"I see their statement as very provocative and irresponsible and uncalled for," said Rania Atalla, director of the Jordan Information Bureau in Washington.

"Coming to Jordan to erect settlements and referring to Jordan as occupied Jewish territory is anti-peace," she said.

Asked whether Jews could move to Jordan or receive Jordanian nationality, Atalla said, "The way we deal with non-Jordanians is based on nationality, not religion."

She said she was unsure of naturalization procedures, adding, "I think we do it on a case by case basis."

NAME GAME

There is a story in almost every Jewish surname and Toronto lawyer FRED M. CATZMAN has been researching their origins over the past few years. Mr. Catzman reports on his research in The CJN.

SHOOM

Marlene Richman (nee Shoom) was delighted to read her mother's maiden name in my column and was inspired to write for information about her father's surname. There is no clear-cut answer.

Shum (pronounced Shoom) means noise in Yiddish and Slavic (Szum).

It means garlic in Hebrew and may be a surname like Knobel in German and Yiddish.

It is also possible that it is a truncated place name, representing the first syllable only of villages in Russia and the Ukraine.

Israeli police arresting Jews accused of stealing weapons

Jewish Telegraphic Agency

TEL AVIV — Israeli police last week arrested two residents of the Jewish Quarter of Jerusalem's Old City on suspicion of stealing weapons and other equipment from the Army.

The men arrested last Thursday — brothers Hananel and Gabi She'ar Yashuv, 21 and 18 — serve in the Israel Defence Force's elite Golani Brigade.

Senior police officers said the brothers are not connected with the violent right-wing Jewish underground suspected of planning violent attacks against Arabs.

Earlier this month, the General Security Services arrested at least nine members of the underground, most of whom are from the West Bank settlement of Kiryat Arba.

Last week, security authorities arrested another suspected member of the underground, Rabbi Meir Koren, 28, a teacher living in Kiryat Arba.

Meanwhile, Lt. Ya'acov Pinto was released from custody last Wednesday after being held for 10 days in jail. He had been suspected of turning over explosives to Lt. Oren Edri,

Underground terrorist group

Also last week, brothers Eitan and Yehoyada Kahalani, who also were suspected of participation in the underground terrorist organization, were ordered detained for an additional eight days by the Haifa Magistrate's Court.

Elsewhere in the West Bank, some 20 demonstrators were detained and four wounded when Jewish settlers attempted to storm the Tomb of the Patriarchs in Hebron, which has remained closed since the Feb. 25 Hebron massacre.

The clash between the demonstrators and Israeli security forces began when thousands of Jews from Hebron and neighboring Kiryat Arba marched on the cave to hold a prayer meeting and demonstration inside the cave in defiance of Army orders.

The Tomb of the Patriarchs has undergone a series of recent renovations designed to increase security at the site, which is holy to Jews and Muslims alike.

Palestinian elections to be discussed

Jerusalem Post Foreign Service

JERUSALEM — Preliminary talks on Palestinian elections and the redeployment of the Israel Defence Force in the territories will begin next Monday in Cairo, Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin and PLO Chairman Yasser Arafat agreed Sunday.

"Elections and everything that can be deduced from holding them" will be discussed, Rabin said at a joint press conference. According to the Declaration of Principles, that includes withdrawal of troops from Palestinian population centres.

Rabin and Arafat also agreed to convene the Joint Security Committee to resolve the outstanding issues concerning the safe passages between Gaza and Jericho and release of prisoners, Rabin said.

About 5,000 Palestinians remain in Israeli jails.

The meeting at the joint liaison offices near the Erez checkpoint was divided into two parts, with Arafat and Rabin meeting for close to one hour alone, and then together with their delegations. Participants in the broader discussion described the atmosphere as far better than in their previous meeting last month.

"The difference was like day and night," said Environment Minister Yossi Sarid. He attributed this to "recognition by both sides that success requires a better atmosphere." The private meeting, the contents of which were not revealed, may also have contributed to the better atmosphere.

Rabin approached the problem of terror attacks as a mutual issue and not one for which only Palestinians are responsible.

"Each side will make the maximum effort to reduce and to fight these phenomena," he said, adding he did not distinguish between Israel's success in thwarting attacks and Palestinian failure to apprehend terror gangs.

Arafat made at least as strong a statement against terror in Arabic as he did in English. Referring to Sunday's attack on a Jewish youth in Neveh Dekalim, he said: "I consider this is a terror attack. This is violence against not only the Israeli side, but it also hurts the Palestinian side and I will use all means to prevent its repetition."

According to Rabin's media adviser, Oded Ben-Ami, Arafat never previously used the phrase, "it also hurts Palestinians," in this context.

Rabin emphasized that elections, which the Palestinians had set for early November, could not be fixed unilaterally. "It has to be the consequence of negotiations ... Israel's position is for elections... But before elections are to take place, we have to know what will be elected, what will be the spheres of responsibility of the elected body, the question of redeployment."

Arafat stuck to the Nov. 1 election target date set at a Palestinian Authority meeting nine days ago, but added wistfully, "We hope. We are preparing everything from now."

Haiti mission put on hold

Jerusalem Post Foreign Service

JERUSALEM — Israeli police officers will not be sent to Haiti until the High Court of Justice has ruled on the legality of the issue, the government promised Sunday.

The promise was made after the court, demanding clarifications on several matters, decided to hold a second hearing on a petition against the mission. The petition was filed by former Kach activist Noam Federman.

Federman argued that the mission violates the police ordinance, since the law authorizes the police to deal only with domestic issues.

In response, the government argued that the police officers were not being sent as police, but as volunteers who happened to be members of the police force. Whether to send such volunteers was purely a foreign policy issue, and not subject to the court, the government stated.

Justices Dov Levine, Yitzhak Zamir and Theodor Orr agreed that sending true volunteers would be within the government's authority. However, they said, the government appeared to blurring the line between volunteers and acting police officers.

The court's concerns will be discussed at a cabinet meeting this week, and the cabinet's response will be delivered to the court the next day.

French Jewish leader defends Mitterrand

Jewish Telegraphic Agency

PARIS — In the wake of continuing revelations about French President Francois Mitterrand's right-wing past, the leader of French Jewry has defended his president against charges of anti-Semitism.

At the same time, however, Jean Kahn, head of CRIF, the umbrella organization representing France's secular Jewish organizations, has taken issue with Mitterrand's refusal to acknowledge France's responsibility in collaborating with the Nazis during World War II.

"Let us not now pick on a man who is sick and has always been courageous, who never was an anti-Semite and has always shown that he is a friend of Israel," Kahn said in a recent interview.

Kahn's comments came amid the latest chapter of a long-simmering debate here about France's actions in connection with the collaborationist Vichy government of Marshall Henri Philippe Petain and whether the country should bear responsibility for the Vichy government's actions during World War II.

Kahn spoke after Mitterrand, 77, who reportedly is ailing with prostate cancer, appeared in a television interview on Sept. 12 to defend himself against charges of anti-Semitism and to explain his friendship with a former official of the Vichy regime.

The interview followed the publication of A French Youth: Francois Mitterrand 1934-1947, a book by French investigative journalist Pierre Pean detailing Mitterrand's activities before, during and after the war.

The book describes Mitterrand as a right-wing student activist in prewar Paris, as a faithful officer of the collaborationist Vichy regime in 1942 and as a close friend of Rene Bousquet, a former Vichy official charged with crimes against humanity for ordering roundups of Jews for deportation.

Mitterrand apparently assisted in the research for the book, a development some observers attribute to his desire to defend his wartime activities as he concludes his last term in office.

During the television interview, Mitterrand sought to distance the actions of the Vichy regime from subsequent postwar French governments.

Declaring he was unaware of the anti-Semitic laws imposed by Vichy two years before he served as an official of the regime, he said the actions of the Petain government were attributable to the country's defeat at the hands of the Nazis.

France has no need to apologize for the crimes committed during that period, he added.

"The republic had nothing to do with all that. I do think that France is not responsible," he said. "Those who are accountable for those crimes belong to an active minority who exploited the [French] defeat. Not the republic and not France. I'll never ask for forgiveness in the name of France."

Mitterrand further denied that he had ever been anti-Semitic. He recounted how, in 1936, he had helped a group of young Jews who were being attacked by a mob and how one of the young Jews he helped became a lifelong friend.

"No one has ever found anything anti-Semitic in my deeds. I've always been on this side of the fence," he said.

While supporting Mitterrand's claims regarding his relationship with the Jews, the CRIF's Kahn said the Jewish leadership of France has always disagreed with the French president over the role of Vichy.

"Mitterrand maintains that Vichy is like a parenthesis in French history," Kahn said. "We do not forget that it is the French Assembly who freely voted in favor of full powers to Marshall Philippe Petain, that the French administration served faithfully the Vichy regime.

"I cannot accept to hear now that the French Republic owes no apologies to the victims of this regime," said Kahn.

During the course of the television interview, Mitterrand said he had maintained a long-standing relationship with Bousquet, Vichy's police chief from 1942 to 1944. But Mitterrand said he had no knowledge of Bousquet's wartime activities.

Charged with the deportation of 2,000 Jewish children, Bousquet was killed by a self-styled avenger last June at the age of 82 before he could stand trial.

Mitterrand admitted he had hindered legal proceedings against Bousquet, but said he took the action to "appease the continuous civil war among Frenchmen" over the country's role during World War II.

Here, too, Kahn was critical of the French president.

"It seems hard to believe that the French president had no knowledge of the criminal deeds of this man," he said. "And we deplore that he could maintain ambiguous relations with him for such a long time.

"I was also very surprised to hear that the president of the republic has, in certain circumstances, slowed down legal procedures. I am very attached to democracy and to the principles of separation of powers," said Kahn.

The News in Brief

Engel Named to Scouts Committee

MONTREAL — Canadian Jewish Congress president Irving Abella has announced the appointment of Robert Engel of Toronto as chair of the Jewish Advisory Committee on Scouting and Guiding, a subcommittee of CJC's religious and interreligious affairs committee.

The National Jewish Advisory Committee on Scouting and Guiding publicizes the benefits of scouting and guiding programs for use by Jewish organizations as an educational tool to strengthen Jewish values, a CJC statement says.

Engel has been active in scouting since 1956, when he became assistant cub leader and then scoutmaster in the Beth Hamedrash Hagadol Synagogue in Montreal. He is the recipient of numerous awards from Scouts Canada, and has been a member of the Holocaust Education Committee.

In 1992, an agreement was signed by Abella and Scouts Canada president Bill Wyman to continue the relationship between the two organizations.

Bosnia Seeks Ties With Israel

JERUSALEM — The Bosnian government has notified Israel it intends to establish diplomatic relations by the end of the year. The message was passed on to Jerusalem by Israeli representatives in the United States.

Political sources in Jerusalem placed high importance on the move, mainly because Bosnia has a Muslim majority.

It is hoped here that the establishment of relations with Bosnia will help ties with other Muslim countries.

Bosnia will become the second Muslim country in Europe to have ties with Israel; the first was Albania.

Israel has ties with all states which comprised the former Yugoslavia, except for Croatia. Relations with that country were broken off after President Franjo Tudjman made remarks questioning the Holocaust.

5,000 CIS Jews This Month

JERUSALEM — Some 5,000 immigrants from the Commonwealth of Independent States are to arrive this month on 19 direct charter flights and 58 commercial flights, the Jewish Agency announced last Monday.

The agency scheduled the special flights because of the cancellation of many flights during the Jewish holidays. Since the beginning of the year, 48,553 immigrants have arrived here, 40,925 of them from the CIS.

Guatemalans Receive Threats

JERUSALEM — Guatemalan diplomats in Tel Aviv have received threatening calls from someone described as having "an Arabic-sounding accent," following Guatemala's decision to move its embassy to Jerusalem.

At the same time, Arab emissaries in Guatemala City reportedly protested to the government there against the planned move.

Following the threats, the embassy asked the ministry for police protection for its property.

Last Sunday, Foreign Ministry Director-General Uri Savir sent a cable to the Police inspector-general requesting such a presence, a Ministry spokesman said.

IDF Denies Special Units

JERUSALEM — The Israel Defence Force last week denied as "baseless" published reports that the Army was establishing special units to disperse and evacuate settlers in the Golan Heights and the West Bank.

The Ma'ariv daily said that soldiers would go into action if settlers refused to evacuate their homes under future peace deals in the West Bank, Gaza Strip and Golan Heights.

Before joining the special unit, the paper reported, soldiers were asked whether they had friends or relatives among the more than 115,000 settlers, because senior officers feared regular units might refuse orders to remove settlers, should the need arise.

"The IDF does not examine the political views of the soldiers being drafted, and certainly does not sort out soldiers according to their legitimate political opinions," an IDF spokesman said.

The Army did confirm that the Central Command had established a military police company whose members are specially trained to disperse disturbances in both Jewish and Arab settlements.

Liba'i Meets With VAT

JERUSALEM — There is no guarantee that Palestinian prisoners with "blood on their hands" will not be released as part of some future deal with the PLO, Justice Minister David Liba'i said last Wednesday.

In a meeting with representatives of Victims of Arab Terror International (VAT), Liba'i said he had never ordered the release of any Palestinian prisoner guilty of killing a Jew, and that he had never been asked to do so, according to Ze'ev Rapp, chairman of the Israeli branch of the organization.

However, Rapp added, Liba'i said he could not promise that this would be true in the future.

A spokesman for Liba'i confirmed the minister is sensitive to the idea that people who have committed crimes must be punished, but it is the government that will ultimately set policy.

VAT used the meeting to ask that families of victims be informed if anyone connected with their death or injury has been released.

However, Liba'i said that most of the prisoners, as residents of the territories, were released by order of Defence Minister Yitzhak Rabin, and as such, only the security forces have the full list of names, Itim reported.

Holocaust Bill Passes

BERLIN — Germany's Bundestag, the lower house of Parliament, last week passed a wide-ranging crime bill that includes provisions making it easier to prosecute those who deny the Holocaust happened.

The bill includes a provision increasing the maximum sentence to five years' imprisonment for such an offence, known here as the "Auschwitz Lie."

An initial proposal had called for a three-year prison term, but politicians from the opposition Social Democratic Party pushed for the tougher sentence, which has widespread public support.

Passage of the bill had been delayed because of controversial provisions dealing with whether police and secret service agencies should be allowed to electronically monitor conversations.

The Bundesrat, the upper house of Parliament, is expected to approve the bill.

Neo-Nazis Rally

BONN — The extreme right-wing National Democratic Party held two political rallies last week despite attempts by local authorities to prevent the meetings.

Authorities in Bonn and in the Bavarian city of Erlangen had attempted to prevent the neo-Nazi party from holding the rallies in those cities. But party organizers appealed to the courts, which gave the green light for the meetings.

Only 30 people showed up for the rally in Bonn, while some 100 people participated in the Erlangen rally. In both cases, the demonstrators were outnumbered by the police and leftist protesters.

Meanwhile, some 100 neo-Nazis rampaged through the eastern German town of Jena last Friday, chanting neo-Nazi slogans such as "foreigners out" and "Germany for the Germans."

Zhirinovsky Wins One

MOSCOW — In a sharp slap to the foes of Vladimir Zhirinovsky, a Moscow district court recently ruled that comparing the ultranationalist leader to Adolf Hitler is libelous.

The Tverskoy inter-municipal court, according to the Itar-Tass news service, ruled Sept. 16 that reformist leader Yegor Gaidar and the newspaper Izvestia had libeled the politician when the newspaper published Gaidar's article, "Betting on Rascals."

The article included allegations that Zhirinovsky was a fascist and likened him to Hitler, said Itar-Tass.

The court ordered both Gaidar and Izvestia to pay 500,000 rubles ($217 U.S.) to Zhirinovsky.

Two New War Crimes Cases

NEW YORK — The U.S. Justice Department has filed suits to revoke the citizenship of two men accused of war crimes in Lithuania during World War II.

One of the men, 87-year-old Aleksandras Lileikis of Norwood, Mass., is accused of having been the chief of the Lithuanian version of the Gestapo, which was responsible for particularly brutal atrocities against Jews and others during World War II.

The case cites documents with Lileikis' name ordering the arrest and transport of thousands of Jews to their execution.

The other man charged, Juozas Budreika, a 77-year-old retired cook living in Gulfport, Fla., is accused of participating in Nazi-sponsored acts of persecution while serving in the Lithuanian Schutzmannschaft (Protective Detachment) during World War II.

The case alleges that Budreika, who is also known as Joseph Budreika, joined the Schutzmannschaft in August 1941. It charges he lied about his wartime service when applying to immigrate to the United States in 1958 and when he applied to become a U.S. citizen in 1967.

By RABBI WAYNE ALLEN

A sign outside a particular synagogue once proclaimed: "Avoid the High Holiday rush! Come pray with us today" — no doubt a friendly jibe at those who limit their synagogue attendance to three days each year.

But the message goes farther than that. High Holy Day services are long, the Hebrew is especially difficult, the mood is mainly solemn, and the concepts are often difficult to understand or accept. In addition, the noise is often distracting and the sheer numbers of people make everyone somewhat uncomfortable.

But in the weeks that follow things change. The crowds are gone, the service is shorter and much easier to follow. It is an opportunity to pray, to learn, to be challenged and uplifted.

Consider the fact that over the next several months we will hear and study stories that are as exciting and meaningful as any we could imagine. For example:

On a secret mission to a foreign land, he neatly disguises his intentions. Even after being detected, he miraculously manages to escape with his life and with precious treasure. Setting out to free his family members captured by a cunning enemy, he covers more than 100 miles in a single night. Vastly outnumbered, he attacks in a daring night assault and almost singlehandedly defeats an entire army. He refuses to take any reward and laughs in the face of a petty Middle Eastern monarch who wants to buy his services.

It sounds like the plot of one of those popular current action movies with Arnold Schwartzenegger or Sylvester Stallone. Larger than life heroes take on the bad guys of the world and emerge unscathed, ready to fight again for truth and justice and against all odds. But this is not Hollywood. This is the biblical account of the adventures of Abraham our patriarch.

Yet Abraham also has a tender side, a sentimental side, a melancholy side. He experiences the trauma of separation from his second wife, Hagar, and losing custody of his son, Ishmael. He buries his first wife, Sarah, and becomes a widower. He worries about his eligible bachelor son Isaac and whether, at age forty, he will ever get married. All of this is described in the Torah too.

There are other melodramatic episodes for all the soap opera fans among us; like the Joseph saga: envied, betrayed, falsely accused of adultery by a beautiful woman he spurns, given up for dead yet emerging as a powerful political figure.

The story of Tamar is really the story of many Jewish women today who agonize over the prospect of remaining single while their biological clocks are ticking away without being able to give birth to children in a socially acceptable way.

Dinah and her family confront the terrible consequences of rape. Isaac and Rebecca wonder where they went wrong when their oldest son intermarries. Like her mother-in-law and her mother-in-law before her, Rachel endures the pain of childlessness and explores how she can fulfil her yearnings to become a mother.

All of these real life stories will be read in their entirety and studied and discussed in the synagogue every Shabbat morning for the next two months. Our ancestors' stories are, in fact, our stories. Their worries are our worries, their failures our failures. We ought to appreciate them even more, say our sages, because what we glean from their lives can be helpful in ours.

I invite everyone to join me each Saturday morning for an inspiring Shabbat service and an insightful look at our own successes and failures as reflected in the revealing stories of our Torah.

JDC allocates $1 million to Jews in Buenos Aires

Jewish Telegraphic Agency

NEW YORK — The American Jewish Joint Distribution Committee has allocated $1 million to the Jewish community of Argentina for the profound needs it has incurred since the July 18 terrorist bombing that leveled the Jewish community building in Buenos Aires and killed 99 people.

Of that sum, one-quarter will be paid out in the form of regularly scheduled salaries to the families of those who lost members in the bombing, Milton Wolf, president of the JDC, said in a telephone interview from Buenos Aires.

Announcing the allocation, Wolf said, "In the Jewish tradition you respond to death with life and to darkness with light. This is what we are trying to do with the community. We will help the community to reorganize and to become even stronger than it was before July 18."

Wolf said that two months after the mass explosion shook the community here, emotional and psychological factors are continuing to take a toll on Argentine Jewry, which numbers over 200,000.

The JDC president, who met with a broad spectrum of community leaders, said that security remains tight at Jewish institutions in Argentina.

Heavy security

He said the JDC contingent witnessed heavy security at a Jewish day school they visited as well as at the bomb site itself, where his group said Kaddish for the dead before "the astonished eyes of the heavy police force that is still guarding the site."

Wolf said that $1 million cannot redress the terrible damage wreaked by the bombing, for which no one has been brought to justice, but that this is just the first allocation in an ongoing effort to help the Jews of Buenos Aires.

JDC officials will be working with local community leaders to assess their needs, said Wolf, a former U.S. ambassador to Austria.

"About the only thing that has been determined is that the initial funds will be directed to the dependents of those killed in the explosion, because there is no way for those people to carry on and survive financially without getting some financial assistance," he explained.

The allocation includes $200,000 from donations that came to the JDC "Open Mailbox" and $800,000 of standing JDC funds, Wolf said.

In addition, the JDC has loaned its staff of three in Buenos Aires to try to help the community "restore its strength," Wolf said.

Many Jewish social workers, who worked at the benevolent society known as the AMIA, were killed in the bombing.

Front Line

The wake-up call to reality is loud and painful

By YESHAYAHU ANUG

Many Israelis and presumably also many Jews who live abroad and care about Israel may have regarded the Arab conflict as permanent, or at best, as one that would end only "when the Arabs will be reconciled with Israel's existence."

This is a fatalistic philosophy which exonerated its followers from creative thinking. It has also helped to maintain the siege-mentality here which, though at first sight detrimental to national self-confidence, was also responsible for the colossal military build-up.

True, at times the perception of unlimited military power has led to over-confidence and near disaster, as when the misreading of the regional situation brought about the Yom Kippur war, or, later, abusive deployment during the Lebanese incursion. But the very definition of the Israel Defence Forces tells a lot about this country's mentality and explains its past attitude towards its Arab neighbors.

Israel is, by definition and by self-perception, always on the defensive. Unfortunately this is not how the Arabs see it.

Even now, when complex peace talks are under way, two categories of concerned but otherwise unconnected Israelis distrust the process. There are those who simply do not trust the Arabs, but are politically inactive and are simply waiting "for the Arabs to change." And there are those who actively oppose the present peace process altogether. They dismiss any sign of Arab moderation as bluff and are actively engaged in repeated attempts to topple the Rabin government, which they accuse of endangering Israel's future.

Within this second group, which has no constructive message to offer the public and no alternative blueprint for Israel's future, we find not only the Likud Opposition with its satellites but also the potentially subversive fringes, which regard Likud's leadership as ineffective. In regard to these marginal elements, the until-now forgiving government has most recently adopted a new line. The turning point was the Hebron massacre.

Yeshayahu Anug

The government no longer dismisses Jewish terrorists who want to emulate Goldstein's crime as a small bunch of mad religious fanatics. It is now engaged in a serious effort to identify and neutralize them. In this new political climate not only Likud had to distance itself from those fringes, but also the bulk of settlers in the territories, who don't want to appear identified with them.

At the same time, having initiated the peace process, the government is trying to persuade the public that times have changed, that the conflict must not be eternal, that mistakes were also made by Israel which have exacerbated the conflict, that concessions are now inevitable and that in any case the country is now strong enough to take calculated risks for the sake of eventual peace.

In its battle for public support, which it is determined to win, the government has to contend not only with the continuing Hamas terror, but also with the ineptness of the PLO leadership to effectively contain it. Another complicating factor is the ongoing political strife within the PLO itself, still firmly dominated by Yasser Arafat but whose leadership is now the subject of growing criticism by some of the very initiators and negotiators of the Oslo agreement with Israel. Some of them are now reluctant to participate in the ongoing negotiations because they oppose Arafat's tactics.

Against this it is difficult to conduct the PLO negotiations which, according to the Oslo timetable, should lead to the gradual devolution of certain administrative duties to the Palestinians in the West Bank. Furthermore, elections should be held there rather soon. But indications are that they will probably be postponed not only because of differences with the PLO, who wants to elect a legislative assembly, but because these new developments must lead to major re-deployment of IDF troops in the territories, a prospect that will inevitably heighten the tension within the Jewish settlers' community there. The estimate is that the government will probably opt for a slowdown in the implementation of the PLO accord. This is bound to create severe problems.

If all this is not enough to keep Israel's leadership worried, the future of the Golan Heights has suddenly become the hottest issue on the crowded political agenda. The ambiguity over Yitzhak Rabin's true intentions has been largely dissipated by the new tone of his messages. These are still somewhat coded but sound intolerably clear to the Golan settlers who have supporters within the Labor party. One can describe the complex problem now facing the government in simple terms: It knows there can be no comprehensive regional settlements unless there is tangible progress on the Israeli-Syrian front.

Syria offers insufficiently defined peace in exchange for the restoration of full Syrian sovereignty on the Golan. The government is ready for a substantial withdrawal there, but has not, at least not openly, promised full withdrawal even in exchange for firm security arrangements over which many differences are still to be settled. The alarmed Golan settlers and the pro-Golan lobby are convinced, perhaps prematurely, that the government is already committed to a full, phased-out withdrawal to be completed within three years.

The Israeli leadership wants high-level meetings with the Syrians to persuade public opinion in both countries that full conciliation is desirable and possible, but President Hafez al-Assad, who has started to prepare his public for reconciliation with Israel on his terms, is still reluctant to meet Israelis in the presence of TV cameras. The announced shuttle of U.S. Secretary of State Warren Christopher between Jerusalem and Damascus was postponed either because of the Haitian crisis or because it was not expected to succeed. Instead a team of American officials is in the area busy negotiating and mediating between the two capitals over the details of a settlement.

In Israel, meanwhile, the public is experiencing a hitherto unknown assault on some of its most cherished prejudices. Many sacred cows are being slaughtered by revisionist historians, by the media, but also by some government spokesmen. It remains to be seen whether this "glasnost" offensive, opportune as it may be, will be matched by sound politics here and across the borders.

By NECHEMIA MEYERS

Israelis were gratified to learn from University of California literature professor Robert Alter that "Israeli literature is the most visible foreign one in the United States after that of Latin America, actually more visible than French, German, Italian, Russian or Third World literature."

The onset of significant overseas interest in Israeli authors can be traced to 1966, when the late Shmuel Agnon was awarded the Nobel Prize in Literature, the first (and so far only) Israeli to be so honored.

But, in fact, he was a transitional figure; he began to write while still in Europe and continued, in part, to focus on the European scene even after moving to Israel. More recent authors of note — like Amos Oz, A.B. Yehoshua, Yehuda Amichai, Meir Shalev and David Grossman — are all Israeli-born and Israeli-oriented. The only major contemporary exception is Aharon Appelfeld, a Holocaust survivor who continues to dwell primarily upon events leading up to the Holocaust and on the Holocaust itself.

Translations of those authors are routinely reviewed in The New York Times, The New York Review of Books and other prestigious venues. And while their works don't compete with best-sellers, they nevertheless enjoy respectable overseas sales and all their new books are almost immediately put out, in translation, by leading foreign publishers.

But for every established Israeli author with an overseas audience, there are dozens more who dream of "going international." The body charged with helping them do so is the Institute for the Translation of Hebrew Literature, founded and funded by the government but now run as an independent entity.

Guided by an advisory board of authors, scholars and critics, Institute director Nilli Cohen has excerpts from promising new books translated into various languages and distributed to publishers all over the world. When a particular publisher "bites," the Institute, acting as a literary agent, makes commercial arrangements on behalf of the author. It also subsidizes the publication of anthologies of Hebrew literature —of which there are now 27 in 12 different languages — as well as special "Hebrew language issues" of overseas literary magazines.

"At first," says Ms. Cohen, "we concentrated on material that we thought was important; now, however, we try to promote books that are likely to sell. Also, our target audiences have changed. Whereas we once were aiming almost exclusively at Jewish readers, we now seek wider audiences, and we are finding them. This is clear from the fact that translated Israeli books sell well in many countries — like Germany, France and the Netherlands — where there are relatively few Jews."

Quite apart from the literary works that the Institute translates itself, it has a data base listing no fewer than 30,000 translations of Hebrew literature into foreign languages. So if a publisher in Buenos Aires wants to know what Hebrew works already exist in Spanish, the Institute will immediately be able to tell him.

The United States remains by far the largest market for Israeli literature, but the fastest growing one is in Asia. Japan has long led the way, with translations of Hebrew works being available there for over 20 years. Now, however, China is catching up.

Translators in Bejing (usually working from English texts) have turned out anthologies of poems, prose and kibbutz stories. These anthologies have sold well, perhaps because of the statement which appears on the opening page of each one: "If you don't understand the Jews, you won't understand the world."

Jerusalem academy is country's best-kept secret

By RABBI BERNARD S. RASKAS

The sound of someone practising the piano rises from the ground floor of the school, which is located in a spacious new building opposite the new Biblical Zoo in the Malcha Valley in Jerusalem.

On another floor students are deep in physics class. Close by in a studio bathed in light, still another group is working on sculptures and drawings.

The students come from places throughout Israel — from kibbutzim, moshavim, development towns, Arab villages and the cities — to study at the Israel Arts and Science Academy, which is the best kept secret in Israel.

Even in Jerusalem not many are aware of this educational gem where approximately 183 students, highly motivated with special talents, were chosen for their leadership potential.

At the Israel Arts and Science Academy, students major in one of seven fields: mathematics, physics, biology, chemistry, music, visual arts and computer science. While advancing to the highest possible level in their chosen majors, they also receive a very broad education, including interdisciplinary subjects bridging the arts and sciences.

The school deals with students' individualism by making volunteerism mandatory for all three years rather than one year, as in most Israeli schools. Students help people with developmental delays and autism, and teach Hebrew to immigrant youngsters.

The search for students is a six-month process which begins with newspaper advertisements and letters to school principals, science clubs and directors of other after-school activities. School grades are not asked for, because the kind of youngsters the school is looking for are often problematic in class because they are bored.

The students come from 70 communities around the country, and include 28 new immigrants from the former Soviet Union and 13 Israeli Arabs. This is one of the few schools in the country where religious and secular students study together.

In the summer of 1990, my wife and I attended the opening ceremony of the school. The then United States ambassador, Thomas Pickering, addressed the gathering in Hebrew. His presence gave testimony to the fact that the first three dormitories were built through funds provided by the Agency for International Development. Indeed, many elements of the curricula being developed at the academy have already had an impact on education beyond the borders of Israel.

This past summer we observed a master's class being taught by Isaac Stern and Jaime Lorado. With infinite patience and loving concern these artists were spending their time with one student. They are part of the International Guidance Panel, which includes Nobel Prize winners, historians, and philosophers such as Sir Isaiah Berlin of Oxford University and former president of Israel, Prof. Ephraim Katzir.

The moving spirit behind the enterprise is Bob Asher and his wife Mary Jane, who spend all their time on behalf of the school. Asher shuttles six or seven times a year between the United States and Israel. He works with Raphi Amram, director of the Academy, and the Society for Excellence Through Education.

The students are typical teenagers. Their hair ranges from long to short to shaven, and they mostly wear blue jeans. In the dining room, they are noisy, full of energy, argumentative.

Shoham Levy, one of a dozen science students who are as brilliant in music as in math, majors in both. Like most of the youngsters, he insists, "We're normal kids. We talk about normal things. We gossip. We like to have fun."

But at lunch, he happened to sit with a philosophy teacher, and one of the things they talked about was what makes some composers better than others.

Sayed Nashua, from an Arab village in Galilee, studies physics and biology and, as his community work, chose to spend an afternoon a week as a "big brother" to a child with brain damage.

Shelley Lewis of Rehovot is an art student who works with people with developmental delays for three hours a week. Oren Shriqui, from a northern kibbutz, majors in biology and physics and thinks "political problems are nothing compared to the world's major problems like the environment."

The overlapping of the subject matter sparks some surprises. "One day," recounts Dr. Gluck, head of the science department, "I was trying to play a Mozart piece on my clarinet when one of my physics students came into my office. He told me he plays the saxophone, so we started doing duets together. Now we identify on more than one level."

The discussions that took place in the school after the February 1994 Hebron incident were not only political but also referred to the question of what are the Jewish values regarding the sanctity of life.

Should such topics be discussed only in the political context, or do they have other contexts which are even more important? Do we teach from within a tradition or from without?

Reading about the Exodus experience and the Sinai experience teaches a lot of things: morals and ethics, emotions, what freedom means, love. They can be taught through the story of the Jewish people. It starts with determining who we are and what we are.

Does the school need a credo? A good school is a credo.

If Israel is to survive, it must encourage her population to shine and nurture their most gifted young people who will become the country's future leaders. But to reach their potential, these students need a place like the Israel Arts and Science Academy where their special talents will be nourished.

Bernard S. Raskas is rabbi emeritus of the Temple of Aaron, St. Paul, Minnesota, and distinguished visiting professor of religious studies at Macalester College. He is author of the trilogy, Heart of Wisdom.

The new realities

The United Nations is currently studying proposals to restructure itself. So there is no better time than now to consider the possibility of expanding the permanent membership of the Security Council.

There are five permanent members of the Security Council — the United States, Russia, Britain, France and China. Their presence on the Security Council — which bears the primary responsibility for the maintenance of peace and security — reflects the geo-political realities which existed shortly after World War II, when the UN was established.

There have been significant changes in the world since then. India threw off decades of British tutelage. African countries, notably Nigeria, the most populous nation on that continent, acquired independence. Brazil became the pre-eminent power in Latin America. Japan transformed itself into an economic behemoth. Germany, following reunification after the fall of the Berlin Wall, took its place once more in European politics.

In light of these historic events, isn't it high time for these increasingly influential nations to be admitted into the inner sanctum of the Security Council?

Their inclusion will doubtless precipitate objections. And in some Jewish circles, for obvious reasons, the resistance will be all the greater insofar as Germany is concerned.

In Germany's case, this need not be so. Since the destruction of Nazism, a new, democratic Germany has arisen — a Germany which is an integral and reliable component of the Western alliance, a Germany which has repented for the Holocaust and paid out billions in restitution payments, a Germany which is fighting the spectre of neo-Nazism with more vigor than most of its European neighbors, a Germany which has excellent bilateral relations with Israel, and is now its second largest trading partner after the United States.

No less a personage than Shimon Peres, the Israeli foreign minister, has endorsed permanent German membership in the Security Council. "Germany," he said recently, "should no longer be looked upon from the past, but rather from a view to the future." And three leading Jewish organizations in the United States — the American Jewish Committee, the American Jewish Congress and the Jewish War Veterans — have voiced support for this position.

The complexities of adding new members, including Germany, Japan, and African and South American countries, to the Security Council should not be underestimated. But in our new world order, the irresistible force of reality should be taken into consideration.

Youthful indiscretion

The fact that French president Francois Mitterrand once served the pro-Nazi Vichy regime in France has never been a secret. Biographies about the president which appeared after he took office for the first time in 1981 mentioned this affiliation.

But it is only now, with the publication of Pierre Pean's Une Jeunesse Francaise [A French Youth] that the full details of Mitterrand's wartime alliance with the Vichy have become documented. The new book also contains a hitherto unknown photograph showing Mitterrand meeting with Marshal Henri Petain, the Vichy leader.

Mitterrand, currently suffering from prostate cancer, apparently collaborated fully with the author in reconstructing his association with Vichy. Critics suggest the French president wants to be candid about his youthful support of the Vichy regime, even when it was engaged in promulgating anti-Jewish laws and arranging for the deportation of Jews.

Pean writes that the French president was never an anti-Semite and preferred to ignore the presence of anti-Semites in Vichy and the measures they took to persecute Jews.

In an interview with Le Figaro, Mitterrand indicated that while he had youthful sympathies with the right in France, he never flirted with the extreme rightists such as La Cagoule or the Action Francaise, an openly fascist French group. He also told Le Figaro that he came from a traditional French middle class family that was conservative and patriotic. "But there never was a shadow of anti-Semitism in my family."

Jews are prepared to take President Mitterrand at his word. Since leading his Socialist party to victory in 1981 Mitterrand has been a stalwart friend of Israel and the Jewish people. Under his aegis France reversed the blatantly pro-Arab posture of Valery Giscard d'Estaing. He has not always agreed with every aspect of Israeli foreign policy but has been valued by both Arabs and Israelis as an honest broker.

Mitterrand's youthful indiscretion in working for Vichy cannot be undone. It does, however, recede into the background in light of his subsequent work for the French resistance and, latterly, his more than two decade-long service to France as an advocate of social justice and religious pluralism.

Letters to the Editor

Letters are welcome if they are brief, in English or French, typewritten with lines double spaced, and of interest to our reading public. Readers are cautioned not to make sweeping claims against persons or institutions which they cannot verify, as libel laws are very stringent. We reserve the right to edit and condense letters, which must bear the sender's address, phone number and both handwritten and typed signatures.

ANOTHER VIEW ON HOLY DAYS

I was in Toronto visiting my in-laws and read The CJN. I was very concerned with the article written by Sharon Clark entitled "Holy Days Seen Through The Eyes Of A Cynical Believer."

I respect that the author had some mixed feelings about religion as she did comment about driving to shul and also commented about Hebrew being a foreign language and a language that she ignores 362 days a year. The author has an MBA and is a management consultant and I wonder if she would also accept that business terms are a "foreign language" and just ignore them except for three days of the year.

I believe that the author needs to find out more about her Jewish identity and more about Judaism and Jewish pride. While eating is associated with many festivals, it is not the focus; the focus is supposed to be spirituality and God. I hope the author and the people who read The CJN understand this better than was presented in the article. I also hope that Ms. Clark can find out more about authentic Judaism so it is not foreign to her.

HATEMONGER ERNST ZUNDEL

It cost Canadian taxpayers plenty to prosecute Ernst Zundel a few years ago but he had a good lawyer who found a flaw in our anti-hate laws. So Zundel has carried on his business of spreading pro-Nazi hate propaganda to other countries besides Canada.

He did not see Nazi concentration camps, being too young, but produces so-called "experts" to deny death camps existed.

Schindler's List is a popular movie that even includes survivors in its cast and shows an aspect of the Holocaust in which millions were murdered. Zundel says it is all based on lies. Yet many people vouch for the fact it is tragically true.

Canadian Army veterans actually helped liberate concentration camps years ago and were so horrified at the dead they saw they felt no one would believe what they had seen. Recently on TV, the CBC broadcast The Lucky Ones: Allied Airmen and Buchenwald, which described how Allied prisoners were lodged in this camp and saw the way the Nazi butchered and burnt men, women and children. But Zundel denies it and is free to carry on his pro-Nazi propaganda.

Canada welcomes immigrants and refugees and most settle down as good citizens. We have people of every race, color, religion and opinion, from every country in the world.

Ernst Zundel is a legal resident of Canada but a citizen of Germany, where his propaganda would not be tolerated. Why do we have to tolerate it?

As he is not a citizen, he is now seeking to become one and thus make himself ineligible for deportation. He should not be granted this privilege, but be promptly deported to Germany.

I urge you to suggest readers endorse this request to the Hon. Sergio Marchi, MP, Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, House of Commons, Ottawa, Ont. K1A 0A6. Letters do not need postage. Also, get petitions signed and sent to him and your own local MPs.

RABIN'S RECORD ON PLO

I was distressed to read Bert Raphael's letter to The CJN (August 11). What does he mean when he writes "...Israelis must accept the judgment of their leaders in reaching an accommodation..."? This government was elected on a security ticket. Who can forget Mr. Rabin's famous pre-election speech: "whoever withdraws from the Golan endangers the State of Israel"? Eighty-five per cent of the electorate voted against negotiations with the PLO (a promise contained in the Labor Party manifesto) and the present government only has 56 Jewish votes out of the 120 members of the Knesset and requires the 5 Arab MKs for a majority of one. The capitulation of the government is equivalent to a majority government in Canada deciding to hand over British Columbia to the USA when its election campaign specifically excludes this option! Thus the Israeli people have had democracy swept from under their feet and have every civil right to continue to protest loudly in massive numbers.

Secondly, he writes that to do otherwise (than accept the government position) would generate ". . . a return to unbridled terrorism with the usual consequences of death and destruction." I enclose a list of casualties correct to the beginning of August (there have been three more since then). This number is unprecedented since the war of attrition in the 1970s. In 1991, there were 21 deaths due to terrorism, in 1992 there were 22. These are far too many of course, but nothing has brought about the return of "unbridled terrorism" more than the capitulation to the PLO.

Arafat promised in September 1993 to carry out two things: 1. To stop terrorism and bring those who continue to perpetrate terrorism to justice. 2. To change the PLO covenant.

He has of course carried out neither.

REUBEN SLONIM'S STATUS

I was switching TV channels the other evening when I came across Rabbi Reuben Slonim being interviewed by Tom Harpur on Vision TV.

They were talking about negotiations between the Israeli government and the PLO under Yasser Arafat concerning the future of the West Bank and the Gaza Strip.

After a few minutes I was startled at an announcement that the program I was watching was first broadcast in November 1989.

I was reminded that at that time Rabbi Slonim was vilified by the majority of Toronto's Jewish congregations for daring to suggest that it might be in Israel's best interest for such negotiations to take place.

Now that history has caught up with Rabbi Slonim and the negotiations are actually happening, it would be an appropriate gesture for some Jewish community leader to express regret at the undeserved criticism of Rabbi Reuben Slonim.

MAGEN DAVID ADOM

Lou Seligson's column of Sept. 14 (Montreal edition) contained an unfortunate inaccuracy, causing a great injustice to be done to the memory of Montreal's pioneer Jewish volunteers and philanthropists.

Mr. Seligson erroneously stated that Magen David Adom was established in Palestine in 1939. In fact, it was founded in Montreal in May 1918 to aid volunteers on their way to Palestine to join the ranks of the Jewish Legion.

I was one of those who came from Cuba

By RABBI W. GUNTHER PLAUT

With Cuban refugees occupying the headlines and the U.S. government's policy swaying from one side to the other, I recalled the days when I too was in Cuba and from there reached the United States.

To be sure, it wasn't on one of those flimsy boats that take their tender cargo across the high seas. Mine was a different journey, but the goal was exactly like that of the people about whom we read and whose rafts you see swaying in the waves when you turn on your television sets. When I think back on it, I feel that it was all part of a strange story which marked the high and low points of my life.

In 1935 I was invited to attend the Hebrew Union College in Cincinnati, and the sainted Rabbi Leo Baeck made it possible for me to go. Since I did not know anybody in the United States who would give me an affidavit for immigration, I chose, as did my colleagues, to apply for a student visa. That was readily granted and we set sail for the western shores.

When matters got worse in Germany and it was clear that the regime was there to stay for a long time, we looked around for sponsors who would enable us to apply for permanent status. After I had cleared that particular hurdle I made my formal application to Washington. Since the German quota was still open, I was approved and was informed that if I wanted to become a quota immigrant to the United States I would have to leave the country first and immigrate through a consulate abroad.

Rabbi Plaut

Friends suggested that the easiest way would be to go to Cuba and apply at the consulate there. So my colleague Herman Schaalman (now the rabbi emeritus of Temple Emanuel in Chicago) and I set out for the south on June 10, 1938.

We had purchased a train ticket to Miami and a Pan American flight from there to Havana. In Miami we were to stay with one of our classmates. He had also arranged that we would be put up in Havana by an acquaintance of the family.

In good time we arrived in Miami, stayed overnight and, fortified with the Havana address, set out for Cuba.

So far everything was quite uneventful and the flight was too short to let us enjoy the unusual experience (flying commercial planes was then far above our meagre means). We arrived in Cuba's capital and confirmed our appointment with the American consul for the following day.

Now for our night quarters. Address in hand we set out and eventually — our Spanish being non-existent — found the home, a lovely place located behind a high wall, as was customary with so many homes in the city. We rang the bell and a lady answered. We explained as best we could — her English being almost as good as our Spanish — that we were the ones whom she had expected. However, she was evidently taken by surprise. No, she had not received any letter from Miami advising her of our arrival. She did not know who we were, and did not know anyone in Havana who could vouch for us.

We were dumbstruck. We had no money to stay in Havana. All we had was our ticket back. We tried to convince her that we were honorable persons and that we would be immensely grateful if she could accommodate us nonetheless. She looked at us and then said, "Come in."

I often think back on this moment. There was this lady, who lived alone in that house and took in two young men who were total strangers to her. I don't think we realized fully her enormous generosity (and daring). We made it up to her later.

I am happy to report that all went well. The immigration procedures at the consulate were at this point a mere formality, for everything had been prepared properly, and in the afternoon we were back in Miami.

That was 56 years ago, but when I see Cuban refugees struggling to reach the shores of promise, I think of my own good fortune and my heart goes out to them.

Environmental issues foster cooperation

By MICHAEL SHAPIRO
Jewish Telegraphic Agency

The steady move toward peace in the Middle East has fostered productive cooperation between Israel and its Arab neighbors on environmental issues.

Israel could not devote the time, energy and resources for the environment "when we were allocating a lot of our national budget for the security of Israel," according to Israel Peleg, director-general of the Israeli Ministry of the Environment.

"Now that there is a better atmosphere in the Middle East it is the perfect time for the environment," Peleg told reporters at a recent briefing at the Israeli Embassy in Washington.

One key indication of cooperation on environmental issues is the extent of progress being made at the multilateral talks on the environment.

It is "not surprising" that the multilateral working group on the environment has made more progress than the groups on arms control, refugees and economics and welfare, according to Peleg, who was in Washington to discuss ways to increase cooperation on the environment between Israel and the United States.

"The cliche that the environment and pollution do not know borders is a reality in our region, especially when the borders are so close," he said.

Another indication of cooperation is the venue of the next round of talks. The talks, slated to begin Oct. 24, will be held in Bahrain, an island country in the Persian Gulf.

Although Israel has no diplomatic relations with the government of Bahrain, Israeli officials, headed by Peleg, will attend the talks with their Arab neighbors to continue the progress made on environmental issues during negotiation over the past two years.

Peleg pointed to a recent agreement signed by Israel and Jordan as another example of how cooperation on the environment is moving ahead rapidly in the Middle East.

A week before Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin and King Hussein of Jordan signed the July 25 Washington Declaration ending the 46-year state of war between their two countries, officials from the two countries, meeting in tents straddling the Israeli-Jordanian border, signed an agreement to cooperate in protecting the region's environment.

Peleg and Jordanian negotiators initialed a four-page agreement which has already begun to be implemented, according to Peleg.

"It was very moving to see that it is not only us, but also the Jordanians, that are so eager to go ahead in this peace on the environment," Peleg said.

The agreement, which protects the Gulf of Eilat and Aqaba, the Rift Valley, the Dead Sea and the area from the Red Sea to the Dead Sea, says: "Jordan and Israel acknowledge the importance of the ecology of the region, its high environmental sensitivity and the need to protect the environment and prevent danger and risks for the health and well-being of the region's population."

During his trip to the United States, Peleg met with officials from the Environmental Protection Agency, including Administrator Carol Browner, to discuss the Memorandum of Understanding the United States and Israel have on the environment.

Peleg said he believes that increased cooperation with the EPA will help Israel with its efforts to implement new environmental projects such as air monitoring systems, emission standards and protection of the ozone layer and rivers.

"It is about time to give the MOU higher visibility and more extensive cooperation," he said. "We can learn much more from the American experience than we have so far."

Ami Haretz: the know-it-all teenager

By ALLAN GOULD

Last fall, I invited a young teenager, a bright, alert then-15-year-old named Ami Haretz, to answer your many questions about Jews and Judaism. He was most helpful, even if he didn't always get all of it right. Or even part of it right, if I remember correctly.

Still, Ami, now a strapping 16, remains a Know It All which is invaluable, I feel, for being able to give the best answers to your many thoughtful queries.

And so, once again, I present:

ASK AMI!
starring guest columnist Ami Haretz

Dear Ami: Why do we talk about the three patriarchs — Abraham, Isaac and Jacob — and four matriarchs (Sarah, Rebecca, Rachel and Leah)?
T.S., Richmond Hill

Dear T.S.: You've got me there. Maybe one of them had two wives which is a great idea, when you think about it. I really thought that was illegal; I'd better check into this further.

Dear Ami: Did Balaam's donkey in the Book of Ba-Midbar really talk?
C.N., Cote-St.-Luc

Dear C.N.: I wouldn't know. But when you think about some of the guys who speak every day during Question Period in Parliament, everything is possible, really.

Dear Ami: I am firmly against the use of drugs. Yet I have heard that there are ugly drug references in the Holy Book. Is this true?
E.G., Toronto

Dear E.G.: I had a Hebrew school teacher just before I was bar mitzvahed (and therefore could stop going) who said that some guy named Goliath once got stoned. But whether it was with, or by, David, I really can't recall. I say shame of both of them for this.

Dear Ami: Is it true that there are different kinds of Jews — called Ashkenazim and Sephardim? And if so, why?
Y.S., Markahm

Allan Gould

Dear Y.S.: I think the Ashkenazim are those who have left Montreal and now live in Toronto, and the Sephardim are those who support the UJA. Or maybe it's vice versa. Still, I think that all Jews should be equal, don't you agree?

Dear Ami: I've heard that there is a great controversy over the Law of Return in the State of Israel. What is your opinion?
G.M., Don Mills

Dear G.M.: Let's face it, we need those laws anywhere people live. Why, if we didn't have laws of return, men and women would just hold unto their library books forever. You wouldn't believe how many I still have from my shul library.

Dear Ami: Why is loshen hora so important?
S.R., Thorncliffe

Dear S.R.: I'm not sure, but when I asked my mom, she said newspapers and magazines and TV talk shows would have nothing to put on if it didn't exist. Back in Hebrew school — when I was forced to go — we used to have a great cheer, although I never did find out what it meant: "Loshen Hora! Loshen Hora! Rah! Rah!" We loved to yell that one; it drove the rabbi crazy, for some reason.

Dear Ami: Why is a Jewish divorce called a get?
D.B., Mississauga

Dear D.B.: I have no idea. But it sounds like the husband or the wife just has to look at his or her spouse and yell, "Get!" And then he or she gets going, and that's that. It sure beats all those long, expensive court cases, you've got to admit.

Dear Ami: Why do Orthodox Jews wait six hours after eating meat before they eat milk products, while Conservative Jews often wait only three hours?
G.E., Forest Hill

Dear G.E.: Boy, I didn't know that! Most of the kids I hang around with tell me that you should wait until you at least swallow. I guess that means they're less traditional. Of course, if you're a vegetarian, you don't have to wait very much time at all, right? Unless the veggies are al dente, which Jews usually find impossible to accomplish, according to my dad.

Dear Ami: What's an aliyah?H.P., Montreal
Dear H.P.: I'm pretty sure that it describes someone who is called to the Torah in the State of Israel, who then decides to stay there permanently. But my older sister just informed me that someone who has moved to Toronto from South Africa has obviously made aliyah. Now I'm really confused.

Dear Ami: What is a siddur?J.Z., Willowdale
Dear J.Z.: I can't believe that you don't know that! A siddur is someone who takes care of your kids when you're busy. I make a lot of money from that, and — if you don't mind me making this personal plug in the Canadian Jewish News — I never insist on the customer paying any GST. You can call this newspaper if you want my phone number, so I can be your siddur for the night.

Dear Ami: I hear that something called tzitzit is really important in Judaism. Do you agree?
M.H., Richmond Hill

Dear M.H.: Not really. It's actually a kind of fly, and you almost never encounter it outside of Africa. Boy, you people sometimes ask really strange questions. Next?

Dear Ami: Why do some synagogues have separate seating for men and women?
J.S., Hamilton

Dear J.S.: They do? I didn't know that! Well, I just asked my mom and she just told me — and I quote — "in many synagogues, the women want to get the chance to pray and not be disturbed by their husbands." There. If you don't ask, you'll never learn.

I'd like to thank Ami Haretz for his assistance, once again. It ain't easy to know everything, but when you're a teenager, anything is possible, Toda, Ami. (What? Oh — it means thanks.)

Allan Gould is the author of 20 books, including a major anthology of Canadian comedy, The Great Big Book Of Canadian Humour. His latest, out this fall, is Criminal Acts, a Canadian true crime annual, published by Macmillan. Please G-d, none of them were committed by Jews! I'll have to ask Ami about that.

CORRECTION

In the article, "The Little-Known Transnistria Tragedy Retold" (Sept. 14), The CJN inadvertently omitted to identify author Baruch Cohen as senior research associate with the Canadian Institute for Jewish Research in Montreal and a docent and speaker for the Montreal Memorial Holocaust Centre.

In Bonn, Sheldon Kirshner interviews the highest-ranking politician of Jewish faith in Germany since the 1920s.

By SHELDON KIRSHNER

Gregor Gysi made history on Dec. 9, 1989, when he was acclaimed the sixth chairman of the East German Communist party, which has since been renamed the Socialist Unity party and, more latterly, the Party of Democratic Socialism (PDS).

Gysi, now 46, thus became the first person of Jewish descent since Walther Rathenau — a foreign minister of the Weimar Republic who was assassinated in 1923 by a Nazi zealot — to hold such an exalted political position in this country.

Today, Gysi is the parliamentary leader of the PDS, which has 130,000 members and is the largest party in eastern Germany. It holds 15 seats in the Bundestag — the German parliament — and hopes to increase its share in the Oct. 16 national election.

Last June, the PDS was shut out of the European Parliament by a whisker. But it won a greater percentage of the seats — 4.7 per cent — than pundits had predicted. And later that month the PDS fared exceedingly well in municipal elections, taking 40 per cent of the vote in what was East Berlin — the capital of now-defunct East Germany — and winning the mayoralty of Hoyerswerda, a town where a serious anti-foreigner riot broke out in 1991.

A bespectacled, balding man who has a reputation for intellectual brilliance, and is often seen on television expounding his views, Gysi took charge of the party at a time when the collapse of Communist authority in East Germany was well advanced.

Succeeding the lacklustre apparatchik Egon Krenz, Gysi was known as an energetic and articulate reformer who wanted to break with the party's Stalinist past. He was associated with New Forum, the biggest of the opposition groups which emerged in the late 1980s.

Gysi, who identifies with the left-wing faction of Britain's Labor party, believes that the East German leadership should have emulated Mikhail Gorbachev and pushed through major reforms to reinvent itself as a democratic Socialist party.

Unlike some politicians from eastern Germany, he does not demonize the former Communist regime there, and indeed, he respects its achievements — the establishment of a comprehensive social security safety net, the formation of a well-developed educational system, and the virtual abolition of unemployment and poverty.

Gysi had placed enormous stock in the regime's ability to shuck off its totalitarian characteristics, calling on its geriatric and ossified leaders to democratize the party, crack down on corruption and abuses of power, permit a measure of capitalism and allow unrestricted freedom of speech and assembly.

But finally, he said, he was forced to the conclusion that the Communist party was incapable of renewing itself.

Gysi was born in Berlin, and although his mother, Irene Lessing, was a Christian, he considers himself culturally, though not religiously, Jewish.

While not a registered member of the East German Jewish community, Gysi — who's divorced and the father of two sons — showed an interest in its activities.

He studied law at Humboldt University, and joined the Communist party in 1967.

In a sense, he was a child of the party. His father Claus — the son of a physician who fled Germany in the wake of the Nazi takeover — was a top-level official. Though not a member of the ruling Politburo or the Central Committee, the elder Gysi served as culture minister, ambassador to Italy and, in the 1980s, state secretary for church affairs.

Gregor Gysi has a reputation for brilliance

Gysi doubts whether his career was adversely affected by his defence of such prominent dissidents as Rudolf Bahro (who was expelled) and Barbel Bohley (who was expelled and then allowed to return). Except in one instance, he tolerated his son's foray into dissidence.

As state secretary for church affairs, Gysi's father let East Germany's minuscule Jewish community hire a rabbi from abroad; convinced party leader Erich Honecker to consider giving victims of Nazism reparation payments; played a role in the renovation of Berlin's bombed-out New Synagogue on Oranienburger Strasse; and personally arranged the national ceremony marking the 50th anniversary of Kristallnacht.

As well, he urged Honecker to establish diplomatic relations with Israel, telling him that his goal of improving relations with the Diaspora would flounder unless East Germany recognized the Jewish state.

The elder Gysi was anything but a Zionist, and he regretted that Israel was, as his son put it, "an instrument of U.S. foreign policy." Yet he felt that the Jewish people, after 2,000 years of persecution, were entitled to a land of their own.

"And he always reminded me that Israel was founded with the recognition of the Soviet Union."

According to Gysi, East Germany would have forged official links with Israel had it not been swallowed up by West Germany in 1990. In his first speech as party leader in December 1989, he called on East Germany to recognize Israel. He regrets that East Germany slavishly followed the Soviet Union's lead after Moscow severed diplomatic ties with Israel in 1967.

Shortly after his election as PDS chair, Gysi led a delegation to Israel, meeting with Labor party leaders, including Shimon Peres, and representatives of the Likud, the Communist party and trade unions. Not long afterward, he conferred with PLO chieftain Yasser Arafat in Tunis.

Gysi welcomed last year's rapprochement between Israel and the PLO. And while he supports the creation of a Palestinian state in the territories, he thinks that an eventual PLO-Jordanian confederation would be most feasible.

With regard to broader foreign policy issues, he believes that Germany should cease exporting arms and stay clear of military entanglements abroad. Furthermore, NATO should be dissolved and replaced with a European security and cooperation system.

Turning to domestic affairs, Gysi charged that Bonn's post-unification policies have produced a socio-political crisis in eastern Germany.

If he had his way, he would nationalize banks and the armaments industry.

Reflecting on the upsurge of neo-Nazi violence in Germany, Gysi recommends the strict prosecution of all forms of right-wing extremism, racism and anti-Semitism.

Foreigners should have the right to acquire German citizenship without relinquishing their original nationality, he observed. And refugees fleeing political, religious or ethnic persecution should not be turned away by Germany.

To enhance its appeal at the polls, the PDS has opened its ranks to such independent candidates as Stefan Heym, who was widely considered the most notable dissident novelist in the former East Germany.

Heym, a Jew, was born in Chemnitz, leaving Germany with the rise of Nazism. He emigrated to the United States, but left out of protest against U.S. policies in Korea. In 1952, he settled in East Germany, but as a maverick, he did not endear himself to the government.

Books that take a reader beyond the headlines...

A severe and prolonged drought in the 1980s prompted Israeli politicians to wonder whether Israel needed to import water.

But as Stephen Lonergan and David Brooks argue in The Economic, Ecological and Geopolitical Dimensions of Water in Israel (Centre for Sustainable Regional Development, University of Victoria, no price listed), Israel has been facing a water scarcity since the mid-1970s.

In this thoughtful monograph, the authors thoroughly analyse the problem and offer recommendations to alleviate it. Lonergan, an associate professor of geography at the University of Victoria, is an advisor to the Canadian Working Group on water issues at the Middle East peace negotiations. Brooks is director of the environmental and technology program at the International Development and Research Centre in Ottawa.

Insufficient attention is invariably paid to Israel's economy. All too often, it is pre-empted by diplomatic events, terrorism and war.

However, in The Economy of Modern Israel (University of Chicago Press, $34.95), Assaf Razin and Efraim Sadka, both of Tel Aviv University, apply their erudition to such issues as employment, inflation, interest rates, debt, taxes, deregulation and privatization. The pair also examine the economic consequences of the Palestinian uprising (intifadah) on Israel and the territories.

Israeli economy

Not skimping on scope, Melman plumbs Israel's history to get a handle on such diverse topics as Zionism, aliyah, kibbutzim, Sephardim, the kulturkampf, Israeli Arabs and consumerism. An informative and provocative book.

Before Theodor Herzl appeared on the scene, Ahad Ha'am (Asher Ginzberg, 1856-1927) was one of the leading voices of Jewish nationalism. Ahad Ha'am was a model Hebrew essayist who addressed controversial issues like clericalism in Jewish public life and Palestinian Arabs.

Steven Zipperstein of Stanford University paints a multilayered picture of this complex theorist in Elusive Prophet (University of California Press, $35 US). An intriguing story.

If, as some say, Israel's 1993 agreement with the PLO has sown the seeds of a Palestinian state, then the relevancy of A Two-State Solution in the Middle East: Prospects and Possibilities (Carnegie Mellon University Press, $12.95) is all the more apparent.

In 1989, a conference on this contentious topic took place at Carnegie Mellon University in Pittsburg and brought together Israeli, Arab and American scholars, diplomats and officials. This stimulating volume is the result of their discussions. The editors are Baruch Fischhoff, Kenneth Kotovsky, Hussain Tuma and Jacobo Bielak.

Stephen Langfur, an American immigrant living in Jerusalem, refused to serve when his army reserve unit was called up to guard a settlement on the West Bank. He was sentenced to prison in an army camp. Confession From A Jericho Jail (Grove Weidenfeld, $21.95 US) is a brooding statement of conscience from a sensitive man trying to come to grips with suffering on both sides of the Arab-Israeli conflict.

As a U.S. congressman, Paul Findley was one of Israel's most persistent critics. In Deliberate Deceptions (Fitzhenry & Whiteside, $18), he sharply questions assumptions about Israel generally taken for granted by many people. The focus is on Israel's relationship with the United States, but topics like the 1948 War of Independence, Israel's nuclear arsenal and the peace process are scrutinized as well. This is an inconsistent work because Findley is inclined to set up straw men and knock them down. Yet sometimes, he hits the mark.

For years, Lebanon has been a battlefield, the hapless victim of Israeli, Syrian and Palestinian policies. In Pity the Nation (Oxford University Press, $22.95), British correspondent Robert Fisk takes a searching look at a country which has been traumatized by outsiders.

By AMY SATTIN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Chalk it up to great art.

An intimate evening with impressionist and early modern masterpieces proved impossible to resist for 820 supporters of the Israel Cancer Research Fund (ICRF), who recently paid $125 each to view the Barnes Exhibit far from the madding crowds.

That and a good cause. The Sept. 18 gala raised approximately $90,000 for the fund, which supports 106 cancer research projects in Israel.

The gala also guaranteed guests exclusive access to the 83 works — by Renoir, Matisse, Cezanne, Soutine, Picasso, Modigliani and van Gogh — that make up the exhibit, at the Art Gallery of Ontario until Dec. 31.

For many, the evening began in the gallery's Walker Court, munching on a light supper while awaiting their turn upstairs. Viewings were supposedly timed for an hour, but patrons chose to linger.

The works glow against the soft peach walls. In one, Henri Rousseau's Unpleasant Surprise (1901), a hunter aims at a bear threatening a bathing woman. The bear's claws have the same luminescence as the bather's naked flesh.

Sandra Ainsely whispered that she and husband Mort are returning later in the week for another private Barnes showing. They will go a third time with their three sons, aged 16, 20 and 23. "Whether they want to come or not, this is something they should see," she said.

The ICRF evening was the first private viewing of the newly-opened exhibit and the only one organized by a Jewish charity, said AGO spokeswoman Elizabeth Addison.

Of the 22 private evenings booked, Addison said all but seven have been reserved for companies like Dominion Securities and Mercedes-Benz at $30,000 a pop. Charity events are $25,000, not including costs.

Gala planners Gloria Lepofsky and Carole Herman Zucker knew they had scored a coup. They also knew not to bother competing with the lavish preview party for 1,700 hosted earlier that week by investment managers Gluskin Sheff. ICRF guests happily made do with chicken- and salmon-stuffed mandarin pancakes, although some were overheard pining for the rack of lamb and chocolate-dipped gooseberries of the Gluskin Sheff evening.

ICRF president Martin Dover beamed at the turnout, which was deliberately kept down from the 1,200-person capacity "so that guests aren't crowded and have more time to spend viewing the paintings."

The ICRF has offices in Montreal, New York, Palm Beach and Washington, D.C. The Toronto office has raised over $6 million in its 13 years for research into bone marrow transplantation, radiation therapy and tumor growth.

Dr. Alan Bernstein, director of Mount Sinai Hospital's research department, was recently named head of the ICRF's 25-member grant review board. Most grants are between $18,000 and $30,000 (US).

Back downstairs for dessert, served in the stoney Tanenbaum sculpture atrium. Two guests are disappointed to hear a photographer has run out of film. Seems everyone wants to be in the picture, or at least standing in front of those framed in gold and hung on a gallery wall.

Anti-hate forum planned

TORONTO — The Town of Markham and the Ontario Anti-Racism Secretariat are sponsoring a one-day community forum on confronting hate and affirming diversity.

The forum will take place on Sunday, Oct. 2 from 8.30 a.m. to 5 p.m. at the Markham Civic Centre, at the corner of Highway 7 and Warden Avenue.

The program is aimed at providing members of the public, including representatives of racial, ethnic and faith communities, with information on hate groups and practical ways to confront them.

A highlight of the event will be a panel discussion on "developing a community model to respond to hate group activities." The panelists include Mark Sandler, senior legal counsel for B'nai Brith's League for Human Rights and Bill Dunphy, a journalist with the Toronto Sun who broke the story revealing the alleged ties between the Canadian Security Intelligence Service and the white supremacist Heritage Front.

Jewish teens return from study, travel in Israel

TORONTO — Twenty-six Jewish teenagers living in small Ontario communities recently returned home from Israel exhilarated by five weeks of study and travel.

The Israel trip is the final stage in the three-year high school outreach program run by Canadian Jewish Congress, Ontario region. The program seeks to strengthen Jewish identity and ensure continuity in the smaller Jewish communities, said coordinator Randie Cartman.

There are over 30 smaller Jewish communities in the province, ranging in size from one to 750 families.

Students in the outreach project learn from Congress material and periodic visits. Twice yearly, the youngsters come together for group study.

Barrie resident Deborah Scharf, 16, said the Israel trip gave her "a pretty solid base of knowledge of the roots of Judaism, and a better understanding of politics and Middle East peace talks." Her meetings with Israel Arabs also helped "kill stereotypes I had had before the trip."

For 17-year-old Caterina Carpino of Sudbury, the most meaningful moment of the trip was the first Shabbat at the Kotel. "When the Shabbat siren went off, we were looking down on the Wall and the various groups at prayer there," she said. "I will always remember the sun setting over the Wall, the sounds of Shabbat services, and the smells of Shabbat cooking."

Caterina was one of the teenagers who also especially enjoyed the four days in Gadna, a basic training army program for teenagers from abroad. "I would not have any idea of what it is like to be an Israeli teenager if I had not spent time in this program," she said.

Jacob Gross-Sobol, 14, of Guelph particularly appreciated time spent at Sde Boker learning about and experiencing life in the Negev Desert. "These five weeks really gave me an understanding of my Jewish identity."

Amy Malowitz, 17, of Windsor found Israel "a land of contrasts. I was amazed just how different many Israeli teenagers are from each other. Some are into fashion while many others are into religion."

Amy and others thanked Congress staffers like Susan Jackson, director of community services and youth activities, "for preparing us so well in order that we gain insights during our visit."

Jackson and Cartman escorted the teens to Israel, along with a Jewish Agency counsellor and a medic. The trip was supported in part by the United Israel Appeal of Canada.

The students stayed in Jerusalem, Kibbutz Ein Tzurim, Tiberias, Sde Boker Field School in the Negev, Eilat, and the military base.

To mark their visit, the Ontario youngsters planted trees in a Jewish National Fund forest outside the Jerusalem.

Some of the teens who visited Israel pose in front of the Kotel in Jerusalem. From left Danielle Sperling, Sarah White, Caterina Carpino, program coordinator Randie Cartman and Deborah Kon.

*Jewish Values and Ethics
*Bible and Rabbinical Literature
*Current Events
*Zionism and Israel - Land of our Heritage
*Canadian Jewish History
*Holocaust and Genocide
*History of the Jewish Experience
*How the Hebrew Language Grew

There will be two weekend Kalloth (outside of Toronto) each and every year of the program. At the end of the three years study all students will be participating in a six weeks guided study tour in Israel.

SPACE IS LIMITED - STUDY PROGRAM BEGINS SUN., OCT. 16.

Or Chaim Kollel Program will allow for self study

By LEILA SPEISMAN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO —Toronto's adult education scene will be augmented this fall with the inauguration of The Or Chaim Kollel Program.

Rabbi Jay Kelman, an accountant who received smicha from Yeshiva University, is one of the founders. He explained the kollel is meant to provide classes for the entire community on an "intellectual level."

"All levels will be encouraged," Rabbi Kelman said.

The kollel's original focus was on graduates of Or Chaim Yeshiva and Ulpanot Orot Girls School, who are now in university but want to continue studying Torah.

A brochure announcing the new program promises that "the program will provide a place for self study as well as a range of shiurim to be given by high-calibre educators from within our community."

The first session will begin the week of Oct. 9, with a lecture at Or Chaim by Rabbi Binyamin Tabory, rosh yeshivah of Or Chaim Yeshiva and Ulpanat Orot Girls' School from 1975 to 1979, and now of Yeshivat Har Etzion in Israel. He will be speaking on Talmud Torah: Individual and Communal Responsibility.

Open to men, women

Rabbi Shlomo Brown, Ulpanat Orot Jewish studies principal, will teach a class in Hebrew for women at Ulpana, 45 Canyon Ave. Entitled MiShoftim Le Meluchah, it will deal with the transition from the rule of the Judges to that of the Kings.

The rest of the courses are open to men and women. They will be offered at Or Chaim Yeshiva, 159 Almore Ave.

Noted lecturer and teacher Rabbi Bezalel Safran, who also earned his PhD in Jewish intellectual history from Harvard University, will teach the philosophies of Maimonides.

Popular teacher Rabbi Yitzchak Feigenbaum — the rousing standing ovation he received from the graduating class of Or Chaim and Ulpanat Orot is still a topic of some note in the community — will be giving a shiur in Chumash.

Rabbi Kelman will discuss current topics in Halachah, as well as continuing an ongoing Sunday morning shiur on the laws of Shabbat.

Wednesday evenings will be devoted to chevruta learning, where individuals can be paired with other students in the traditional style of Talmud study. There will also be a short lecture given by speakers from the community.

The study hall of Or Chaim will be open every evening for study, and Or Chaim staff will be available to answer questions.

For more information, or to register, contact Rabbi Kelman at (416) 630-6772.

Fackenheim slams peace deal with PLO

By ROSE TOGMAN HEILBRONN
Special to The CJN

TORONTO — Renowned philosopher Emil Fackenheim dropped his gloves in a savage condemnation of the Israeli government's new relationship with the Palestine Liberation Organization.

In a Sept. 11 speech at Shaarei Shomayim Synagogue, Fackenheim said concessions made to the PLO by Yitzhak Rabin's government are "profoundly dangerous" and weaken Israel.

While not in military peril, Israel is in extreme political danger, Fackenheim told more than 500 supportive listeners.

After the Oslo Accord and "the notorious handshake," he said some thought this was a great messianic moment, but the PLO Covenant is still dedicated to Israel's destruction.

The speech, titled the Zionist Imperative Today, was sponsored by the Toronto Zionist Council, Shaarei Shomayim's Adult Education Committee and Herut-Likud.

Following a distinguished career at the University of Toronto, Fackenheim made aliyah with his wife in 1983. He teaches Jewish philosophy at the Hebrew University in Jerusalem.

The world is still basically hostile to Israel, he warned, a hostility which began with the now-repealed UN declaration that Zionism equals racism, and which worsened after the Yom Kippur War. "The world could tolerate Jews only as long as they are victims," he fumed.

Recalling our sages' dictum that the Jewish people, if not united, court disaster, Fackenheim lamented the division between nationalists and peaceniks in Israel. "It is a slander to say that any soldier enjoyed hurting Palestinian children," he said, emphasizing each word.

Fackenheim outlined the four pillars of Zionism as the land, the State, the Law of Return and Jerusalem. He said all are threatened.

He questioned offering Syria the Golan Heights, and raised other disturbing questions: Does Rabin's cabinet speak with one voice? Who speaks for Israel?

The most painful question he raised was the one about Jerusalem. He told his audience he worries that PLO leader Yasser Arafat will misinterpret the Israeli government's pledge to preserve Muslim holy sites in the city. The Al-Aksa Mosque, he reminded listeners, is on our Temple Mount.

'Israelis no longer trust government'

"Israelis no longer trust their government," he concluded. "I don't know anyone in Jerusalem who is not confused or disturbed."

He pointed to danger from Hamas, which endangers the land from within, and from members of the Israeli intelligentsia clamoring to sacrifice land for peace.

Fackenheim told his audience they should not feel bad for criticizing the Rabin government since it does not mean they are against peace. "Even Auschwitz could not destroy our hope for Jerusalem," he said.

Hadassah-WIZO to open Women for Women project

By MAURICE LUCOW
CJN Western Correspondent

VANCOUVER — Canadian Hadassah-WIZO's Women for Women project will be launched next month across Canada.

The various events being planned "will pay tribute to the important role played by women in Canadian life," said national president Judy Mandleman, as well as open a campaign to raise funds for distressed women in Israel.

The official project opening is Oct. 6 in Winnipeg, with MP and secretary of state for multiculturalism and the status of women Sheila Finestone as guest speaker.

Pearl McGonigal, the former lieutenant-governor of Manitoba, will be the honoree, with Winnipeg Mayor Susan Thompson and Premier Gary Filmon in attendance. Lt.-Gov. W. Yvon Dumond will host a reception at Government House honoring Canadian Hadassah-WIZO.

On Oct. 2 in Vancouver, a Women for Women brunch honors community leaders Lola Apfelbaum, Bea Libby and Regina Feldman. Guest speaker will be Dr. Hedy Fry, a Vancouver MP and former president of the British Columbia Medical Association.

Mandleman will be guest speaker at a Windsor, Ont., Nahalal luncheon on Oct. 3 and was also the principal speaker at a Women for Women dinner Sept. 22 in Edmonton. She spoke in Victoria on Sept. 25.

On Oct. 3 in Calgary, the Women for Women launch will have as the main speaker Ann McLean, volunteer coordinator for the Calgary Women's Emergency Shelter.

The Cape Breton Council of Hadassah-WIZO will hold a tea honoring Bea LeBlanc, administrator of the Cape Breton Transition House. This is scheduled for Oct. 5 in Sydney, N.S.

Ottawa Hadassah-WIZOs honoree, on Oct. 6, will be Sharon Gray, wife of solicitor general Herb Gray. Sharon Gray is executive director of the Canadian Long Term Care Association, a federation of eight provincial organizations and numerous long term care facilities.

Sheila Finestone

Kingston is having a program on Oct. 11 on Understanding Wife Abuse, presented by Lucille Groll and Marilyn Kogon.

The Women's Trust Foundation for Hamilton, Burlington and District of Hamilton will be honored on Oct. 18 and special guests will include heads of local women's organizations and shelters. Guest speaker is Taube Zeifman of Toronto.

On Oct. 19 a dinner at the International Hotel in Montreal will honor Senator Solange Chaput-Roland. The senator has been very involved in women's issues over the years, says Hadassah-WIZO.

Mandleman said in a message to members that "we hope each of you will become involved in this important and essential project and spread the word to those who are uninformed and tell them that belonging to Hadassah-WIZO will give them great satisfaction and fulfilment in knowing that together we can and do make a difference in the social fabric of Israel."

Extended Family

Licensed staff go through extensive training before they are allowed to direct a funeral at Benjamin's. They must first be thoroughly immersed in our ways and the countless acts that distinguish our services. The discipline they learn is that at a highly sensitive time, no detail may be left to take care of itself.

It is remarkable that every senior director who makes arrangements with families has worked with Benjamin's for at least 18 years. After being with us for so long, they are more than knowledgeable, helpful, comforting professionals. They've become like an extension of the Benjamin family. By all competitive standards, this is an impressive and reassuring qualification.

We are proud of all our directors and the way they uphold our traditions. They are Greg Gates, Pam Head, Phil Belanger, Robert Coddington, Paul Weaver, Larry Scheinman, Lisa Cook and Margo Stevenson.

In the old days, family cared for the body until burial. That's still true at Benjamin's today.

By RON CSILLAG
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Whether by government decree or court order, Ontario's Jewish day schools will be publicly funded by the year 2000, predicts retiring Liberal MPP Greg Sorbara.

Long a visible presence on the Jewish scene and among the chief champions of government funding for independent and religious-based schools despite his own party's waffling, Sorbara says he would prefer to see funding come about voluntarily, but come it will "as we get on with the restructuring of the entire educational system."

The MPP for York Centre, Ontario's largest riding and home to roughly 20,000 Jews in Vaughan and Richmond Hill, won't be running in the next provincial election.

Sorbara, 47, will tend his family's property management and land development business, both here and abroad. Or, as he put it in a recent interview with The CJN: "I'm setting out on a new journey and I don't have a road map."

Not that he needs one. Through his years on the government and opposition benches, Sorbara was among the Grits' brighter lights, having served in five cabinet posts (skills development, colleges and universities, labor, women's issues and consumer and commercial relations), as well as being opposition critic in several areas.

Sorbara was first elected in 1985 in the old riding of York North, later split into York Centre and Markham. The latter is held by another popular figure on the Jewish scene, Tory Don Cousens, who also recently announced he won't be a candidate in the next election.

In February 1992, Sorbara ran for the Liberal leadership, hoping to replace David Peterson. Despite strong support, much of it from the Jewish community, he placed a disappointing third, and that hastened his departure from politics.

"After serving in cabinet, there's only one place to go. I was only really interested in leading the party," he notes, with some wistfulness in his voice. Being in opposition for the last four years, he adds, "has been very frustrating. You can accomplish so very little in opposition... But that's politics. When a party gets 37 per cent of the popular vote, they get power."

But Jewish day school funding is probably the most burning issue on the provincial scene for the Jewish community.

Last July, the Ontario Court of Appeal unanimously rejected public funding for Jewish day schools, as well as the extension of health care benefits to their students. The case is being appealed in the Supreme Court of Canada.

Asked to reconcile his strong views with those of his party, which hemmed and hawed on funding for years, Sorbara doesn't back away.

"The Liberals were equivocal," he concedes. "We were not violently opposed or thoroughly in favor. But while in power, we didn't do anything about the issue, and we're avoiding it now.

"We see the merits of both sides of the issue, in typically Liberal fashion."

Greg Sorbara

But Sorbara, in his own sometimes against-the-current style, sees public funding of Jewish day schools one way or the other within the next six years, saving an average family $100,000 for each child going through the system.

Forced to watch the ever-sinking fortunes of the governing NDP from the sidelines since 1990, Sorbara refuses to kick Premier Bob Rae when he's down.

"The economic problems of the last four years have been somewhat exacerbated by the government. The premier's style has tended to polarize people rather than create consensus.

"I don't give him a failing grade, but a combination of inexperience and idealism has had negative results. Rae's an extremely good communicator but not a good manager."

The social contract — "very poorly handled" — coupled with amendments to Ontario's Labor Relations Act, have made this province "the toughest labor jurisdiction in North America," Sorbara says. "You don't take these steps when the economy is shrinking. It sends the message that you've lost your marbles."

One of the "legacies" the NDP will leave, he feels, is an example of how a party "can campaign on one set of principles and govern on a completely other. Sunday shopping is a good example." (Rae promised a pause day; Sunday hours are now widespread).

In any event, Sorbara sees good economic news to come, for which the NDP will take credit, but for naught. "They won't be wiped off the map," he predicts. "They'll probably parlay the economic recovery into a reasonable number of seats, between 15 and 20. The real battle will be between the Liberals and Tories."

Despite polls showing Liberal Lyn McLeod with a commanding lead as choice for premier, Sorbara gives the two major parties "even odds" of forming the next government.

As for a vote, Sorbara predicts several dates: Either May 25 or June 1; or if Rae extends his mandate to the maximum five years, next Sept. 6 or 7.

Over the years, save for funding, Sorbara has encountered surprisingly few Jewish-specific concerns from his constituents. There "weren't as many calls as you would think" about pro-Nazi publisher Ernst Zundel, for example.

"My sense is that the Jewish community has a well-organized ability to react when the need arises. The calls have not been as much for help as for support.

"That sophisticated response to anti-Semitism needs to be generalized and made part of a system of training and support to assist other vulnerable communities. The Jewish community does it so well, but it's not done as well by the black and South Asian communities."

In the meantime, Sorbara is eager to see Jewish hopefuls step forward and seek to replace him when the nomination is held in February.

WOW provides outlet for widows, widowers

By RUTH SCHWEITZER
Special to The CJN

TORONTO — Louie Salmons, who was 46 when her husband died, was ready to plunge back into life after a year of grieving, only to realize her many married friends no longer seemed as attractive.

"You really need to find someone whose experience is the same, especially if your children are younger," said the mother of two. Her daughter Delia was 10 and her son Elliot was 15 when her husband Martin died four years ago.

Salmons found a network of relatively young Jewish widows and widowers, from 45 to their early 60s, through a CJN classified early last year. The ad was from WOW (Widows and/or Widowers), a group that holds monthly social events and walks in the city.

Salmons said she finds it easier to talk about the loss of her husband with others who have had the same experience, while at the same time enjoying WOW get-togethers. "It's a nice excuse to go out when it's so easy to stay at home."

The events give members a chance to meet new people. So far Salmons has made four new friends who she sees outside of organized events. "This group has been an opportunity to phone up and say 'Do you want to go to a movie?' " she said.

WOW was the brainchild of Beverley Bobkin, a 56-year-old mother of three who lost her husband Manny 10 years ago. She got the idea from American books about grieving, and last winter put an ad in the personals column of a daily newspaper.

Eleven people came out to the first meeting, including Bobkin's friends, Barbara Moll and Myrna Bornstein. The three women got the organization, now 60-members strong, off the ground.

WOW is a social organization for those who have been widowed for at least 18 months, Bobkin stressed, not a grieving group. "I'm not saying they're not grieving — you can grieve for the rest of your life — [but] it's not for people in the initial stages. It's for people who want to move on."

Bobkin said a support system of friends and relatives is strong for widows and widowers in the first year after a spouse's death, but then "they expect you to go on with your life." That can be difficult, she added, when your status has changed and you are no longer part of a coupled world.

Teams of at least three WOW members plan various monthly events. Recently they went bowling and on a trip to the McMichael Gallery. The group has an annual Chanukah party. A night of line dancing is in the works.

Walks, which they try to hold every other Sunday, have taken members to the Leslie Street Spit, the Old Mill and down to the lakeshore in Etobicoke, followed by brunch.

Friendships have blossomed through common interests in opera, art, theatre and antiquing. Most members work, but weekends can be lonely for them, Bobkin said. "It's always nice to have someone to do something with."

She stressed that WOW is not a singles group, so attending an event is pressure-free. "It's coming to have an enjoyable evening — something you normally wouldn't have done because you wouldn't have anyone to do it with."

For more information about WOW call (905) 737-8393.

Future of Bloor JCC to be discussed at meeting

TORONTO — The Bloor Street branch of the Jewish Community Centre (JCC) will hold a community meeting on Thursday, Sept. 29 at 7 p.m. on the future of the facility.

Bernie Ghert, president of the Jewish Federation of Greater Toronto, will address the meeting and answer questions about the role of the Federation in the restructuring plans involving the JCC.

Afterwards, representatives of the Bloor branch will outline plans for fund raising aimed at securing the facility for the downtown community and members.

The public is invited to attend.

Associated students on track

One hundred Grade 6 students at Associated Hebrew Schools' Leslie Street campus in Toronto recently raised $4,000 for cancer research in a six-mile Terry Fox Run organized by the school. Joanna Richler [above] takes a water break in between laps around a nearby track. Most participants collected modest pledges, but Jonathon Bross [right] cashed in with $165. Teacher Omrit Aharoni [top] checks off laps on one student's card, while Josh Freeman [bottom] gets caught in his participation pin. The run was in memory of kindergarten teacher Phyllis Leef, who died of pancreatic cancer in October 1991. More than $135 million has been raised around the world in Terry Fox's name. Montreal's Sephardi community studied

By ELIAS LEVY
CJN Staff Reporter

As a follow-up to CJN coverage of the study entitled Diversity and Continuity: The Demographic Challenges Facing Montreal Jewry, by James Torczyner and Shari Brotman [Sept. 8, Montreal; Sept. 14, Toronto], some additional data about the portion of the study relating to Sephardi Jews in Montreal is included here.

MONTREAL — In the chapter devoted to the Sephardi community of Montreal, the authors conclude that approximately 14,500 to 20,500 Sephardi Jews were living in Montreal in 1991.

The wide divergence in these estimates is primarily a result of the method of calculation used.

By using place of birth as the indicator, the authors conclude that in 1991 the Montreal Sephardi population was about 14,500. However, Torczyner and Brotman are careful to point out that the correlation between place of birth and the Sephardi identity of an individual is not exact.

For example, should one categorize as a Sephardi a child born in Canada or the United States whose parents were born in a North African country? How does one classify children with one Turkish parent and one Austrian one? Are they Sephardim?

On the other hand, when they take mother tongue as a point of reference, Torczyner and Brotman arrive at the conclusion that the Sephardi population in Montreal in 1991 was about 20,500. Again, there is a problem with the methods used. "The great majority of Sephardi Jews in Montreal come from Morocco," they say. "However, Montreal Jews who come from French-speaking countries such as France and Belgium, and whose first language is French, may or may not be Sephardim."

With regard to the age levels of Sephardim, two indicators were used: place of birth and mother tongue. According to the calculations made by the two researchers, 22.7 per cent of Sephardim whose mother tongue is French and 23.7 per cent whose first language is Hebrew were under 14 years of age in 1991. For the overall Jewish community, the average number of persons under 14 years of age in 1991 was 19 per cent.

A similar phenomenon is seen in the elderly. In 1991, 10 per cent of Sephardim whose mother tongue was French were over 65. Among Sephardim aged 65 and over whose first language is Hebrew, the proportion was six per cent. For the overall Jewish community, 22.4 per cent of Montreal Jews were 65 years of age and over in 1991.

Other interesting data on the lifestyles of the members of the Sephardi community are: 10.1 per cent of Montreal Sephardim born in Morocco lived alone in 1991, as compared with 14.1 per cent in the overall Jewish community. The families of Sephardi Jews from Morocco are much larger than in the Ashkenazi community. In 1991, 44 per cent of Moroccan Sephardi families had four or more members, while only 22.1 per cent in the overall community included four or more people.

With reference to the level of education and economic circumstances of the Sephardim of Montreal, the study also presents some significant figures. The indicator used for these estimates was mother tongue.

In 1991, 42 per cent of the Jewish community of Montreal 15 years of age and over were taking post-secondary studies or already held a university degree. Among Sephardim 15 years of age and over whose first language is French, the proportion was only 36 per cent. However, 25 per cent of the overall Montreal Jewish community did not have a high school diploma in 1991. The proportion of Montreal Jews whose first language is French who had not completed high school was 21 per cent.

With regard to the socio-economic status of Montreal Jews, this study reveals that, in 1991, those whose mother tongue is French had lower incomes than the other members of the Jewish community. The income of 9.1 per cent of Montreal Jews was over $75,000. For francophone Jews, the figure was five per cent. Furthermore, 37.8 per cent of francophone Jews had an annual income of less than $10,000 in 1991, as compared with 31.3 per cent in the overall Jewish community.

The figures referring to the poverty which is rampant in the Jewish community of Montreal clearly illustrate the devastating results of the economic recession. In 1991, 25 per cent of Montreal Jews born in Morocco or Israel lived below the poverty line, as compared with 20 per cent in the Jewish community as a whole.

In their conclusions, the two authors of the study pose some questions about the prospects for the future of the Sephardi community of Montreal: "Are the Montreal Jewish communal institutions adequately serving the members of the Sephardi community? How can the Sephardi institutions manage to strengthen their position within the framework of the Montreal Jewish community and in the decision-making process of Jewish institutions?"

Alpha Omega Dental Fraternity honors two of its members

By CAROLYN BLACKMAN
Special to The CJN

TORONTO — More than 450 members of the Toronto chapter of Alpha Omega International Dental Fraternity met at Shaarei Shomayim recently to kick-off the new year and to honor two of their members.

David Cowan received an achievement award and Sam Newman a certificate of merit, in recognition and appreciation for the service they have performed for Alpha Omega.

The Jewish international fraternity, which was begun in Baltimore by a group of University of Maryland students, has about 850 members in Toronto and about 10-12,000 members worldwide.

Roger Spott, president, Alpha Omega International, gave an update of fraternity happenings worldwide and said that with the number of dental students declining each year, fraternity members could expect manpower problems with regards to leadership. He added, however, that this is a transitional period and numbers should pick up again.

He said that he expects to see chapters in Eastern Europe and Russia and reported that a Jewish dentist from Croatia recently received his fraternity pin and that there are two honorary members from Yugoslavia and Bulgaria.

"I expect the next three chapters to be in Hungary; Beersheva, Israel; and Venezuela," he said.

Spott said that there have been funding problems at the Israeli dental schools at University of Tel Aviv and Hebrew University, but Alpha Omega does raise money for those schools. The Bridge the Gap campaign earmarked funds to renovate the building at Hebrew University and construction has already begun.

Next on the president's agenda is a trip to Australia to visit Alpha Omega chapters there. "I would like to see Alpha Omega get involved in humanitarian aid for war-torn countries and I would like to forge alliances with chapters in Australia to perform some of these humanitarian services."

Toronto is the host of the 87th annual week-long Alpha Omega international convention coming up on Dec. 25. The city has been the host four times since 1952, the last time in 1980.

Graham Coughtry's abstract work hangs at Baycrest Centre.

TORONTO — An important Canadian work of art has finally found a home at Baycrest Centre for Geriatric Care.

The large wall mural by renowned Canadian artist Graham Coughtry is a gift from the city of North York. Unofficially titled, The Sun, it was the first commissioned work by Coughtry. The brightly, colored abstract work measures approximately 18 ft. by 8 ft.

Completed in 1957, the mural adorned a curved wall of a lighting showroom at Revere Electric on Victoria Street until 1982. At that time, the building was sold and the new owner made plans to gut the structure — mural and all. However, the building vendors, with the assistance of lawyer Aaron Milrad, an arts expert, worked to save it.

They gave the mural to the city of North York and after it was painstakingly removed and restored, it was put on display at the Civic Centre. Unfortunately, city hall renovations in 1988 left no room to properly display the mural and the city began seeking a suitable new home for it.

After an extensive search, City of North York chose Baycrest which has a long history of appreciating and collecting public art. The walls of the facility feature bright, lively works of art.

The art, all of which has been donated, serves not only to beautify the halls, it also acts as a stimulus for clients and makes them feel like they are in a more home-like setting.

Restoration and installation of the mural at Baycrest was made possible by Harry and Yetta Ungerman and their family who have long been major benefactors of Baycrest.

HU to run lecture series

By FRANCES KRAFT
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Issues and Insights, the lecture series presented by the New Leadership division of Canadian Friends of the Hebrew University, will open its five-part 1994-95 program on Nov. 15 with Thomas Friedman, a two-time Pulitzer Prize winner.

The author of From Beirut To Jerusalem and chief White House correspondent for the New York Times will speak on The Challenge of Peace: An Insightful Account of Middle East Politics Today.

On Dec. 11, Rabbi David Wolpe of the University of Judaism (Los Angeles) will discuss How to Talk to Children (and yourself) about God.

The Jan. 23 session will feature Judaism and Sexual Behavior: a debate on the controversial 1994 Rabbinical Assembly Report on Human Sexuality. Panelists are Rabbi Elliot Dorff, author of the report, and Rabbi David Novak, member of the Union for Traditional Judaism. Rabbi Baruch Frydman-Kohl of Beth Tzedec Congregation will moderate the debate.

Letty Cottin Pogrebin, founding editor of Ms. magazine and author of Deborah, Golda and Me: Being Jewish and Female in America, will speak on Why Feminism is Good for Judaism. Her lecture will be held on March 28.

The series will wind up on May 17 with the world premiere of Expulsion and Memory, a Simcha Jacobovici film on the Conversos of Spain. Jacobovici, a Toronto film-maker and director, will provide commentary on the film.

All Issues and Insights lectures except the final one will take place at Beth Tzedec, 1700 Bathurst Street. The synagogue is a sponsor of the series. Jacobovici's film is scheduled to be shown at the Ontario Science Centre. Lectures start at 7:45 p.m. sharp.

Subscription tickets for the five lectures are on sale now through Canadian Friends of the Hebrew University for $99 ($90 student rate). The series is run on a non-profit basis.

"We tried to figure out how we could cover a broad spectrum of topics that address modern-day, real-life [Jewish] issues," said Toby Deverett, co-chair of the issues and insights committee.

Both Deverett and her co-chair, Kayla Estrin, joined the New Leadership division after attending previous lectures in the series. "I thought they were great, and decided to get involved," said Estrin, a Hebrew University alumna.

The New Leadership division of the Toronto chapter of Canadian Friends of the Hebrew University was established in 1985. Its members range in age from approximately 25 to 40 years old, and their goals include education, fundraising and leadership development.

Stan Urman gets post at Ottawa Va'ad Ha'Ir

By MIRIAM SOBEL
CJN Correspondent

Stan Urman

OTTAWA — After more than 10 years working in the international arena, Stanley Urman has turned his eye to the local scene.

A former national executive director of Canadian Jewish Congress as well as executive director of the Canadian Centre for Global Security, Urman was recently appointed executive director of Ottawa's Jewish Community Council, the Va'ad Ha'Ir.

There hasn't been a dull moment since he started the job in August, Urman says. Among other things, he worked with synagogues and schools to beef up security after this summer's bombings in Argentina and London, and a suspected fire bombing a few weeks ago of Ecole Maimonides, a French immersion day school in Ottawa.

He has already taken steps to examine the community's need to replace its aging Jewish community centre and retirement home. And on the horizon is a complaint to the Canadian Press Council that The Ottawa Citizen falsely accused the Va'ad of pressuring the Ottawa Board of Education to drop The Merchant of Venice from the high school curriculum.

In fact, the Board was asked, and agreed, to move the play from the Grade 9 curriculum to the senior grades because older students were thought to be mature enough to analyze the work's anti-Semitic stereotypes.

Before coming to his new position, Urman was executive director of the Canadian Centre for Global Security, a non-profit organization that promotes peace and security. He has also served as associate director of Jewish affairs for Charles Bronfman at Claridge Inc. in Montreal; executive director of the Canadian Human Rights Foundation; national executive director of Canadian Jewish Congress and part-time political science lecturer at Concordia University.

Urman says he accepted the offer to take the reins at the Jewish Community Council because he wanted to get back to working for Israel and the Jewish community. He has brought with him years of administrative expertise, as well as contacts with Jewish leaders and organizations all over North America and Israel.

In Ottawa, Urman says, he has found a warm community and able leaders.

"One of the things that most impressed me and was a factor in my decision [to take the job] was the quality of the leadership in the Va'ad. They've got people of talent and substance. As a professional that's what you need to get the job done," he says.

Urman replaces Gerry Koffman who returned to Winnipeg, his home town, where he is now director of the combined Jewish Appeal Campaign.

New group for Orthodox students starts in Canada

By LEILA SPEISMAN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Yavneh Olami, a Jerusalem-based organization for Orthodox students, is beginning operations in Canada.

The organization's new director, former Torontonian Rabbi Maury Kelman, made the announcement on a recent visit to Toronto.

A small committee has been formed to set up a structure and plan activities here, composed of young adults who have participated in Yavneh Olami's programs in Jerusalem.

Pam Geist, who is completing her final year at York University, said that the group plans to include Orthodox students attending York University, University of Toronto, Ryerson, and community colleges.

The first program was a Simchas Beis Hashoeva, a traditional Sukkot celebration, co-sponsored by Shaarei Shomayim Congregation. Besides providing the opportunity to meet other observant university students, the function also raised funds for the Israeli MiAs, Geist explained.

They would like to hold Chanukah and Purim programs, start a chesed program, and form a support group for students making aliyah.

"Yavneh Olami has lots of contacts in Israel, so it can really help with jobs and social connections. We want to give emotional support and information."

The committee is also involved with the creation of the Or Chaim Yeshiva Kollel program, which is beginning in early October.

An important element is expected to be chevruta learning, where a less knowledgeable student is paired with a more experienced one, to the benefit, tradition says, of both.

Yavneh wants to "bridge the gap between universities," Geist said, not just institutions in Toronto, but in other cities as well. She said that they are planning Shabbatonim within Toronto, and in conjunction with universities in the United States, such as Columbia.

Input welcomed

She said that the committee welcomes input and suggestions from those interested in taking part.

In Israel, Yavneh Olami targets one-year program students, young Anglo-Saxon olim and observant university students throughout the world.

Geist took part in a recent Summer Internship Program, in which the organization provided job placements in the students' own field of study, giving them Israeli work experience, as well as providing an apartment, shiurim, trips and Shabbatonim, all at a reasonable cost.

For more information, contact Geist, at 633-9582 or Jonah Kruger, (905) 881-6436.

Correction

In the article "Holy Blossom used for Global TV series" (CJN, Sept. 14), it was erroneously reported that Rabbi Larry Pinsker plays himself on the series Ready or Not. In fact, actor Jank Azman plays the role of Rabbi Pinsker.

The article also stated that Dr. Rob Silver is "back-up" cantor at his congregation, when he in fact shares those duties equally with another. We regret any embarrasment this may have caused.

Apotex donates name to North York theatre

By BEN ROSE
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — A 50 cent cup of coffee led to a $1,000,000 gift for the right to have the theatre where Show Boat is playing named for his company, Apotex president Barry Sherman said recently.

"Mayor Mel Lastman invited me to lunch and I turned down the bid because I didn't want to be under any obligation to North York," Sherman said at a glittering dedication ceremony held at the North York Performing Arts Centre (NYPAC).

"But the mayor kept after me and suggested a cup of coffee instead of a lunch and I accepted."

The ceremony to name the Apotex Theatre produced a surprise star, Sherman's wife, Honey, who received an ovation when she was introduced.

"She deserves the credit," Mayor Lastman said, adding that the Sherman donation is the largest single gift so far received toward the cost of the NYPAC.

"I'm often reminded by my wife Marilyn that behind every successful man there is an exhausted woman," said the mayor.

Honey Sherman told The CJN that "if I am the power behind the throne, my husband is the only one who doesn't know. He has no trouble speaking to 8,000 people at a time. I can speak to 8,000 people too, one at a time."

She said no perks come with the $1 million gift and the Shermans will have to pay for tickets to shows in the Apotex Theatre like everyone else.

Sherman said he hesitated at first because, through a foundation, his company sponsors medical and health care research. But in recognition of Apotex's 20th anniversary and its corporate location in North York, he decided to name the theatre.

When it first started in North York, Apotex, which makes generic drugs, employed a staff of two and had 11,000 square feet of space. Today it has 1,500 employees and more than a million square feet in property in North York and Etobicoke, making it the largest independent drug company in Canada.

Jeff Lyons, the master of ceremonies and a member of the NYPAC board, said the Sherman family combines caring and civic pride and noted that they are supporters of the Weizman Institute in Israel, Mount Sinai Hopsital and Baycrest Centre. But Barry Sherman doesn't neglect his family duties, either, taking his brief case to the ski slopes where he works while his children ski, Lyons said.

Mayor Lastman said it was fitting that the theatre which is hosting one of the world's best mega-musicals should be named Apotex.

"Like the theatre itself, Apotex has taken on the world's best and won, just like the city of North York," said Sergio Marchi, federal minister of Citizenship and Immigration.

Garth Drabinsky, head of LIVENT, which operates NYPAC, was introduced by Lyons as the man who has made Toronto number three in the world in live entertainment.

"The NYPAC is now an inherent part of Canada's cultural landscape," said Drabinsky. "A total of 700,000 people have been to see Show Boat or to Recital Hall concerts. It has generated in excess of $1,000,000 in capital funds for the centre."

Show Boat is already in previews on Broadway, he said, and the advance ticket sales have set a record for a musical revival, "notwithstanding a disproportionate amount of attention from the media."

Borodow gets gold at Commonwealth Games

By DAVID LAZARUS
CJN Staff Reporter

MONTREAL — Andy Borodow, officially Canada's best wrestler in his weight class (130-kg), returned from the recent Commonwealth Games in Victoria bearing two souvenirs.

But the other, a sprained right ankle, was the price Borodow paid in a semi-final match-up.

It came after his semi-final opponent "shot in on my legs and I went sprawling."

The injury forced Borodow to call injury time and wrap his ankle. But he said he has competed and won before with a lot worse, such as when he suffered a potentially serious ligament tear in his right knee at the 1992 Canadian Nationals that forced him to withdraw.

The fact that Borodow perservered despite the sprain shows some of his grit. He finished in a respectable fifth place at the 1992 Olympic Games in Barcelona in Greco-Roman (G-R), the style of wrestling that restricts throws and holds to above the waist.

"I usually don't feel too much pain when I'm wrestling, because I'm concentrating," observed Borodow, who seems to have shed some of his well-known shyness as he's matured.

"But I'd rather have won without the injury."

The last few years have had their ups and downs for Borodow.

On the plus side, Borodow went back to his wrestling roots by reconciling with Victor Zilberman after a falling out that lasted two years. Zilberman heads the famed Montreal Wrestling Club (MWC). Zilberman's assistants are Rob Moore, who accompanied Borodow to Victoria, and Garry Kallos, a great veteran Jewish wrestler in his own right.

At the last Maccabiah Games, Borodow triumphed and he now has won a total of four golds, one silver and one bronze at the "Jewish Olympics."

In 1993 and 1994, Borodow also took the Canadian nationals in his weight class in both freestyle and Greco-Roman, and two months ago he also won at a meet for Francophonie nations in Paris.

On the other hand, Borodow, according to Zilberman, has been performing better at Greco-Roman than at freestyle. At the freestyle World Cup in Edmonton, for example, Borodow finished a respectable fifth. But at the worlds in 1993 in Toronto, he ended in 10th spot and he has not subsequently made the world free-style team, Zilberman said.

'I don't think I wrestled well at all'

In his coach's view, even Borodow's performance at Greco-Roman, his true forte, could be more consistent. In Sweden last year, for example, Borodow did not even place in the G-R event.

Borodow himself seems to recognize that not all of his efforts are always up to world class standards. In fact, it was Borodow's apparent lack of self-discipline that played a part in his original falling out with Zilberman.

Borodow says, for example, that while he was "really happy" to have won at Victoria and really enjoyed himself, "I don't think I wrestled well at all. I wasn't as aggressive as I should have been.

"I was expected to win and I think I wouuld have really been disappointed if I hadn't.

"I'd like to see myself get stronger, more conditioned in every single area. That's what every single athlete strives for."

Zilberman is hoping for the same thing, but he does not feel that his protege has yet lived up to that promise, in part due to Borodow's own lack of total commitment and in part due to the two years Zilberman could not guide him.

At this stage of his career, Zilberman says, Borodow is still not yet "in the league" to seriously take on the world's two best wrestlers in the 130-kg. class, American Greco-Roman specialist Bruce Baumgarten, and Alexandre Kareline, the freestyler who beat Borodow in Barcelona.

"Sure, it's nice to win at the Francophonie and the Commonwealth," Zilberman says, "but that's just part of it, the preliminary matches."

Zilberman feels Borodow still has what it takes to live up to his promise, but he has to find the commitment within himself, he says. Zilberman thinks he can.

And Borodow will get his chance. At writing, he was due to leave for the Greco-Roman Worlds in Finland. Next year, he'll go to Argentina for the Pan-Am Games. He says he will have to place among the top three in Argentina or among the top eight at the Worlds, as well as win the Canadian Nationals and Olympic trials, in order to qualify for Atlanta in '96.

Meanwhile, Zilberman is also looking forward to some performances from other Jewish wrestlers in his stable.

Oleg Ladik, a 100-kg. Jewish freestyler from the former Soviet Union, is eligible for world championships and is a great bet to make the Olympic team, Zilberman feels. Ladik has won the Canadian nationals, the Maccabiah and the World Cup, but must next win his Canadian citizenship to compete in Atlanta.

Another Jewish wrestler showing great promise is John Chambers, a 17-year-old graduate of Wagar High School who took second place in the provincial championships and is a "definite candidate for the Maccabiah Games," Zilberman said.

George Reinitz, the head of Jaymar Furniture and a former champion Jewish wrestler himself continues to be the MWC's greatest booster, in terms of morale and financially.

By BILL GLADSTONE
Special to The CJN

TORONTO — Some two decades ago, Rivka Golani was a music student at Ramat-Aviv University in Tel Aviv, specializing in the violin, when she made a decision that would change her life and have significant repercussions on the international music scene.

"I didn't even discuss it with my parents," the fiery-haired Israeli virtuoso recalled recently in Toronto, where she has been living almost since her graduation. "I remember coming to my teacher and telling him I wanted to study the viola — it was the viola or nothing, there could be no discussion.

"He was really surprised because to him I was not big physically, and he was even laughing — he thought that something had happened to me. I said, 'I'm very serious, it's the viola or nothing,' and he gave me one of his violas. I took it and practised 10 to 12 hours a day, like a meshugene, from morning to night."

When Golani steps onto the stage at the North York Performing Arts Centre Oct. 16, the results of her musical labors should be well appreciated, as they are in concert halls around the world. One of only a handful of viola soloists anywhere, she is credited with almost single-handedly popularizing the instrument that conductors and composers had habitually dismissed as a larger, lower-voiced and less elegant cousin to the ubiquitous violin.

"When I made the decision to switch to the viola, I saw it as a very colorful instrument, but traditionally, it was not accepted as a solo instrument," she said. "It was not a bravura instrument. It was slow and low, and was used for elegies and memorial pieces. It's not really vibrant like the violin."

But Golani has changed all that. She has played solo viola with many of the world's finest symphony orchestras, including the Royal Philharmonic Orchestra, the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Israel Philharmonic, and is featured as a soloist on almost two dozen recordings. Incredibly, more than 180 compositions have been written expressly for her, including 22 concertos.

"A German composer heard one of my pieces on the radio, found me, and wrote an unbelievable concert for me, a Holocaust piece," she said. "That is just one example."

Her playing typically receives excellent notices. "Rivka Golani breathes life into every note and phrase, be it Britten, Schumann or Schubert," extolled the Jerusalem Post. The New York Times has described her as "a violist of passion and taste."

Besides music, Golani excelled in math as a teenager, and was considered a precocious genius who could solve complex problems with little difficulty. "I didn't even know how I did it. I used to go to sleep and wake up with the answer. And these were very complicated problems that only a few people in the country could solve."

As well, she is a talented visual artist who paints to relax. Two years ago, she produced a 24-foot-long canvas to stand as the backdrop for a musical performance in England, both on the theme of Jacob's Ladder. She has also produced a series of canvases with British artist Israel Zohar, including some 20 oil paintings of WWII refugees that were stolen in mid-September from a London warehouse. The theft received wide attention in the British press.

But most of her time is spent with the viola, learning new pieces to add to her enormous and constantly growing repertoire. "In the last month I've been working on 10 new pieces, not all necessarily contemporary. Some are baroque, some are romantic, and some are modern pieces that I'm premiering."

Rivka Golani

Is there a Jewish element in the sounds she coaxes from the viola? "My Jewishness is so much in me, it's in my interpretation, of course it comes out. Whatever we [Jewish players] do is an expression of our deepest selves. But we have to be careful, when we work in a certain style like baroque or classical, not to mix in too much of the romantic tendencies that we have.

"Jewish players do have certain shared characteristics. There's a warmth, a certain freedom of expression, an openness, lots of pain, humor and wittiness. This is very much expressed in our art as well as in our music."

Born in the British Mandate of Palestine shortly before the birth of Israel, Golani credits her parents, who made aliyah from Poland before the war, and others of that generation, for providing the inspiring, supportive background she needed to develop artistically. "They were very idealistic people, very clean, very honest, very modest. You don't find many people like that anymore," she said.

"For them, the thing was not to make it, but to live in the country. For the most part, they lived closely with the Arabs as neighbors. All the hatred that we have today — they knew nothing of it . . . . I think there was a certain kind of idealism in Israel in those days, that today we can only cherish."

In conversation, Golani paints a touchingly warm and nostalgic portrait of the Israel of her childhood, and school days. "We'd go to kibbutzim to play concerts, and no one ever thought of money," she recalled. "No one thought of how much he or she would make. It was the event itself that paid us. It was not a commercial event or a commercial world. Take about romanticism! It really was a romantic period, and very idealistic."

Golani's upcoming performance in North York is the beginning of a scheduled musical tour that will take her to England, Holland and Israel — which she tries to visit at least once a year. "I was born there and my heart is there. And there are still certain values there that I don't find anywhere else," she said.

Winnipeg Jewish Theatre set to start eighth season

By MYRON LOVE
CJN Prairie Correspondent

WINNIPEG — The Winnipeg Jewish Theatre is entering its eighth season and looking to follow up on the success of last spring's hit The Diary of Anne Frank with another record-breaking attendance year.

"We are most excited about the number of local actors we are integrating into our productions this year," said WJT publicist Liana Sanders. "This will be the largest number of local actors we have ever used."

The season begins Sept. 29 with a 10-day run of Ivan Menchell's The Cemetery Club. The play about women and friendship stars veteran local actors Doreen Brownstone, Nancy Drake and Cliff Gardner, and television and stage actor Joyce Gordon.

On Dec. 5, the WJT is staging a one-day workshop performance of None Is Too Many by local playwright Joel Greenberg. This is the first of the theatre's annual "play in the works." The production will be the culmination of a two-week effort by local writers and actors.

On March 11 and 12, the WJT is premiering The Always Prayer Shawl by local playwright Sheldon Oberman, based on his recent book of the same name in which a prayer shawl is passed down through many generations in Russia and America. The play, directed by Miriam Bernstein, is set in Winnipeg's north end.

For its final presentation of the 1994-95 season, the WJT is staging the Canadian premiere of Herb Gardner's Tony-nominated Conversations With My Father from April 27 to May 7. The play is a coming-of-age story concerning the son of an immigrant Jewish tavern owner on New York's Lower East Side.

The 1994-95 season will also see the WJT building on its outreach programs. "Not only are we seeking audiences, but we are also seeking interaction and input," said artistic director Kayla Gordon. Last year, over 4,500 students saw The Diary of Anne Frank through the outreach program.

Jewish poetry and songs

By BEN ROSE
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — An unusual evening of Jewish poetry and song takes place Tuesday, Oct. 11 at 7:30 p.m. at Beth Tzedec Congregation.

The evening is sponsored by the Max and Beatrice Wolfe Library. Admission is free.

Adam Fuerstenberg, professor of English at Ryerson Polytechnic University, will speak on major trends in contemporary Canadian Jewish poetry.

The musical portion of the program is to be provided by musicologist Faye Kellerstein, well known for making Yiddish music interesting to young people. She will be accompanied by Jordan Klapman.

Vivian Reiss will read the poetry of Miriam Waddington, Leonard Cohen, Irving Layton, A.M. Klein and Peretz Miransky.

Simchovitch, recipient of I.J. Segal and Toronto Jewish Book Committee awards, will read his latest poems translated from Yiddish and some new Yiddish poems.

EYE ON ARTS

Winners of Jewish Playwriting Contest: A profound family-Holocaust drama and a rich historical drama have shared top honors in this year's Canadian Jewish playwriting contest, sponsored by the Jewish Theatre Committee of Toronto. The plays, This Night the Kapo and Gordin in America, were chosen from 20 entries. As winners, they have been earmarked to received professionally directed staged public readings

This Night the Kapo, by Montrealer Robert Majzels, concerns an inmate's disturbing encounter with a brutal kapo in a Nazi death camp. Gordin in America is a concise theatrical biography of Jacob Gordin, the doyen of Yiddish theatre in New York at the turn of the century. The author, Beth Kaplan of Toronto, is a direct descendent of Gordin's and had access to family records.

Exciting Opportunity for Playwrights: The Jewish Theatre Committee of Toronto invites playwrights to submit works in progress to First Words, a series of monthly readings of plays in development of interest to the Jewish community.

Scheduled for the second Tuesday of each month beginning Oct. 11, First Words offer playwrights the opportunity to showcase their work and receive constructive criticism through a facilitated audience discussion.

"We hope this project will help develop a potential audience for Jewish theatre and also help aspiring playwrights who need to test a work-in-progress," said Ralph Wintrob, committee chair. For more information, contact Florence Marantz, program director, Bloor JCC, 924-6211, or Dorothy Lichtblau, First Words coordinator, 533-4264.

Chanukiah Wins $10,000 Award: Choosing from some 200 submisions from around the world, judges at the Spertus Institute of Jewish Studies in Chicago have awarded a $10,000 first prize to Israeli artist Janet Berg in a competition for exceptional designs on a Chanukah menorah.

Berg's winning design combines glass and metal in a cylindrical design, representative of the miracle of the Temple Menorah. Berg's chanukiah holds vials of oil that burn continuously for eight days. An exhibition displaying the winner and 25 finalists opens Sunday Oct. 2 at the Spertus Museum, 618 South Michigan Ave., Chicago.

Miscellaneous Notes: The Ontario Youth Choir presents the final concert performance of its 1994 tour in Toronto at Grace Church on-the-Hill, 350 Lonsdale Rd., Toronto, Oct. 1, 7.30 p.m. Michael Jones, (416) 363-7488.

The Black Light Theatre of Prague presents Alice in Wonderland, using puppets and black lights and no words, Nov. 1 through 5, Massey Hall, Toronto. Tickets $19 and $16. Box office 60 Simcoe St., (416) 872-4255.

Willowdale Group of Artists holds its annual art show, North York Central Library, 5120 Yonge St., Monday Oct. 3, 6:30 to 9:30.

A show of paintings by Safed-born artist Hannah Sandberg, whose colorful canvases illuminate the Torah, is on view at the Faculty Club Restaurant, S166 Ross Building, York University, Toronto, through Nov. 18. Contact Delwyn Higgens, (416) 739-9357.

Stage Centre Productions presents Witness For The Prosecution, by Agatha Christie, at Fairview Library Theatre, 35 Fairview Mall Dr., Toronto. Playing Thursday, Friday, Saturday and Wednesday to Oct. 8. Adults $15. Reservations, (416) 299-5557.

Gallery One, 121 Scollard St., Toronto, features an exhibiton of new paintings by Joseph Drapell, daily except Sunday 10.30 to 5 p.m. As the gallery's Goldie Konopny and Sharon Fischtein explain: "We all know the Czech emigre writers Milan Kundera and Josef Skvorecky, and now the art of Joseph Drapell is joining them in the international consciousness. We are glad that such considerable acclaim and success have already come to him, but we also know that there is much more ahead."

Spy thriller loosely based on reality

By SHELDON KIRSHNER
CJN Staff Reporter

Although Les Patriotes opens with a disclaimer that it is fictional in nature, nothing could be further from the truth.

Names and dates are changed, but anyone remotely familiar with the Middle East will know better.

Les Patriotes, which was screened recently at the Toronto International Film Festival, is a gripping spy thriller based on two unconnected events — the effort by Israel to sabotage Iraq's nuclear bomb project and the Jonathan Jay Pollard espionage case.

Directed with considerable skill by Eric Rochand, Les Patriotes revolves around a young idealistic Parisian Jew, Ariel Brenner (Yvan Attal), who makes aliyah and joins the Mossad, Israel's foreign intelligence agency.

It begins as Brenner is put through a series of sometimes ludicrous tests to determine his competency for the Mossad. Having proved himself, Brenner is assigned to a special unit responsible for obtaining the blueprints of a nuclear plant being built in an "anti-Israeli country"(Iraq) by France.

Through artful manipulation, Brenner and his team ensnare a married French engineer in a web of sexual blackmail. Having compromised him, they target an Iraqi nuclear scientist. They use an attractive French call girl (Sandrine Kiberlain) to knock him out of commission.

The murder of the Iraqi in a Paris hotel room is not a figment of Rochand's imagination. It actually happened in the late 1970s. In Les Patriotes, the date is moved up by several years.

Be that as it may, the subsequent disappearance and probable death of the prostitute, in which the Mossad is implicated, greatly dismays Brenner. Does the end justify the means?

Pelman, a man of apparently dubious character, offers to supply Israel with classified material about Arab military capabilities. He is closely modeled after Pollard, who is presently serving a life sentence for treason.

Like Pollard, Pelman believes that the United States should be sharing this sensitive information with Israel, its ally. Impressed by Pelman's data, the Mossad makes increasing demands on him and thus endangers his position.

Filmed in Israel, France and the United States, Les Patriotes is a fast-moving, well-acted film which, though 2½-hours long, never bogs down. It raises important questions and tries to answer them without becoming sanctimonious.

Its commercial run in Toronto starts next month.

Rabid right-wing nationalism is growing in Europe and with it neo-Nazism. Amos Gitai, an Israeli film-maker living in France, examines this disturbing phenomenon in The Neo-Fascist Trilogy.

The first segment, In the Valley of the Wupper, dissects a bizarre incident which rocked the German town of Wuppertal on Nov. 12, 1992.

In a bar frequented by skinheads, a pensioner who claimed he was half-Jewish was stomped and beaten to death by two neo-Nazis. They dumped his body in Holland.

Gitai visits Wuppertal — a drab industrial city — and poses seemingly innocuous questions about the case.

"Do you know what happened in the bar?" he asks quite innocently. Most passersby are dimly aware of the cold-blooded murder, but show scant interest or concern.

In the Valley of the Wupper is a sombre portrait of a town gripped to an alarming degree by insomnia and indifference. Unfortunately, the film tends to be ponderous and thus somewhat unappealing.

Part two, entitled In the Name of the Duce, turns on the 1993 municipal election in Naples and the mayoralty campaign of Alessandra Mussolini, the granddaughter of the late Italian dictator.

A bottled-blond former actress, she denies she is a neo-fascist. Moreover, she voices admiration for Israel. But local Jews are not impressed by her disclaimers. They are deeply afraid of the rebirth of fascism, and they suspect that the neo-fascist party she represents is racist.

A good portion of the film is given over to their angst and their bitter memories of the late-fascist period in Italy, when anti-Semitism was state policy.

Regrettably, In the Name of the Duce is largely insipid. The topic deserves better than Gitai's questionable skills.

Singer gets biblical inspiration

By BILL GLADSTONE
Special to The CJN

TORONTO — She begins by reading passages from the Bible, taking notes, studying until she feels herself slipping into a different reality. "Soon I feel myself entering another space, a place not in my everyday life, somewhere completely in my imagination," she says.

"Then I start to get images in my head and I say, 'Okay, now I can paint.' And I go to my jars of paints, and I say, 'Okay, I feel like using blue' ..."

Judy Singer is describing the process by which she painted the set of large, abstract canvases which are currently hanging in the Philip Smith Foyer of the Holy Blossom Temple. Quite appropriately, the title of the exhibition is Paintings Inspired by Scripture.

"So if I start with the blue, then I say, 'Now I need pink.' The canvas builds as I go along, and the whole time, I'm not thinking, I'm feeling. I try to listen to what my inner voice is telling me to do. My brain is not controlling the process, and all the time I'm painting, I'm not in control."

Relying on Biblical and mystical sources, and painting in acrylics, Singer has rendered dozens of large abstract canvases on Biblical themes, such as the painting Ezekiel's Vision II, in which one can discern the angels, the wheels within wheels and the watching eyes that are mentioned in the Bible. The painting, one of Singer's favorites, carries a price-tag as lofty as its theme: $3,800.

Judy Singer

"I was trained classically — I had years of life drawing — but the subject material of abstract art, and what came from the subconscious, was more interesting to me. My inner landscapes were more interesting to me than the outer landscapes."

Singer, who graduated with a Fine Arts degree from York University in 1974, still teaches a course on modernist painting there. Her work has been shown in major galleries across Canada, including the Bonnie Kagan Gallery in Toronto, an early victim of the economic recession.

"I was selling a couple of paintings a month, and then the recession hit and it just stopped," she recalls. "It didn't even gradually decline. It just abruptly stopped."

To make up for the lost income, she joined with her husband, Henry Gotfryd, a landscape architect, in a business endeavor no less transcendental in its own way than her painting. Working in her kitchen, she began baking cakes and pies, selling them to gourmet food shops and hotels.

Today their company, Judy's Country Tarts, rents ovens from a catering company and supplies fresh-fruit baked goods to high-end gourmet food shops like Bruno's and Pusateri's as well as to hotels. Last year, the food section of the Toronto Star named Judy's Country Tarts as the best new pie of the year. All the company's products are kosher and pareve.

Drainie looks at Jerusalem from outsider's perspective

By BILL GLADSTONE
Special to The CJN

TORONTO — Canadian writer Bronwyn Drainie, the wife of a newspaper reporter assigned to the Middle East, returned from Israel earlier this year after living in Jerusalem for two years, and promptly wrote a book capturing her unique perceptions as a self-styled "outsider" to both Jewish and Israeli society.

My Jerusalem: Secular Adventures in the Holy City, published by Doubleday Canada in September ($27.95), "is a domestic view of the Middle East, not one of those interminable books that try to analyse the situation," said Drainie recently in Toronto. "It tries to be a woman's book that tells what it looks like and feels like and smells like to be in such a place. It's meant to be a tactile book."

The eldest daughter of the celebrated Canadian actor John Drainie, about whom she wrote a book-length biography some years ago, Drainie writes a weekly column on Canadian culture for the Globe and Mail. Many bookstores in Toronto are displaying her book prominently, some even alongside copies of the other recent book about Israel by a Canadian author — This Year in Jerusalem, by Mordecai Richler.

Jerusalem, to Drainie, "is such a mind-opening, mind-expanding place, because it's so related to our origins. It's where our civilization began. The whole concept of monotheism, believing in one God, arose out of Judaism. It's the dominant cultural theme of our civilization, and when you go there the importance of Jerusalem hits you in the stomach."

She and her husband and two preteenaged sons lived in Yemin Moshe, an historic neighborhood in the new city that dates from the 1850s. They lived near the Green Line, the former political divide that still delineates Jewish and Arab sections. According to Drainie, it's a beautiful but somewhat dangerous part of town, with cars being torched and similar incidents occurring several times weekly.

"The real problem of Jerusalem is that both sides (Arabs and Jews) see each other through a distorted mirror of fear," she said. "They see each other in terms of stereotypes. But if you're an outsider, you're removed from that."

Readers who dip into her book will find that she is expert at gleaning much social information from casual encounters at the Supersol (a local supermarket) and from seemingly routine procedures like attempting to get a business card published.

As well, she brings an unswervingly contemporary sensibility to experiences such as confronting the Western Wall, becoming annoyed when orthodox Jewish women seem to look at her disapprovingly for wearing slacks, an item of traditional male apparel.

According to Drainie, being a secular Canadian is one of the strengths that allowed her to avoid the prejudices common to Israelis and write an objective report of her experiences. Near the end of her interview, however, she surprises this reporter by casually divulging that she is, in fact, "half-Jewish."

Her mother — the former Claire Wodlinger, now married to retired film mogul Nat Taylor — is Jewish. According to Jewish tradition that would make Bronwyn fully Jewish, but she and her five siblings were apparently raised with no reference to their Jewish heritage. Her book dispenses with her Jewishness as a curious and largely irrelevent detail.

Coincidentally, Drainie met Richler while in Israel, and each author is mentioned in the other's book. "He had been sent out there by the New Yorker to do an article," she related. "He was staying in quarters not far from us in Yemin Moshe. In the end he didn't write the article, but it bloomed into a full-length book."

Cultural community

Drainie said that Richler occasionally accompanied her and her husband, Globe and Mail correspondent Patrick Martin, on outings around Jerusalem. "One day, we took him to watch the Franciscan monks, who were carrying a replica of the cross down the Via Delarosa. We followed the monks for about four stations before we got bored. Mordecai said, 'Where can we go to get a drink around here?' and so we did that instead."

Like Richler, but in her own way, Drainie is well-connected to the country's cultural community. Her book launch party, held recently in a large house in midtown Toronto, drew some of the biggest names in Canadian culture, as well as numerous members of the Jewish community.

Among those present were Irving Abella, president of the Canadian Jewish Congress; Erna Paris, author of The Garden and the Gun, an earlier book about Israel; Paul Michaels of the Canada-Israel Committee; Allan Gottlieb, former Canadian ambassador to Washington and former chairman of the Canada Council; Katherine Ashenburg, features editor of the Globe and Mail; Richard and Sandra Gwyn, political columnist and writer, respectively; Stephen Clarkson and Christine McCall, whose second joint volume on Pierre Trudeau is due for publication soon; and Peter Herrndorf and his wife Eva Czigler, TVO chairman and producer of CBC-TV's Midday, respectively.

BOOKS

By BERNARD BASKIN

Richler's book humorous, intelligent

This Year In Jerusalem, by Mordecai Richler (Random House, $27.50)

The first thing to be said about this easily read book, a mingling of reminiscences about the author's youthful involvement with Zionism, Judaism and his family in Montreal, and reportage of his six-week 1992 visit to Israel, is that it is intelligent, winsomely nostalgic, fitfully informative and humorous.

It is at the same time, however, padded with familiar or superfluous material (brief biographical sketches of Zionist leaders, a resume of Arthur Koestler's novel, Thieves in The Night, a long story from his maternal grandfather's book about the Golem of Prague, etc.), jarringly simplistic and benevolently even-handed about Jewish and Arab aspirations. For the informed reader it provides few new insights about either Israel or the Middle East. One has the feeling that the material, properly condensed and pared down, would have made several fine magazine articles.

Richler admires Jewish accomplishments in Israel but indicates that "much of it was achieved on land where another people, however unambitious, was rooted. Their failure to cultivate their gardens does not justify their displacement by a stiff-necked people turning up with a book saying, 'This is the turf God Almighty promised me and mine thousands of years ago.' "

In expressing his exasperation with an opinionated young Canadian who regards Israelis as colonial oppressors and the Palestinians as innocent victims, Richler reminds him that some six thousand Jews, many of them even younger than he was, had died in an unnecessary war after five Arab armies invaded Israel in 1948.

"The Palestinians had been undone again and again, not by the courage and panache of the Israelis, or by the machinations of international Jewry, but by the mind-boggling stupidity of their own leaders . . . Had they agreed to the UN partition plan in 1947, they would soon be celebrating the 50th anniversary of their own state made up half of Palestine, as it then was, and including the Old City of Jerusalem."

In considering the many contributions that have been made by Jews to all aspects of growth in Jerusalem, he regards the city as a "brilliantly organized panhandler's heaven. The ultimate Schnorrerville. Clothing manufacturers, real-estate mavens, and stock market gaons are flattered with honorary degrees and photo ops with the prime minister. No issue of the Jerusalem Post is complete without its obligatory photographs of a middle-aged American or Canadian couple beaming in front of their gift: a bloodmobile, Talmud study room, tennis school, or intensive cardiac care ambulance."

He is unfair and insensitive when he suggests that non-Jewish leaders are quickly taken to Yad Vashem and the Holocaust Memorial Museum so that the dead may be "brandished as counters for securing favorable loans or trade deals. The six million are invoked as equity."

To former Canadians now residing in Israel, who insist that all Jews should make aliyah because they are hated or unwanted in North America, Richler responds, that Jews have served in "the federal Cabinet, as provincial premiers, leaders of mainstream federal and provincial political parties, chief justices of both the Canadian and Quebec Supreme Courts, and members of Parliament, without provoking riots." Of course, he acknowledges that Jews have had to endure the lunacy of assorted fringe groups.

The book contains interesting accounts of visits to a Palestinian refugee camp, to an Israeli kibbutz and to Kiryat Arba on the West Bank where right-wing settlers are surrounded by a hostile Arab population.

The portions of the book, however, that will be of lasting interest are those that concern growing up in the Montreal of a past era and the colorful characters of the author's youth, some of whom have found a new life in Israel.

The book contains a helpful Hebrew glossary and a selected bibliography.

By BILL GLADSTONE

Deluxe Country Inn in Southern Ontario: Approaching by car along a winding road through the forest, one's first sight of Langdon Hall puts one immediately in mind of Manderley, the British country house from the film Rebecca, or Tara, the southern plantation from Gone With The Wind. Across the vast expanse of lawn, you see the stately red brick mansion, the four great columns and the neatly dormered windows. The house, which has an almost antebellum aspect, appears both grand and incongruous, an architectural mirage surrounded by two hundred acres of its own elegantly restored gardens and grounds.

Langdon Hall sits on a height of land near the southern Ontario hamlet of Blair, near Cambridge, a few minutes drive from Highway 401. The American flag that flutters alongside the Canadian maple leaf above the front door provides an important clue to the provenance of this startling structure, whose history reaches back into the period of American history known as the Gilded Age, roughly 1870 to 1900.

At a time when wealthy American industrialists were building impressive summer homes in the Berkshires, along the Hudson River and on Long Island, members of the Langdon Wilks family — whose relations included the Astors and wealthy U.S. businesswoman Hetty Green — purchased the land in the middle of the last century, and built this country house between 1900 and 1903. The family chose Canada out of an atavistic loyalty to the British crown. Inviting and relaxing, the interior is a delightful marriage of an English country house and the American federal revivalist architectural style.

The main floor of the house offers a sweet circuit of peaceful reading rooms, intimate panelled lounges, meeting rooms and a comfy bar. Painted family portraits stare down from the walls. Tea is served in the Conservatory or on the Veranda, the preferred space for those with no greater ambition than to watch the sinking sun. Each of the guest rooms in the second floor and the attic is furnished differently.

My room was in the Cloisters, an L-shaped row of additional rooms built adjacent to the main house in a similar pleasing style. The room was spacious and contained a comfy loveseat and armchair, writing desk, fireplace, a large firm bed dressed in luxurious soft white linens, a large dressing area with bath and toilet in separate rooms, and a double pair of French doors that lead out onto a patio. Beyond the patio, on a verdant expanse of lawn, several guests were enjoying a genteel game of croquet in the sunny September afternoon.

I toured the grounds in the company of Langdon Hall's owner and manager, Bill Bennett, who established the consortium of investors that purchased the house when it went on the market in 1988. He showed me the lily and goldfish pond, the apple orchard, and a picturesque woods, at the edge of which a tuxedoed groom and white-gowned bride were posing before a photographer and tripod

Bennett, an architect and designer whose previous projects have included the Milcroft Inn and the Windsor Arms Hotel in Toronto, proudly walked me through the rows of assorted leafy vegetables and flowers, in stepped stages of growth, the various species of which I would later recognize in the mixed green salad — with orange and blue flower petals! — that was served to me at dinner. Built onto the side of the house, the restaurant is a wonderful complement to Langdon Hall, whose superb quality comes as no less a surprise than the existence of the house itself.

Situated near golf courses and the drama festival at Stratford, Langdon Hall is open around the calendar; in winter, its hiking trails make good terrain for cross-country skiers. The property is one of only eight establishments in Canada affiliated with Relais & Chateaux, an exclusive international chain of deluxe hostelries. It is roughly one hour's drive from Toronto, 45 minutes from Lester Pearson International Airport. For further information, exact driving directions or reservations, phone 1-800-268-1898, or (519) 740-2100 in Cambridge.

By SHELDON KIRSHNER
CJN Staff Reporter

DRESDEN, Germany — Often called the Florence on the Elbe, this city is a celebration of ethereal architecture and stunning art treasures.

Yet not so long ago, Dresden was a hulk, a smoldering wreck, a casualty of war.

On Feb. 13, 1945, Allied aircraft bombed it, raining down phosphorous and high-explosive bombs on its stately spires.

Dresden was of no real strategic value. It was targeted to crush the morale of the Germans. In the ensuing fire storm, at least 35,000 people were killed. The figure may be far higher, since many eastern Germans had found refuge in Dresden.

The Zwinger, the Renaissance-style palace complex which houses a set of extraordinary museums, is an example of Dresden's rebirth in the postwar period.

Much of this intricate building was heavily damaged, but today the scars are gone and the Zwinger is as beautiful as ever.

Built in the early 18th century by Augustus the Strong, the prince of Saxony, the Zwinger is set off by gardens, fountains and a promenade. On its grounds are the Gallery of the Old Masters, boasting paintings by Rubens, Raphael, Titian, Rembrandt and Vermeer; the History Museum, with its exhibit of ornate weaponry; and the Porcelain Museum, with its outstanding Meissen porcelain collection.

Yet another sight on a visitor's itinerary should be the so-called Green Vault in the Albertinum, a museum which also suffered during the war. Within walking distance of the Zwinger, it's renowned for its silverware, engraved glass, ivory figurines, jewelry, precious stones, amulets, jewel-encrusted clocks and ancient coins.

The Semper Opera House.

Within the same building is an art gallery with paintings by Monet, Renoir, Courbet, Degas, Van Gogh, Gaughin and such German painters as Max Lieberman.

Opern Platz, an impressive square in the centre of the city, is crowned by a huge statue of Johann II, who commissioned the construction ot the Semper Opera House in the mid-19th century.

The Frauenkirche (Church of Our Lady), adjacent to the Hilton Hotel, leaves a jagged impression on the skyline. All but reduced to rubble and left as a memorial to the horrors of war, it was considered the largest Baroque Protestant church in Germany.

Now it is being restored. The restoration is scheduled to be completed in 2006, which coincides with Dresden's 800th anniversary.

After you've "done" Dresden, you should consider short excursions to the Pillnitz Palace and the Sandstone Alps.

The former summer residence of the Saxon kings, the palace is an excellent example of chinoiserie, a form of decorative art inspired by Japanese and Chinese motifs. The grounds are well-maintained and are ideal for a picnic.

The Sandstone Alps, or Saxon Switzerland, consist of bizarre cliffs and rock formations which rise from a densely forested valley. It is a rock climber's paradise.

Walkways and bridges connect the various peaks, offering visitors a panoramic vista of the snaking Elbe and its slow-moving barges.

Bonds honoree lives life 'as a mentsh'

TORONTO — Who says nice guys never come out on top? Just ask Joe Morgan — a successful businessman who survived Majdanek concentration camp and admits today that "sometimes people take advantage of me and I let them."

Joe Morgan

Morgan's habit of living his life as a mentsh is one of the many reasons he is being honored by State of Israel Bonds and B'nai Brith's Raoul Wallenberg/Yorkdale Circle Lodge on Oct. 2 at Beth Emeth Bais Yehuda synagogue.

Morgan's graciousness was nurtured by an adolescence devoted solely to survival as a concentration camp inmate and a slave laborer for the Nazis. "If I live," he vowed then, "I'm going to treat people humanely."

Morgan Mae manages millions of square feet of property across Ontario, acquired over nearly four decades. Morgan's recipe for success is simple human relations. "We get along excellently with people. That's my success."

Morgan was just 13 when the war broke out. By 15, he had already been transported to Majdanek, a camp from which virtually no one emerged alive, where he was assigned to building barracks.

"We worked around the clock," he remembers. "Trains came day and night, night and day. It was the most terrible experience in my life."

By what Morgan describes as "some miracle," he was selected to leave Majdanek to be a laborer at the Skarzjisco ammunitions factory. "I was young but my mind worked like an old person," he recalls.

Morgan's mind told him to survive; this became the main objective of his teenage years, during which he had neither friends nor family. His mother, father, sister and two brothers all perished.

Morgan was not only an adolescent Holocaust survivor but also a teenage groom. He was 19 when he met and married his wife Helen after they were both liberated in 1945. Their wedding was the first traditional ceremony performed in Chenstochova, Poland following the war. The Morgans will be celebrating their 50th wedding anniversary next year.

When the Morgans came to Canada four years later, finding work was easy.

"I got a job the first week as a sweeper, but I didn't sweep for too long. Then I became a shipper, but I didn't ship for too long," said Morgan.

His rise through the hierarchy of the upholstery manufacturer for whom he was working was rapid: from shipper to foreman to purchasing agent.

Morgan was becoming restless. "I wanted to establish myself even if I made less money."

So he bought into the company from which he had been ordering frames, with only a handshake. Eventually he sold the company and acquired another furniture concern.

At the same time, Morgan was busy purchasing property, a talent that he believes to be "a gift from G-d." Thousands of deals later, Morgan is proud of "never going back on my word."

Despite Morgan's confidence and financial success, he's nowhere near retirement. In fact, that's the last thing on his mind. When he's not handling a property problem, Morgan is busy with his three daughters, 10 grandchildren and a list of Jewish causes — among them B'nai Brith, Baycrest, the Canadian Society for Yad Vashem, the Stashiver Young Men's Society and, of course, State of Israel Bonds. Joe and Helen Morgan are veteran Bonds investors.

After a lifetime in which he suffered sorrow and humiliation, witnessed genocide and miraculously rebuilt his life, Morgan's focus is on his family.

BIZ BRIEFS

Fruits And Veggies Push CPI Up

JERUSALEM — The Consumer Price Index jumped 1.1 per cent in August, marking the sixth consecutive month with inflation of one per cent or more.

Central Bureau of Statistics spokesman David Neuman reported that inflation is now estimated to be running at 14.5 per cent annually.

Fruit and vegetable prices jumped ahead of housing prices, contributing 0.4 percentage points to the index, with housing contributing only 0.3 per cent.

Together, they made up nearly two-thirds of the index's rise.

Jonathan Katz, head of the Economic Modeling and Forecasting organization, said the smaller rise in housing prices was good news and was an important sign of lower inflation ahead. He added that he expected that housing prices will increase less than the overall index this month.

Fruit and vegetable prices, on the other hand, surged 9.1 per cent last month, rising 19.7 per cent since the beginning of the year, compared with 19.2 per cent for housing.

* * *

Trade Deficit More Than Doubles

JERUSALEM — The trade deficit more than doubled last month to $920 million, as exports plunged 17.3 per cent and imports surged 14.6 per cent, the Central Bureau of Statistics reported.

Exports fell to $1.081 billion from $1.307 billion in July, while imports rose to $2.001 billion from $1.746 billion.

The drop in exports reflected a sharp fall in industrial exports, which make up nearly three-quarters of total exports. In contrast, large consumer imports and production goods imports pushed imports up.

During the first eight months of the year, the trade gap shot up 29 per cent, as imports rose 14 per cent compared to a moderate 6 per cent increase in exports.

Seasonally adjusted figures for the second third of the year show that exports, excluding diamonds, rose by 2.6 per cent, or at 8 per cent annually, as they did in the previous third.

Imports shrank by 1 per cent, or 2.5 per cent annually, after shooting up by 25 per cent, or 45 per cent annually, in the first third of the year.

Aircraft Deal In The Works

JERUSALEM — U.S. aircraft manufacturer McDonnell Douglas is seeking to sell El Al passenger planes in a package deal with Israel Aircraft Industries (IAI) worth $200 million.

McDonnell Douglas is the Pentagon's largest contractor. Next year the company is to begin delivering its latest airliner.

At a meeting with Rabin, McDonnell is expected to propose an airliner purchase deal in exchange for a contract with IAI to convert old airliners to freighters.

* * *

Cabinet Okays Inflation Fighters

JERUSALEM — The cabinet has approved, in somewhat amended form, a joint Treasury-Bank of Israel plan to fight inflation.

The proposal to tax stock market profits was also approved.

The anti-inflation plan, which had been debated for several sessions and had run into opposition from several ministers, revolves around enabling the government to import fruit and vegetables if the price of local produce rises sharply and impose limitations on ministries' procurement budgets if the overall budget is exceeded.

Free export zone will boost economy, supporters say

Jewish Telegraphic Agency

NEW YORK — Get ready, Israel. The capitalists are coming.

After a two-year struggle, a group of American Jewish business executives have succeeded in obtaining Knesset approval for a free export processing zone, where foreign companies can operate free of Israeli taxation and bureaucracy.

Now, the group — the Israel Export Development Co. Ltd. (IEDC) — is working to sign up tenants.

Access to Israeli workers and isolation from Israeli ministries, the group promises, will create a haven for research and development, financial services and light manufacturing that can compete with similar zones from Ireland to Hong Kong.

The group expects to start building by March 1995, after a few legal and technical hurdles are overcome.

Larry Silverstein, president of IEDC, was just named chairman of the board of directors of the United Jewish Appeal-Federation of New York. His company owns and operates over 10 million square feet of office space.

Among IEDC's shareholders are Laurence Tisch, chair of CBS, and Morton Mandel, Cleveland industrialist and past president of the Council of Jewish Federations.

Sy Syms, chair of the New York-based clothing retailer that bears his name and a vice-president of the IEDC, said the project had two goals: to create jobs for Russian immigrants, and to make money for the investors.

"We said, somewhat jokingly, that this is not charity. We're ugly Americans who happen to be Jewish and like excessive profit. We can give to UJA" if charity were the goal, he said.

Looking back on the efforts to approve the zone, which culminated this summer, Yerushalmi said that "two years is a long time to fight a government bureaucracy.

"But two years to go from an idea thought up by a think tank, to a policy, to a draft bill, to approval by the finance minister and prime minister, to Cabinet approval and passage by the Knesset — two years for this is revolutionary," he said.

The think tank Yerushalmi referred to is the Institute for Advanced Strategic and Political Studies, a Jerusalem-based group headed by Alvin Babushka, a senior fellow at the Hoover Institution of Stanford University.

Wielding a scalpel of free-market economics, the think tank has explained how Israel's milk cartel results in the fact that prices for Israeli cheese are lower in New York than in Tel Aviv, and denounced American loan guarantees as propping up Israeli bureaucracy.

For Babushka, much of the appeal of the free export processing zone lay in its elimination of Israeli bureaucracy, if only from 700 acres in the northern Negev.

If, as Yerushalmi insists, the project succeeds, it could have Israeli bureaucrats on the run.

As now enshrined in Israeli law, companies doing business within the export zone will be exempt from customs, tariffs, foreign currency restrictions and a wide-ranging gamut of economic regulations.

Companies will pay no taxes, except for a flat 15 per cent on profits repatriated out of the zone.

How much will this cost Israel? Yerushalmi insists that it will cost little more than most foreign investments in the country, which are heavily subsidized by the government.

Where the Israeli tax collector will benefit is from the payroll taxes, because workers in the zone will be taxed in the same way as any other Israelis.

For the Israeli legislators who signed on to the idea, Yerushalmi talks of 15,000 people being employed when the zone completes its first stage of development, in about two-and-a-half years.

And he predicts an additional three jobs created outside the zone for each job created inside it.

"That's an enormous benefit" in a country where double-digit unemployment translates to some 150,000 people looking for work, said Yerushalmi.

Already, he said, the company has begun seeking potential construction workers among Russian Jews who have not yet made aliyah to Israel.

And an employment firm, which has been signed up to make available hiring and payroll services to zone tenants, has begun retraining Russian engineers and software developers to meet Western standards.

Yerushalmi believes the quality of the Israeli labor force is a major selling point for the zone.

"It's a work force that is as sharp and as good as in Silicon Valley," said Yerushalmi, referring to the high-tech zone in Northern California, "but much less expensive and less mobile."

For Yerushalmi, the project has ramifications not only for the well-being of Israel, but for that of the American Jewish community as well.

"We've been able to pull a group of men together who have always found it in their hearts and time and pocketbooks to support Israel as a charity case," Yerushalmi said.

Israel's Net External Debt Jumps

JERUSALEM — The country's net external debt jumped 8.9 per cent during the first half of the year to $17.96 billion, as the government borrowed $1 billion in U.S.-guaranteed funds and foreigners increased their deposits in local banks, the Bank of Israel's supervisor of foreign currency reported.

The government's foreign debt increased by $1.11 billion to $21.36 billion mostly as a result of the $1 billion U.S.-backed loan raised in March.

The state's share of the debt continued rising, reaching 78.9 per cent of the total at the end of June, compared to only 65 per cent in 1987.

In a turnaround, the business sector's external debt rose by $453 million to $4.16 billion, after falling by $153 million last year. The rise reversed a downward trend that has been in effect since 1989. According to the central bank, the change is due to the fact that a few large firms received long-term credit abroad.

The net foreign debt to Gross National Product (GNP) ratio rose to 27 per cent from 26 per cent at the end of last year, mostly as a result of government borrowing.

The debt-to-GNP ratio is used to measure a country's ability to meet its financial obligations.

The country's gross foreign debt jumped 6.2 per cent to $38.46 billion in the first half of the year, an increase of $2.24 billion.

This week The CJN features ...Korry's Clothiers

By BARBARA SILVERSTEIN

TORONTO — When the media need an expert on men's fashions they turn to Saul Korman. He's been on radio open-line and television talk shows, and he's quoted in the local papers.

Korman wrote a fashion column for the Globe and Mail for nine years and now he writes one for Lifestyles magazine.

Considered one of the leading authorities on men's clothing in Toronto, his reputation is built on a firm foundation: president of Korry's Clothiers, Korman has 43 years of experience in the menswear business.

Korry's is located at 569 Danforth Ave., just west of Pape on a trendy strip lined with Greek restaurants and outdoor cafes. Korman says he enjoys the vibrancy of Danforth Village. "I wouldn't want to be in another part of the city."

Korry's, a family business has been located on the Danforth from the beginning. Nathan Korman, Saul's father, founded the business in 1951 and Saul's son Michael, who now works in the business, is being groomed to take it over.

The store sells a wide range of clothing from leisure wear — sweaters, sport shirts and slacks, to business wear — suits, blazers and dress shirts, but suits in the mid to high price range are the mainstay of their business, Korman says.

His best seller is the Roberto line of suits, Korry's private label. By marketing suits under this label, he can lower the price of high-quality domestic-made suits and appease the manufacturers who don't want him underpricing suits with their labels, Korman says.

Roberto suits are priced from $395 up. Suits of this quality — they are all made with Italian cloth — are twice the price in other upper scale menswear stores, Korman says. "The private label — I registered the name — is great value, but I can't be half price with Boss and Canali."

Korry's carries a line of clothing from these two European companies which are more expensive than the local products. Suits by Hugo Boss, a German line, retail from $785 up, while those by Canali, an Italian company producing hand-sewn suits, start at $1,000.

Ready-made suits are more popular today than made-to-measure ones because the quality of these garments has improved with the automation of the tailoring, Korman says. And Korry's has changed with the technology. They used to specialize in made-to-measure suits, but now they do a bigger business in ready-made suits, keeping five full-time tailors busy with alterations.

Alteration is only one of the many customer services offered at Korry's. All his sales staff are trained wardrobe consultants who assist customers with color coordination and accessorizing. The store also offers wardrobe analysis and color consulting.

Korman says that natural colors like browns, greens and charcoals are the big fall colors this year. However, he adds the classics ("You've got to have a navy suit.") are integral to any wardrobe. Navy suits, and black and navy blazers continue to be Korry's best sellers. "The navy suit is still in 12 months a year."

He advises overweight men to buy dark-colored double-breasted suits with pleated pants, worn with suspenders for a better fit. He also recommends a double-breasted suit for short men, because this style will make them look taller.

Consumers have to become informed shoppers by asking more questions about the maintenance of clothes from salespeople. "They have to ask, 'Will it crease? Will it hold its shape?' " he says. "They're not getting answers because they're not asking questions."

It used to be customary for men to buy winter and summer suits, but now they buy suits of lighter material that can be worn all year round, Korman finds. The change in the consumers' shopping patterns is a direct result of the recession — people have less money to spend on clothes, he says.

And like many stores, Korry's was hit very hard by the recession and Korman says at the time he wasn't sure if the store would survive. But business has improved considerably.

"This year was our biggest ever," he states. "I couldn't tell you that three years ago. But we became lean and mean and I learned to become a better buyer and a better merchant."

Arab states ase boycott against Israel

PRESENT OF PEACE

Ottawa pleased

Jewish Telegraphic Agency

Jewish and government leaders in North America joined Israeli officials in hailing the decision by Saudi Arabia and its five Persian Gulf trading partners to ease the Arab boycott of Israel.

But while applauding the Gulf states' move last week to terminate the secondary and tertiary boycotts against Israel, pro-Israel activists said a total termination of trade restrictions against Israel was long overdue.

Israeli commentators called the move an important milestone in the peace process, and Foreign Minister Shimon Peres welcomed the decision as "an additional move in dismantling the walls of hatred and separation and boycott.'

Israeli Finance Minister Avraham Shohat said the easing of the boycott would provide a boost to the Israeli economy, which over the years has suffered the adverse effects of foreign companies fearful of ignoring the boycott.

The announcement "is certainly welcome and long overdue," said Foreign Affairs ministry official Rodney Moore. "It's helpful to the Middle East peace process."

Moore said Canada will "encourage" all Arab nations to drop the economic boycott entirely.

Rob Ritter, director of the Canada-Israel Committee, also welcomed the announcement.

"There's still a long way to go," he cautioned, "but this sends a message to Canadian companies that they need not fear the boycott any longer."

In 1992, Canadian companies exported $116 million worth of goods to Israel, while Israel imported over $131 million in Canadian products. The figure, Ritter feels, will rise now, particularly in high-tech areas.

"For the first time, I have some real hope that there are Arab states serious about ending the boycott against Israel," said Democrat Congressman Rep. Charles Schumer, co-chair of the Congressional Task Force to End the Arab Boycott.

"This is the kind of statement I've been looking for," Schumer said, adding that he hopes the six-member Gulf Cooperation Council will "do everything they can to persuade the rest of the Arab world to follow them."

Even two years before Israel's founding in 1948, Arab countries had imposed a trading boycott against the emerging Jewish state in an effort to undermine its economy and isolate it politically.

In 1951, the Arab League extended the restrictions, imposing a secondary boycott on companies engaged in trade with Israel and a tertiary boycott on firms doing business with those companies.

At its peak in the mid-1970s, the boycott had over 6,000 companies in nearly 100 countries on its blacklist.

Israel's chamber of commerce has estimated that the boycott has cost the country $40 billion in lost investments and exports.

The announcement to terminate the secondary and tertiary boycotts reflects a dramatic change in Arab attitudes toward Israel in the year since Jerusalem signed the self-rule accord with the Palestinians.

A number of Arab countries have unofficially ignored the boycott as a direct result of the strides toward peace accomplished on the Israeli-Palestinian front and, more recently, in Jerusalem's improved relations with Jordan.

The announcement came in a statement issued last Friday by Saudi Arabia following an annual meeting at the United Nations between the Gulf Cooperation Council and U.S. Secretary of State Warren Christopher.

Along with actively attempting to broker peace agreements between Israel and its Arab neighbors, Christopher has placed a high priority on ending the Arab boycott.

North American officials were disappointed in August, when at its meeting of foreign ministers in Cairo, the 21-member Arab League refused to put the issue of the boycott on its agenda.

That failure was largely the result of efforts by Syria, whose negotiations with Israel have been stalemated for months.

Following the August meeting, Christopher apparently turned his attention to the Gulf Cooperation Council — which along with Saudi Arabia includes Bahrain, Kuwait, Oman, Qatar and the United Arab Emirates — hoping to achieve at least a partial break in the solidarity of countries participating in the boycott.

According to Israeli media reports, Christopher put heavy pressure on the Saudis.

By RON CSILLAG
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — They won't be quite the same as E.T., Jaws or any of the Indiana Jones blockbusters, but Steven Spielberg is coming to town to make some films.

Or more accurately, Spielberg's Survival of the Shoah Visual History Foundation plans to set up shop here as soon as next month, with a view to videotaping the testimony of local Holocaust survivors as only the director of Schindler's List can.

In typical Spielberg fashion, the project is envisioned as massive, creating what its organizers hope will be one of the largest, most detailed and most meticulously cross-referenced data bases on the Holocaust in the world.

Certainly, it will produce the biggest video library of survivors' testimony, with much technical wizardry thrown in. In November, the nascent project is scheduled to open five branch offices — in Miami, New York, Los Angeles, Jerusalem and Toronto. Production is expected to expand worldwide by 1995.

Many will recall Spielberg's Oscar night pledge "not to allow the Holocaust to remain a footnote in history," after Schindler's List won a fistful of Academy Awards.

The director has already backed up his promise, diverting the film's profits towards the establishment of the Righteous Persons Foundation, a Holocaust education and outreach project. Those heading up the new non-profit Survivors of the Shoah Visual History Foundation hope to tap into some of that money, as well as raise private donations.

The foundation has sought input from historians, Holocaust experts and interviewers from around the world. Gerald R. Molen and Branko Lustig, who produced Schindler's List, will supervise the project with Karen Kushell, head of special projects at Spielberg's Los Angeles production company, Amblin Entertainment.

While Spielberg won't actually be here or get involved in the day-to-day workings, the videotaping of survivors' testimony was his idea, say those behind the scenes.

"Steven, as well as all of us who are involved, feel there's no doubt the window of opportunity is closing fast," June Beallor, the project's senior producer, told The CJN in a telephone interview last week. "The next five years are that window."

The project has already videotaped about 100 survivors in California. According to Beallor's co-producer, film-maker James Moll, this will be no less than "a computerized, multimedia navigation system," incorporating not only the actual testimony, but archival material such as photographs, documents, maps, family trees — anything a survivor wants to see preserved.

Once the project is up and running, everything on tape will be fed into a computer and digitized, a process comparable to putting music on a compact disk. Digital technology renders the information endlessly reproducible, with no loss of quality.

Eventually, all the data will be cross-referenced by subject, town of origin, current residence, place of incarceration and many other variables, Moll says. That means information will be easily accessible by future researchers.

The project's organizers stress they'll go out of their way to avoid any conflict or turf battles with Toronto's eight-year-old oral history project, which has videotaped the testimony of over 400 survivors, using the facilities of various Metro television stations.

'Bureaucratic roadblocks' hinder implementation of continuity report

Brotman concerned

By PAUL LUNGEN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — It took two years for a task force on Jewish continuity to prepare its report, but that time was not nearly as frustrating as the last two months since the report was published, the chair of the task force said recently.

Longtime community volunteer Aaron Brotman told an informal meeting in a downtown corporate boardroom that he is concerned that "bureaucracy and process" will slow down implementation of the task force's recommendations.

Expanding on that theme for The CJN afterwards, Brotman said he has run into bureaucratic roadblocks in the aftermath of the report's publication. "Professionals say, 'you must go slow, it takes time,' " Brotman said.

But he believes it's time for "a new mindset. The situation requires a creative approach. . . It will take a concentrated effort on a pro-active basis to push this. . . If everyone pays lip service [to the idea] that continuity is the number one priority, it has to be treated as the number one priority," he said.

The Jewish Federation of Greater Toronto, which sponsored the task force, has accepted the report and agreed to allocate $1.2 million in funding for new continuity-related programs, he said. But Federation staff and lay people have been so preoccupied with the problems of the near- bankrupt Jewish Community Centre that creation of an implementation and funding committee has been held up. "I suspect that nothing will be completed until early 1995," Brotman said.

Brotman was speaking at a lunchtime meeting sponsored by the Association for Jewish Continuity, a volunteer organization that is unaffiliated with the Federation. Community activist Julia Koschitzky served as the event's moderator.

Aaron Brotman

Brotman told about 25 people attending the meeting that the task force adopted an inclusive approach that was intended to embrace synagogues, young people and those who feel alienated from the mainstream community.

In the end, the task force identified three priority areas: urging families to live Jewish lives in the home; promoting Jewish education; addressing "singles issues."

Responding to Brotman's remarks, business executive Norm Grafstein criticized the task force, suggesting its mandate was unclear. It did not adequately articulate why continuity was important, he contended. If you haven't defined the importance of continuity and what it means, then it becomes impossible to determine whether any remedial measures are successful, he said.

Grafstein, executive vice president of Premier Capital Management, suggested there is a need for qualitative research to determine the views and needs of various groups in the Jewish community. And, acknowledging a "motherhood" issue, he called for easier and broader access to Jewish education for people of all ages, including parents who should instruct their children on the Jewish people's rich heritage.

In a question and answer period that followed the formal remarks, one person suggested that the task force was flawed because it was based on assumptions that are not accepted by all Jews. As a result, it speaks to the converted and continues to isolate, marginalize and even repel other Jews, he said.

The speaker suggested that secular Jews, non-Zionists, Israelis and Jews of non-European descent were not addressed by the report.

"The organized Jewish community is not user-friendly to the many Israelis here in Toronto," while Sephardi Jews also do not feel welcome in local Jewish organizations, he argued.

Brotman responded by saying the task force excluded only two types of people — those who ignored their Jewish identity and ultra-Orthodox who do not wish to mix with others. He said the task force faced great difficulty in getting Sephardim and Israelis to participate in discussing these issues.

Another questioner called for greater community tolerance. She said people need to have somewhere to go in a non-religious environment and "still feel connected."

Another speaker, who identified himself as married to a Jewish woman, said "there is a reluctance in Toronto to accept couples where one party is not born Jewish." That's the case even where the non-Jewish spouse wants to participate in community activities, he said.

Another speaker suggested the community should address the issue of Jewish spirituality as a response to those who leave Judaism in a search for religious expression.

Heritage Front 'star' turns her life around

By PAUL LUNGEN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — The majority of young recruits to the white supremacist Heritage Front come from normal, suburban backgrounds, a one-time member said last week.

Elisse Hategan said some members are attracted by the skinhead look and its rough-edged music while others get hooked on the movement's camaraderie and the feelings of empowerment and superiority it promotes.

Hategan, once a part of the Heritage Front's inner circle, was the featured speaker at a program sponsored by the Toronto Mayor's Race Relations Committee and Vision TV titled They Don't All Wear Sheets.

Heritage Front members feel part of a second family, she said. "[You believe] you'll be a winner and no one will mess with you."

Hategan, 19, was a rising star in the movement and a self-described protege of Front leader Wolfgang Droege before she defected.

She said she became disillusioned with the Front's harassment campaign against anti-racists and felt she was left on her own after being charged with promoting hatred by distributing Front leaflets.

Since leaving the Front, she has cooperated with anti-racist organizations, particularly the Canadian Centre on Racism and Prejudice (CCRP), and she testified against Droege and other Front members on charges they violated a court order against broadcasting racist telephone messages.

"She has done more to put racists behind bars than the police," CCRP executive director Martin Theiault told an almost-full house at the meeting.

Hategan said the Heritage Front recruits young people by preying on the concerns they voice. For example, if someone mentions an incident with Asians, the recruiter pushes an anti-Asian line, she said.

Recruiters are also instructed to praise a person's country of origin if they are of white, European descent, even if privately they believe it's "genetically inferior." They tell the recruit they should be proud of their heritage.

Recruits are invited to attend concerts and other events where racist views are expounded. Eventually, they are fed the line that everything that isn't white is inferior, she said.

Young people who become part of the movement erroneously believe the leaders respect them, she said, and most women join because of their boyfriends.

Vision TV screened its documentary about Hategan, Heritage Point, before she addressed the meeting. In the film she says the only frightening thing about her past is "the person I was back then would kill the person I am now."

Theriault confirmed she had little to fear from former Front colleagues because the group is now "in crisis and Droege's best friends are the media. They're willing to listen to him but the members aren't."

Theriault said the Front's members are now working to create smaller cells that can't be infiltrated, while George Burdie, who is affiliated with the racist Church of the Creator, has started a record label called Resistance Records to promote racist bands, attract young people and make money for the movement.

Also addressing the meeting was Floyd Cochran, a former member of the U.S.-based Aryan Nations. A recruiter of young people, Cochran said, "I was good at making hate sound palatable."

Cochran said his two greatest "allies" were people's beliefs that he wasn't worth taking seriously and his reliance on the Bible, which gave him "a veneer of respectability."

"People say, 'He can't be that bad, he reads the Bible, he goes to church on Sunday,' " he said.

But "racism is preached in the name of Christian Identity and God. I would have killed someone in the name of God, but not for a political ideology."

Christian Identity believes that Jews are literally the children of Satan and that the Bible permits the murder of Jews. If a member of the Aryan Nations were to kill a Jew, they'd be awarded a medal, he said.

Vancouver is a "hotbed of Christian Identity" while Gatineau, Que., is the site of a computer bulletin board that disseminates racist information, he said.

Bloor JCC takes steps to institutional autonomy

By PAUL LUNGEN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — The Bloor Street branch of the Jewish Community Centre (JCC) took another step towards institutional independence last week with the announcement of the proposed creation of "a new Bloor JCC."

The new entity will be "a self-managed and self-financing operation" independent of the near-bankrupt JCC, of which it is currently one branch. The new organization will sever its legal connection with the JCC and will "work for and be accountable to the downtown Jewish community," said Mark Sarner, chair of the Bloor task force, a committee charting new directions for the facility.

Speaking to 150 people at a public meeting, Sarner said the new Bloor JCC will have its own board of directors responsible for determining the centre's programs and financing. The centre will work cooperatively with the downtown Jewish community.

Sarner told The CJN that a management company has been incorporated to run the Bloor JCC's operations on an interim basis, pursuant to an agreement with JCC receiver Richter & Associates.

"It charges us with responsibility for managing the Bloor JCC" until an arrangement involving the JCC, its creditors and the Jewish Federation of Greater Toronto kicks in, he said.

That arrangement will see the JCC split into three distinct entities corresponding to its three branches on Bloor, Bathurst and at Leslie and Steeles (the Valley).

One day after the meeting, the Federation, the receiver and the Bank of Montreal reached a "verbal agreement" to go ahead with the plan, said Federation spokesman Morris Zbar. The managment company is headed by Michael Kerbel.

Allan Wexler, chair of the Valley management committee, told The CJN his branch is also making arrangements to become autonomous and to establish an interim management company similar to the Bloor one.

The Valley is also well on its way to raising the $1 million designated as its portion of the money owing the bank. Between $300,000 and $400,000 has already been pledged, he said.

At the meeting, Sarner said the Bloor facility has generated an operating surplus in past years and it will continue to do so by managing its costs and aggressively finding new sources of income.

In what could be seen as a backhanded swipe at the near-bankrupt JCC, Sarner said, "Most important, we will operate in a financially prudent manner."

Frank Jacobs, co-chair of the Bloor fundraising committee, said the current goal is $5 million. Of that, $3 million is earmarked for the Bank of Montreal, the JCC's secured creditor which holds a mortgage on the Bloor Street building.

Another $1 million will go to upgrade the facility while the last $1 million is intended to create an endowment for major programs.

The committee has proposed a five-year campaign to raise the money. The Jewish Federation of Greater Toronto has promised $250,000 a year for three years to allow the Bloor JCC to carry a new mortgage on the property. Jacobs pointed to other funding sources like major gifts, direct marketing, special events, government grants, sale of yerushas (lifetime memberships) and operating surplus.

Next to address the meeting was Federation president Bernie Ghert, who outlined the Federation's involvement in the effort to restructure the JCC. The Bank of Montreal, which is owed about $9.7 million of the JCC's $15-million debt, will receive $5 million from the Federation (in exchange for the JCC's Bathurst branch), $3 million from Bloor and $1 million from the Valley branch of the JCC, he said.

The evening's event turned testy during a question period, when Ghert was peppered with queries about the Federation's role in the restructuring plan.

With several former employees of the Leah Posluns Theatre present, Ghert was asked about the demise of the facility. The JCC directors knew what money was available for the rescue of the JCC and they determined how that money could best be used, he said.

Going on the offensive, he suggested "you should ask the directors of the JCC who feel they should be indemnified ahead of the employees."

(Among the JCC's many debts is $520,000 owing to Revenue Canada in unremitted payroll deductions for which the JCC's board of directors is responsible. That money was used to finance ongoing JCC expenses.)

Speaking to The CJN following the meeting, former JCC president Bernie Kamin said, "I understand that [Ghert] said if [the board] did not go ahead with the restructuring that included closing the theatre, the Federation would not pay Revenue Canada."

Responding to Kamin's statement, Ghert said, "All we said to them is that if the facilities are saved for the community, the [Federation] officers will consider positively indemnifying the directors for the money owed to Revenue Canada.

"If you pay off all the other employees, there won't be money for Revenue Canada," he added.

He said the theatre lost at least $340,000 a year, a figure disputed by former employees of the theatre, who claim it broke even.

The exchanges again grew testy when Fred Tittel, who has held a variety of JCC positions, asked why the Federation did not follow the recommendation of former UJA chairmen who urged the Federation to pay all the JCC's debts.

Raising his voice, Ghert said that decision was up to the officers of the Federation, not past UJA chairmen.

Asked by Kamin why the Federation did not accept a proposal advanced last summer by philanthropist Wilfred Posluns to spearhead a fundraising campaing to raise $25 million for the JCC and other community projects, like a new facility for CHAT, Ghert said "It's one thing to say they'll raise it, it's another thing to do it.

"It's a lot of money to have to raise at once in a very short time."

Another questioner, referring to the plans for the Bloor branch, warned against creation of a "family compact" making closed door decisions and going public only when they need funds for a bailout.

Sarner said, "We are planning an open process. This kind of meeting is a function of the Bloor JCC, hearing your concerns."

Former federal politician to stump for Weizmann

By FRANCES KRAFT

Gerry Weiner

TORONTO — Former federal cabinet minister Gerry Weiner will become national executive director of the Canadian Society for the Weizmann Institute of Science, effective Nov. 1. The job will be based in Toronto.

Weiner was the only Jewish cabinet minister in the government of former Prime Minister Brian Mulroney. First elected in the Tory sweep of 1984, he went on to serve as Secretary of State, Minister of Multiculturalism and Citizenship and Minister of Immigration. He was the principal author of the Canadian Multiculturalism Act.

The 61-year-old native Montrealer, a pharmacist who built up and ran his own chain of pharmacies (GLS Associated Apothecaries), served as councillor and then mayor of suburban Dollard-Des-Ormeaux for six years before entering federal politics.

Over the past year, Weiner returned to the practice of pharmacy in Montreal. He's also been active within the Canada-Israel Committee, the Canadian Institute for Jewish Research and other boards.

Weiner's numerous honors include three Man of the Year awards — from the Sephardic Community of Quebec, State of Israel Bonds, and Amal Schools, Israel.

In his first letter to Weizmann board members, Weiner said that "the Talmudic teaching that one person can make a difference" has been a fundamental principle in his life.

He is "enormously excited and thrilled to be joining the Weizmann Institute," he told The CJN.

The position of national executive director has been vacant for the past three years, while Gloria Snow and Gloria Temkin served as associate directors. Snow will remain with the Canadian Society as associate director, while Temkin has left to pursue graduate studies at the University of Toronto.

Camp allergy death 'accidental'

By DAVID LAZARUS
CJN Staff Reporter

MONTREAL — The death of a 12-year-old boy at a Jewish camp during an overnight canoe trip more than a year ago was "accidental," a Quebec coroner has ruled.

But Howard Costin's death, which Coroner Marie-Louise Boshouwers concluded resulted from a violent allergic reaction to a minute quantity of peanuts, might have been avoided if more care had been taken in preparing sandwiches for the trip.

Costin, who was attending Camp Massad, died on July 15, 1993, during a canoe trip in Mont Tremblant Park, after he ate a cheese sandwich adulterated with a trace amount of peanut butter, the report concluded.

He succumbed while en route to hospital in Ste. Agathe and despite intense efforts to revive him.

Because of the park's isolated location, it took four hours to get Costin to the hospital.

Boshouwers' report does not state that the camp showed negligence in Costin's death. But it clearly suggests that if more attention has been paid to the preparation of the sandwiches, the tragedy may have been avoided.

The amount of peanut butter Costin consumed was so small as to be undetectable in his stomach contents, the coroner noted, but it was enough to trigger a fatal allergic reaction, even though Costin had never before reacted severely to peanuts.

"It is highly doubtful that Howard Costin consumed a peanut butter and jelly sandwich," the report says, "because he knew very well that he was allergic to peanuts and was careful about it."

"If particular attention has been paid in the preparation of the sandwiches in order to make sure there was no peanut butter in contact with the cheese sandwiches, this death would probably have been avoided," Boshouwers writes.

The report notes that Costin had arrived at camp with a box containing medication for his allergies and with a letter advising the camp doctor that Costin suffered from asthma and from an allergy to peanuts. The letter also said that Costin should always carry an Epipen with him — a pen-sized instrument containing adrenaline — as a precaution against an asthma attack or allergic reaction.

The morning of July 15, Costin went to see the camp doctor, who gave him a Ventolin inhaler (for asthma). But Costin, after being asked, told the doctor he did not feel he would need the Epipen and the doctor did not insist on it.

As well, the counsellors leading the trip were not advised of Costin's peanut allergy.

At about 1:45 p.m., perhaps one hour after consuming the cheese sandwich, Costin complained of not feeling well. Within five minutes, he stopped breathing, the report says.

The counsellors tried continuously to revive Costin and used a cellular phone to call an ambulance, which reached the campers at 4 p.m. But by then it was too late and Costin was pronounced dead at 7:32 p.m.

The coroner's report made two recommendations:

First, it advised the management of the camp that any "pertinent information" about a camper's health care be conveyed to camp staff responsible for that care; and second, to the camp doctor, to respect the wishes of parents in regards to the "therapeutic" care of thir children.

Even though it is possible that one or even both Epipens Costin brought with him to camp would not have been enough to save his life given the severity of his allergic reaction, the coroner says, the camp doctor should have made sure that Costin or one of his counsellors had an Epipen along on the trip.

Veteran MP chooses substance over style

By MIRIAM SOBEL
CJN Correspondent

OTTAWA — After 32 years on the job, Solicitor General and Liberal House leader Herb Gray relishes working in the eye of the storm.

In the 10 months since he was re-elected and posted to cabinet, Gray has grappled with tobacco smuggling and the subsequent controversy about lowered cigarette taxes, been involved with prison and parole legislation at a time of unparalleled public anxiety about violent crime, and contended with the recent revelations that a paid CSIS informer may have founded the white supremacist Heritage Front.

He finds public life an endless education. "It's something that's ever fascinating and interesting," Gray told The CJN. "You run into such a range of human concerns and experiences. You have a chance to try and do things to help people either individually or as a community."

First elected in 1962 at age 31, Gray, a lawyer, is the longest sitting member of Parliament. He first came to Ottawa when John Diefenbaker was prime minister and Lester Pearson was the leader of the Liberal opposition. There was no universal health plan, no Canada Pension Plan and no constituency office in his Windsor West riding — MPs worked out of their living rooms.

Despite having served four Liberal leaders as minister of revenue, industry, consumer and corporate affairs, Gray is keen on dealing with current issues.

"I don't spend a lot of time reflecting about the past," he said. "I'm more concerned with what's happening now and how to deal with current problems and how to achieve the best future for our country."

In any case, he has little time to reflect. As solicitor general, Gray oversees public security. With prisons and policing as part of his domain, it is never a quiet portfolio.

As Liberal House leader, Gray steers all parliamentary business through the House. Virtually nothing happens without his involvement, says long-time assistant Jerry Yanover.

Herb Gray

"He is one of those members who thinks the highest calling is to work in elected office," Yanover said of his boss.

In Windsor, Gray attends dinners, meetings and ceremonies. Sometimes when he isn't busy, he strolls around a neighborhood or drops into a donut shop to talk to people. Staying in touch with constituents is the key to being an effective MP, says Gray.

"If you can't do that, you can't do this work because you wouldn't be elected and re-elected for any period of time," he asserted. "You might do it once but you wouldn't continue.

"If people are in touch with me complaining about the lack of jobs, their concerns about what's going to happen to their pension, that's a set of real life experiences that I bring to bear in discussions in cabinet and debates in the House."

Responding to constituents is a theme Gray returns to often. As solicitor general, Gray is acutely aware of public concerns about violent crime, parole and the return of offenders to the community. It doesn't matter that statistics show the incidence of violent crime is not as high as people believe, he says: people are worried and deserve a response. Canadians are afraid that crime will reach American levels.

"In the U.S. they have been busy locking people up and imposing longer sentences. If that was the only answer they would be crime-free, but in fact it seems that the more people they lock up the more serious their crime problems becomes," Gray said, revealing his fierce pride in the Canadian way of doing things.

His focus is on crime prevention. "It's a major concern of mine. We have to work in the area of dealing with some of the basic social concerns, lack of education and so on. So you have to have a balanced approach, which is what we're doing."

Shaughnessy Cohen, MP for Windsor and St. Clair riding, says Gray is regularly mobbed by people who want a word with him when he crosses the lobby of Parliament on his way to question period.

"That has as much to do with his personality as his power. He is accessible and his staff is accessible," she said.

His popularity has not diminished with changing political styles. When good looks, television presence and charisma became essential political aids, Gray's staid image and famed colorless speaking style did not hamper his career. He has usually run ahead of his party at election time.

"Charisma was okay in the '70s and '80s and started being important in the '60s," said friend and fellow lawyer Stephen Victor. "The type of politician [Herb] represents is the politician of the '90s. The public wants a leader who is substance not just veneer, who will get something done. He was ahead of his time in being a politician who really cares about his profession and the people he serves."

Beneath the dull exterior, say friends, lies a sly wit and a genuine interest in popular culture. Gray is a fan of blue-collar rockers like Bruce Springsteen and John Cougar Mellencamp, but he knows what's going on elsewhere on the music scene.

"I've seen him sit down with teenagers and absolutely floor them with his knowledge of the bands they like," Yanover said.

Lately, Gray has been listening to country music. When the television in his oak-trimmed suite of offices isn't tuned to the House, Gray sometimes watches the Nashville Network.

"Today, unlike a lot of popular music, it has lyrics, it has tunes, the songs are about things like families and getting old and raising children, having a job," he said.

Much like his own life. Gray and his wife Sharon, a lawyer, have been married 27 years and have two children — Jonathan, 22, and Elizabeth, 20 — both off at university.

At 63, Gray has no plans to slow the pace of public life. He finds the work too interesting.

"I have to say, frankly, I'm still learning something almost everyday."

Restaurant closing leaves patrons hungry for past

By JANICE ARNOLD
CJN Staff Reporter

MONTREAL — Someone compared it to a stock market crash; another to a death in the family.

The comments are typical of the reaction in the Jewish community to the sudden closing of the Brown Derby Restaurant and Delicatessen. A word like "institution" hardly suffices in expressing what the Brown Derby, located in a strip mall on Van Horne Avenue, meant to many.

It was, above all, a place where people conducted business, usually over a lengthy breakfast, in a noisy, bustling atmosphere. Patrons shmoozed with one another between tables or they held court at their favorite tables, while waitresses catered to each of the regular's tastes.

It was also a social centre for older people. Matrons were often seen having coffee and sharing a piece of cake. Rarely did you pass the Brown Derby at any time of day when there wasn't a group of elderly men outside chatting.

The 40-year-old restaurant, whose longtime owner Harry Fleisher declared bankruptcy, was also probably the last place in Montreal one could find such a variety of traditional European Jewish food on the menu, like kasha and bowties — and in large portions.

Although not kosher, the Brown Derby held candlelit Friday night dinners "like momma used to make" and, during Passover, the restaurant was transformed with tablecloths and different dishes. It closed on Rosh Hashanah and Yom Kippur.

Sherry Stein, communications director of Federation CJA, recalls taking a woman from the U.S. Midwest there last year, who was so excited when served a steaming platter of chicken soup with a humungous matzo ball in the middle, she dashed out to the car for her camera to take a photo. "She said she hadn't seen food like that since her grandmother's cooking," Stein said.

Stein's overwhelming reaction is sadness. "The Brown Derby was a feel-good place. If you were having a bad day, you knew your spirits would be buoyed because there was always that camaraderie, people you knew there who would stop at your table and talk."

He remembers one fellow involved in real estate who had the same booth every day from 7 to 9 a.m. "He would have appointments with three or four customers during that time, one after the other."

The relationship between patrons and staff, especially the hardworking waitresses, some of whom were there over 30 years, was unusually close. For one, her kindness paid off.

"When Norman Spector was young he delivered coal and because he was dirty with dust, no restaurant would let him in. But there was a waitress at one place who fed him from the back of the kitchen," King related.

Years passed and Spector became head of the S. Albert Oil Company. The same waitress was now working at the Brown Derby. "Norman always made sure he sat at one of her tables. He bought her gifts and tipped her handsomely from then on."

"It was like a family there, and the waitresses were part of it. They knew who wanted scrambled and who want boiled," Stein said. "They knew all about people's lives."

The Brown Derby attracted a cross-section of society, from millionaires to taxi drivers, but there was a certain hierarchy. "The needletrade sat in the centre," Stein said.

In more recent years, Israeli and Moroccan businessmen also had their distinct sections.

Then there is the story of the Jewish man found living alone and close to starving in the East End. He had worked as a cutter and suffered a debilitating accident.

Jewish Family Services arranged his placement in a foster home in the Snowdon area. "It's said that his first comment was 'Oh good, now I'll be living near the Brown Derby,' " King said.

Norene Gilletz, who was a consultant to the Brown Derby a few years ago when it added lower-fat, lighter foods to the menu, thinks the business foundered because of the aging Jewish population and because it refused to compromise on quality, even though labor costs were going up. Instead, it offered more and more specials.

"For many older people eating at the Brown Derby was like a religion," Gilletz said, recalling how a friend's 80-year-old father, obviously ailing, would not see a doctor because he had to make his usual date with his cronies at the Brown Derby.

Although those lengthy business meetings and social get-togethers gave the Brown Derby the appearance of being as busy as ever, apparently customers were not spending enough to keep their favorite haunt afloat.

CIC chair begins term following major changes

OTTAWA — Stephen Victor of Ottawa has been appointed the new national chair of the Canada-Israel Committee (CIC).

He succeeds Daniel U. Pekarsky of Vancouver, who held the position for four years and who will continue to serve on the CIC executive committee as immediate past chair.

This is the first CIC board to be appointed following the restructuring of the organization which culminated in June with the adoption of a new constitution at the CJF Plenary.

Joining Victor and Pekarsky on the CIC executive committee are: Stephen Lipper of Montreal (vice chair); Norman Godfrey of Toronto (vice chair); Sheldon Lerman of Toronto, treasurer; Hal Joffe of Calgary, secretary; Don Carr of Toronto; Tom Hecht of Montreal, Canada-Israel Committee, Quebec chair; Kurt Rothschild of Toronto (president, CZF); Brian Morris of Toronto (president, BBC); and, Herb Rosenfeld of Toronto (CJC).

NAME GAME

There is a story in almost every Jewish surname and Toronto lawyer FRED M. CATZMAN has been researching their origins over the past few years. Mr. Catzman reports on his research in The CJN.

TOON

Ralph Stein's forebears were surnamed Toon, whom I remember as neighbors.

He thought that the name was related to the Hebrew for fast (like Yom Kippur).

I reject that theory because his ancestors came from Lithuania and they would not pronounce the Hebrew word tanis (fast) as Tunis.

There is a shtetl called Tynovich near Vilna, which is more probably the origin.

REVOLUTIONARY CHANGE OF NAME

After the Revolution in Russia, there was a rash of name changes. Of particular interest are the changes of some of the revolutionary leaders who were of Jewish origin: Bronstein became Trotzky; Rosenfeld became Kamenev; Applebaum became Zinoviev; Tzederbaum became Martov; Wallach became Litvinov.

Israel, Tunisia normalizing ties

Jewish Telegraphic Agency

TEL AVIV — In a move reflecting greater international acceptance of Israel in the wake of its peace initiatives with the Palestinians, Israel and Tunisia have agreed to take a first step toward normalizing relations.

After meeting in New York on Saturday, Israeli Foreign Minister Shimon Peres and his Tunisian counterpart, Habib Ben Yahia, announced their countries would establish economic interest sections in Tel Aviv and Tunis.

Under the terms of their agreement, reached with the help of Belgium, the two countries will soon exchange economic representatives. Because interest sections mark a lower-level exchange than the establishment of embassies or consulates, each country's representatives will be sent to the Belgian embassies in Tel Aviv and Tunis.

The question of just when the two countries will begin stationing officials with higher diplomatic rank has been left open, pending further discussions.

Peres, who was in New York to attend last week's opening sessions of the UN General Assembly, later said the agreement will extend Israel's diplomatic ties in North Africa.

"This is an agreement we will pursue until we attain a full agreement on relations," he told Israel Radio. "At this point, we have some sort of relations with three North African states — namely Egypt, Morocco and Tunisia."

On Sept. 1, Israel and Morocco announced they would establish economic liaison offices in Tel Aviv and Rabat, a move that made Morocco the second Arab country to establish ties with Israel. The first was Egypt, which signed a peace agreement with the Jewish state in 1979.

Following the September breakthrough with Morocco, Israeli news reports suggested that Tunisia would soon follow its neighbor's lead.

As the reports persisted, Tunisia issued a statement at the time saying it was not planning to establish official relations with Israel.

Israel has been greeted with increasing acceptance by the international community in the wake of the signing of its accord with the PLO last September.

Prior to the agreement with Tunisia, Israel established ties with 21 nations in the past year. Israel now has relations with 146 of the 185 member nations in the United Nations, the highest number since the state was established in 1948.

In addition to its agreement with Israel, Tunisia also plans to establish economic liaison offices in the Gaza Strip and Jericho, the two Palestinian self-rule zones.

The PLO maintained its headquarters in Tunisia from 1982 until July of this year, when Chairman Yasser Arafat moved it to Gaza. Over the years, Tunisian government officials reportedly urged Arafat to pursue dialogue with Israel.

After meeting with Ben Yahia, Peres met with the foreign minister of Qatar, Hamad Thani. Qatar is also said to be interested in forging relations with Israel, but has been under pressure from the Syrians not to do so.

One of the arguments he used, according to the reports, was that Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin, given his difficult negotiations with Syria over withdrawal from the Golan Heights, needed some sort of "peace dividend" to help sway Israeli public opinion behind his efforts.

Dropping the indirect boycott against Israel, Christopher reportedly argued, was the least the Saudis could do to help advance the peace process.

One Israeli commentator noted that last Friday's developments marked the first time the Saudis came down from the fence, went beyond verbal declarations of support for the Middle East peace process and expressed their support with an open, practical step.

A subcommittee of the Holocaust education committee at Jewish Federation of Greater Toronto, the oral history project has been headed by historian Paula Draper, whom the Spielberg team hopes to tap as a key resource person in areas like interviewing techniques and local survivor outreach.

The Spielberg project "is most welcome" in Toronto, agrees Draper. "Our biggest concern is that the survivors' best interests be protected."

To do that, the Spielberg team will begin training sessions for potential interviewers in Toronto the week of Oct. 23, Moll says. Soon after that, the office here will be hiring members of the interviewing team: a cameraperson, who will double as lighting and sound technician; a volunteer assistant and the interviewer, who will receive a $50 honorarium per session.

Whenever possible, interviews will be conducted in survivors' homes and at synagogues, in the language the subject chooses. Each survivor will receive a copy of his or her testimony as a keepsake. According to Spielberg's wishes, spouses, children and grandchildren will be invited to appear on camera for the final moments of the segment.

The two- to three-hour interviews will encompass a survivor's experiences before, during and after the war. "It's important that survivors share not only an account of their pain, but the details of how, after losing so much, they managed to rebuild their lives," Moll says.

The completed videos will be available for viewing at the following locations: the Fortunoff Video Archive for Holocaust Testimonies at Yale University; the Museum of Jewish Heritage in New York; the Simon Wiesenthal Centre in Los Angeles, the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Museum in Washington, D.C., and Yad Vashem in Jerusalem.

Draper is hoping that a copy of each tape will be also be given to the oral history project.

Eventually, Spielberg and his team have big hopes: preserving forever the stories of as many of the estimated 250,000 to 350,000 Holocaust survivors in the world as possible.

The foundation is currently seeking to contact survivors and potential interviewers worldwide. For information in Canada, dial 1-800-661-2092, or write to Survivors of the Shoah Visual History Foundation, P.O. Box 8940, Universal City, CA. 91608-0940, USA.

Reform leaders urge Rabin not to court Shas' support

Jewish Telegraphic Agency

JERUSALEM — North American Reform leaders are asking Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin not to cede control of religious matters to the ultra-Orthodox Shas Party in exchange for its support of a Syrian peace deal.

Rabbi Alexander Schindler, president of the Union of American Hebrew Congregations, Reform's umbrella organization, warned Rabin in a recent letter that caving in to Shas demands would bring "lasting damage to Israel-Diaspora relations," and would dampen North American Jewish support for the peace process.

Canadian Reform rabbis say they too are leery of possible Labor Party concessions to Shas which might curtail freedom of religion in the Jewish state.

"Peace with Syria and with all of Israel's neighbors is a goal of the highest value," said Rabbi Daniel Gottlieb, director of the Canadian Council for Reform Judaism, "but it's hard to give enthusiastic support to a peace arrangement which sacrifices religious pluralism."

The Labor Party, which controls 61 of the Knesset's 120 seats, is hoping to add the six seats of Shas, its one-time coalition partner in the event of a land-for-peace deal with Syria.

Shas has said it would return to the coalition only if Labor pledges to pass a law nullifying any Supreme Court ruling that challenges the status quo on religious affairs.

The status quo, in effect, gives the Orthodox establishment a virtual monopoly over all religious affairs in Israel.

But talk of concessions has incensed some Canadian Reform rabbis. "Religious pluralism is a principle, not a strategy," said Rabbi Michael Stroh of Toronto, the immediate past-president of the Reform Zionist Kadima organization. "You wouldn't trade off your right to trial by jury. These principles shouldn't be on the table."

Others, like Rabbi Paul Sidlofsky of Edmonton's Temple Beth Ora, say both regional peace and religious pluralism can be accommodated. "[The principles] are not mutually exclusive," Rabbi Sidlofsky said.

Shas leaders say the counterlegislation is needed after recent court decisions which "chipped away" at the status quo. These decisions have been issued largely in response to petitions by Israel's Reform and Conservative movements in their struggle for legitimacy.

Rabin agreed to Shas' demand two months ago, sparking opposition within his own party, most notably from Justice Minister David Libai. Last week, leaders of Labor's other coalition partner, the left-wing Meretz bloc, refused to sign onto the deal.

Shas leaders have threatened to join the opposition on the Golan question if they do not get what they want.

Rabbi Moshe Maya, a Shas Knesset member, explained the party's position in an interview on Israel Radio. "We support the peace process [in the] hope that peace will come to the land [so] that Jews can keep the Torah and mitzvot."

Rabbi Avi Weiss

Rabbi Avi Weiss arrested at protest

Jewish Telegraphic Agency

NEW YORK — Crying "Shame, shame!" and "Why weren't you with the families in Buenos Aires?" activist Rabbi Avi Weiss disrupted a gathering of the Appeal of Conscience Foundation recently because it was honoring Argentina's President Carlos Menem.

Protesting the presentation of the World Statesman Award to Menem in light of Argentina's failure to apprehend the terrorists who bombed the Jewish community building in Buenos Aires July 18 and the Israeli Embassy there two years earlier, Rabbi Weiss and a colleague from his New York-based Coalition of Concern-Amcha lay huddled together on the floor of the Grand Ballroom of the Hotel Pierre.

After allowing them to speak to the media, police arrested Rabbi Weiss and David Kalb, who were charged with criminal trespassing and resisting arrest. They were ordered to appear in court Oct. 24.

Rabbi Weiss, who in the days following this summer's blast flew to Buenos Aires to meet with Menem and members of the Argentine cabinet, told reporters about the families of those who died in the bombing and his concern that Argentina's border is so easily breached.

Rabbi Arthur Schneier, president and founder of the ecumenical Appeal of Conscience, decried Rabbi Weiss's actions.

"Anyone should be free to demonstrate, but the few should not terrorize the others in the world," he said. "We are all in the same boat."

Noting that his organization had nominated Menem for the award months before the July bombing in Buenos Aires, Rabbi Schneier said he is "satisfied that the Argentine government has brought in the CIA, the FBI, the Mossad and the French Secret Service, and is doing everything it can to bring the terrorists to justice."

Menem, who had met with the Conference of Presidents of Major American Jewish Organizations earlier in the day, told a reporter that Argentina is "in the midst of the investigation," into the terrorist attack, which killed 99 people and wounded nearly 200.

In his speech at the luncheon, Menem made only limited reference to the bombing, saying, "This abhorrent act was an attack on the Argentine people as a whole.

"I wish to reiterate the strong commitment of the Argentine government to fully investigate this act and to find and punish those responsible."

Survivor case goes before Israeli court

Jerusalem Post Foreign Service

JERUSALEM — Israel's High Court of Justice on Friday gave the government 60 days to explain why Holocaust victims receiving pensions from the Treasury get less than those who who receive compensation directly from Germany.

The order was in response to a petition by Likud MK Avraham Herschson and three others.

Under the 1952 reparations agreement with Germany, Israel agreed to pay all claims against the German government by Holocaust victims who were already living here, in exchange for an annual payment from Germany of between 210 million and 310 million DM (between $240 million and $360 million).

Survivors who moved to Israel after 1952, however, were not covered by the agreement. They were therefore able to obtain compensation from Germany directly.

According to the petition, the payments received from Germany wind up being about three times those given by the Treasury.

The News in Brief

Solidarity For Hunger Strikers

JERUSALEM — More than 700 people took part in a 24-hour fast at the Gamla protest site last Wednesday, in solidarity with Golan activists who have been on hunger strike for nearly three weeks.

Organizers said the mass fast was aimed at putting further pressure on the government to return to its pre-election promises of maintaining an Israeli presence on the Golan Heights, even in the event of peace with Syria.

Residents of kibbutzim, moshavim, towns, and villages in the Galilee, the Golan itself and from other parts of the country took part in the demonstration.

"What the hunger strikers are doing is what any resident of the Upper Galilee should be doing, and that's why I'm here taking part in this 24-hour hunger strike," said Avshalom Shamai of Rosh Pina.

Miriam Shahak, from Har Adar, near Jerusalem, said her husband Itzik joined the Golan hunger strikers two weeks ago. "Now the whole family is here giving support and I'm also fasting for the day. As far as the Golan is concerned, I don't even like the phrase 'giving it back' to the Syrians because it was never theirs in the first place."

Protesters were angry over remarks made by former Northern Commander Avigdor "Yanush" Ben-Gal in an open letter to the daily newspaper Maariv.

Ben-Gal accused the Golan activists, and the hunger strikers in particular, of being "deaf, blind and insular." He charged they are "morons" who did not have a clue about regional politics, and accused them of misleading the public.

Team Heads to Bahrain

JERUSALEM — A six-member Foreign Ministry team last week paid the first visit by Israeli officals to Bahrain, to prepare for a trip there by Environment Minister Yossi Sarid.

Israel and Bahrain do not have official relations, but the Gulf state has followed the lead of neighbors Oman and Qatar, which have hosted Israeli delegations as part of the multilateral peace talks. Kuwait is also scheduled to host a round this year.

The multilateral round deal with the environment, arms control, economic development, refugees, and water. Canada hosts the working group on refugees.

Bahrain will host the working group on the environment, to take place Oct. 25 and 26.

Sarid is also scheduled to travel to Tunisia next month for a meeting with environment ministers from other Mediterranean countries to discuss regional problems.

Menem Offers Help

NEW YORK — Argentinian President Carlos Menem told Foreign Minister Shimon Peres last Tuesday that he would try to arrange a meeting between Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin and Syrian President Hafez Assad when he visits the Syrian leader at the end of November.

Peres, who arrived here last Monday morning, is pressing for greater international political and financial support for the peace process in a series of meetings with leaders gathered for the opening of the 49th UN General Assembly.

During their half-hour meeting, Menem asked what he could do to facilitate the peace process during his upcoming visit to Syria. Peres said Assad's insistence on keeping negotiations at the level of lower ministers, rather than face-to-face talks between the two leaders, is the major impediment to progress. Menem pledged to push Assad to agree to such a meeting.

Synagogue Was Targetted

RABAT — An Algerian Muslim fundamentalist arrested in Morocco for killing Spanish tourists has confessed he had been instructed to attack a synagogue in Casablanca, according to a report by the Moroccan news agency MAP.

Hamel Marzouk said he decided not to attack the synagogue because it was so heavily guarded, and instead shot up tombs in a Jewish cemetery, according to the report.

No day or time of the cemetery attack was reported.

Elan Steinberg, director of the World Jewish Congress, said the arrest appears to be tied to the Islamic fundamentalist movement "that has ripped Algeria," and not to Morocco's recently established ties with Israel.

Marzouk was arrested in connection with the Aug. 24 attack on the Atlas Hotel in Marrakesh, Morocco, in which two Spanish tourists were shot to death.

Arab Paper Now Defends Talmud

NEW YORK — In the latest indication of changing Jewish-Arab relations, a prominent Arab newspaper has published a defence of the Talmud.

The defence, written by Rabbi Daniel Landes of the Simon Wiesenthal Centre, was a response to an earlier assault on the Talmud in the Arabic publication Al-Hayat.

Calling the newspaper's decision to print his response a "tremendous opening," Rabbi Landes said, "As far as we know this is the first time that a Jew has not only been allowed to respond but to speak for the Jewish faith."

Al-Hayat published its assault on the Talmud and on Jewish values, in June. The two articles charged that the Talmud "preaches two different values, one for Jews and the other for Gentiles."

Fire Rips Sydney Shul

SYDNEY — A major fire ripped through this city's largest synagogue here last week, devastating the interior of the three-storey building and destroying the main sanctuary.

All of the Central Synagogue's Torah scrolls, including 15 stored inside a recently installed fire-proof safe, were completely burned after the intense heat caused the safe to buckle.

There were no injuries reported.

Arson was originally suspected, but the latest reports from police and fire officials indicate the blaze was caused by a malfunction in the air-conditioning system.

Congregants wept and watched with horror as 12 fire-fighting units battled the flames for more than two hours.

Jewish leaders designated Oct. 3 as a day of mourning for Sydney's Jewish community. At that time, remains of the religious books will be buried and a special service will take place at a hall that will serve as a temporary synagogue for the Orthodox congregation.

Swiss Pass Anti-Racist Law

GENEVA — After months of anticipation, Swiss voters have narrowly approved legislation that will make it a crime to discriminate against ethnic groups or incite racial hatred.

Final results from the Sept. 25 referendum indicated that 54.6 per cent of those voting approved the legislation, while 45.4 per cent voted against it.

Swiss legislators passed the law in June 1993, but a drive by right-wing groups succeeded in putting the measure to a popular vote.

The law forbids public attempts to incite racial hatred or discrimination and makes it a crime to publicly deny the Holocaust. As a result, Holocaust deniers and neo-Nazi groups will no longer be allowed to hold public meetings or distribute their literature in Switzerland.

Anti-Semitic Acts Double

NEW YORK — Anti-Semitic incidents in Germany have skyrocketed by 100 per cent for the first six months of 1994 over the same period last year, the World Jewish Congress has reported.

Official figures show that 121 crimes aimed at Jews or at Jewish targets have been solved by investigators.

Halter searched for righteous gentiles

By SHELDON KIRSHNER
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — "The world is based upon 36 righteous people," Rabbi Abaye observes in the Talmud.

Mindful of this dictum, Marek Halter — a Jewish writer living in Paris — devoted several years to looking for 36 extraordinary human beings.

After an exhausting search, he found them — 36 gentiles, Christians and Muslims, from 14 countries who saved upwards of 500,000 Jews during the Holocaust.

For all intents and purposes, Tzedek chronicles the courage and decency of 36 "Oskar Schindlers." But unlike Schindler, whose now-famous story was magically transformed into an Oscar-winning film by Steven Spielberg, the people in Halter's movie are virtual unknowns.

There is Berthold Beitz, the German who saved 800 Jews; Zaineba Hardaga, the Bosnian Muslim who saved 10 Jews; Irena Sendler, the Pole who saved 2,500 Jews; Senpo Sugihara, the Japanese diplomat who saved 3,600 Jews; and Giorgio Perlasca, the Italian who saved 5,200 Jews.

Halter, who was born in Warsaw in 1936, made Tzedek after a lukewarm reaction by French high school students to a lecture he had delivered on the Holocaust.

"I left with the feeling that I had irritated them," said Halter, whose family escaped to the Soviet Union during World War II. "My story was too heavy for them."

After mulling over the matter, Halter concluded that he had alienated his listeners because he had dwelled exclusively on the negative dimension of the Holocaust.

He decided that it was just as important to single out and honor those who had risked their lives and that of their families to assist Jews in their hour of need.

Some of Halter's Jewish friends disagreed. "They said that since the discussion on the 'evil' of the Holocaust hasn't been finished, it was premature to discuss the 'good.' "

Marek Halter

He spent the first three years on research. "I contacted a group of historians, who helped me track down the 36 righteous gentiles."

In all, Halter talked with 202 such persons, eliminating repetitious interviews. A few of his subjects declined to be interviewed. "They were modest heroes. Some had even refused medals from Yad Vashem" (the Holocaust memorial-cum-museum in Jerusalem).

Halter persisted, convincing all but three of his reluctant interlocutors to cooperate.

He says that none of the interviewees accepted money in exchange for their altruism. "Those who did are not really righteous gentiles."

As he delved deeper into the topic, Halter discovered that the righteous gentiles fell into three categories.

"They were motivated by three reasons. The first was religious belief. They would say, 'I did it for God.' The second was a form of resistance against the Germans. The third was basic decency.

"The majority," he adds, "were simple people, not intellectuals. And about half had had Jewish friends before the war."

Tzedek changed Halter, who is not averse to self-promotion. "I discovered the meaning of modesty. It was a very beautiful lesson."

To those who may criticize him for accentuating the positive, Halter has a ready answer.

As he puts it in a press release: "I am, I believe, better placed than most to know to what levels of ignominy the people of Europe could sink to at that time. But I am just as insistent that we remember that even during those years of abomination and extreme distress there were those men and women who allowed us not to despair of humanity."

Halter, who is best known for his 1983 novel, The Book of Abraham, a saga covering the life of a Jewish family over 2,000 years, says that Tzedek will open its commercial run in Europe at the end of November.

A release date for North America has yet to be fixed.

However, Tzedek was screened at the Israel Film Festival in Haifa late last month.

As well, a book version, entitled Tzedek — The Righteous, will be published in French next February in Paris. An English edition will appear several months later.

Fine balancing act

Once, Halter would have agreed with them. "I did not immediately like Schindler's List," he explains. "I thought it was too early for such a film. As the philosopher Walter Benjamin wrote, 'After Auschwitz, poetry is impossible.' "

But after thinking about it further, Halter reassessed his opinion, coming to the conclusion that Schindler's List was in fact a fine balancing act between good and evil.

And so Halter disregarded the advice proffered by his friends and embarked on a journey of discovery.

By RABBI IRA S. GRUSSGOTT

This week's Torah reading features two main episodes: The Flood and the Tower of Babel. From a literary point of view they pose a problem. If God wanted to destroy the world, why employ water as the medium? After all water is symbolic of life — mayim hayim.

In literature destruction can more effectively be conveyed through the media of fire and brimstone. Wouldn't fire be a more effective medium to employ here? Similarly, if the message of the episode of the Tower of Babel would have us reflect upon the consequences of disunity, confusion, conflict and chaos, why employ a tower to symbolize such a state? A tower is seen as a symbol of strength and cohesion. Would not the story's theme of conflict and chaos be better expressed via the bulding of a cave underground or a fence or a wall around the city?

Perhaps the inappropriate media convey a message in themselves. By pairing destruction with water and strife with a tower, the Torah teaches us something basic about evil. It tells us corruption can come clothed in righteousness, and sin can take on the trappings of virtue.

To be sure evil existed before The Flood. Indeed it came with the first man, Adam, who disobeyed God. But when Adam disobeyed God at least he was ashamed and in the aftermath of his disobedience he hid. When Cain killed his brother he disavowed the act at first and then he offered an excuse. However lame, at least he had an innate understanding of right and wrong.

No such understanding existed in the generation of Noah. Man had "progressed" from shame to denial to rationalization to justification. He had learned to overlay his evil acts with the symbols of virtue and trappings of piety. When society in Noah's day reached that point, a "moral mabul" ensued. "And the earth was filled with violence." (Gen. 6:11)

Today's world is filled with violence of the same sort as that exhibited by the "flood and tower generation" of old.

Perhaps the message of this week's Torah portion with its inversion of symbols (water as the vehicle of destruction rather than life and the tower as the setting for chaos rather than unity) is an effective rejoinder to Marshall McLuhan's observation that "the medium is the message."

There is always the danger of the medium obscuring the message. This is best illustrated by the story of the sailor who stepped ashore every morning to set his watch by the clock on the tower of the local bank. One day the banker stepped outside the bank to ask him why. "Well," said the sailor, "I am the man who sounds the noon siren on my ship and I want to be sure it is the correct time." "That's strange," said the banker, "I set the clock on the tower by that siren each day."

No McLuhan, the medium can not be the message and we will guard against those who misuse any medium, who would stir up the "still waters." Instead we shall be guided by the message of our Torah which transcend any media however misused. Only then can we expect its message to serve as "mayanei hayeshua" waters of salvation and "migdalei oz" — towers of strength.

Jerusalem Post Foreign Service

JERUSALEM — Jordan renounced its religious links to Judea, Samaria, and Gaza last Tuesday in a move apparently aimed at avoiding further bickering with the PLO. But Amman retained its religious claims to Jerusalem.

A four-page statement issued by the government in Amman said Jordan was also dismissing hundreds of employees working at nearly 40 religious sites in the territories.

The statement, read on national television, stressed that Jordan will continue to "support the Palestinians by all means and ways and will not allow any side to harm the deep-rooted relations between the Palestinian and Jordanian people."

It said the decision was in accordance with instructions from King Hussein. However, Hussein maintained his guardianship of Muslim holy sites in the territories and Jerusalem.

Over the years, Jordan has spent millions of dollars for the upkeep of holy shrines scattered around the territories and Jerusalem. Officials say the kingdom spends $9 million (U.S.) annually for the maintenance of shrines and employees' salaries.

The Jordanian statement, quoting the king, said: "There have been attempts by some employees of the Palestine National Authority to create a conflict with the kingdom over its historic role which preserved the Arab and Moslem holy sites in the occupied territories."

It said those included the "harassment" of Jordanian employees working for Islamic shrines and taking unilateral decisions, sidestepping Jordan's religious claims to the territories.

"His Majesty ordered the council of ministers to take all necessary measures which ensure an end to all attempts aimed at creating a conflict with the kingdom and that all these decisions should not in any sense affect the brotherly relations between the Jordanian and the Palestinian people," it said.

The statement said Jordan decided to maintain legal and administrative responsibility over religious sites and courts in Jerusalem.

In Jericho, the PA's Islamic affairs minister welcomed the decision. "I think it's a good step in the right direction," Minister Hassan Tahboub told the Associated Press.

"If Israel disengaged itself from several departments in the West Bank, why not Jordan? It seems that King Hussein has realized that the Palestinians must take care of their own affairs, like any other country in the world," he said.

Last month, PLO leader Yasser Arafat named Tahboub as minister of Islamic affairs, a move seen as an open challenge to Jordan, whose Wakf (Islamic Trust) runs dozens of Muslim sites in the territories and Jerusalem.

Tahboub said he is confident the dispute over Jerusalem could be settled, and hinted that the Palestinians would not insist on exclusive control.

"Jerusalem is for all Muslims and we cannot ban any Muslim from claiming his right to Jerusalem," he said. "The Palestinian National Authority will discuss the issue with its Jordanian brothers, and we are sure that we will come to a conclusion that will satisfy everybody."

Front Line

Goodbye, and thank you all

By PATRICIA RUCKER
CJN Editor-in-chief

Saying goodbye is always hard to do. And this goodbye, to the more than 150,000 readers of The Canadian Jewish News across Canada, in Israel and in corners of the Diaspora I never dreamed we reached until I received your letters, is especially hard to do.

Over more than 20 years, as a freelance writer (1972-76), as a reporter (1983-86) and as editor (1989-94), The CJN has been a part of my life, and as they will attest, a part of my family's. The births of our sons, Simon and Joshua, (now 21 and 18) were announced by Miriam Herman in her What's New column; our daughter Elizabeth wrote her first words at The CJN on the battered manual typewriter of our beloved editor Ralph Hyman, z'l, while he instructed her mother on the finer points of getting the story right; Liz came back 19 years later to write the year-end news roundup on her mother's computer.

In a very real way, this newspaper, its readers and advertisers, its directors, members of the Montreal and Toronto advisory boards, its staff, especially my predecessor Maurice Lucow, and writers, and the myriad of people involved with the community it serves, have become mishpachah, family.

As I write this final column, I cannot help thinking about what it means to be a part of that family, the family of the Jewish people and of those who, while not Jewish, care about our fate — and of how that has informed my sense of what role The Canadian Jewish News plays in promoting the welfare and security and the values of that worldwide family.

We are a very diverse people; we speak many languages, live in many different countries and hold widely divergent political beliefs. We identify ourselves as Jews in many different ways, and express that identification in a variety of forms. Like any family, we fight among ourselves. But we are bound to each other by ties of history, faith and culture that have survived millennia of persecution and dispersion. In spite of our differences, any threat to the survival of our family unites us.

The Canadian Jewish News has always sought to reflect our diversity in a way that made it clear that we are united on one issue: we will not tolerate any threat to our survival. As our mission statement phrases it: we are "an independent newspaper dedicated to the well-being of the Jewish community. Our mandate is to provide information and informed commentary on the issues and events that concern members of the Jewish community in Canada, as Canadians and as Jews." It continues: "We insist on respect for Jews as individuals and as members of a worldwide community, which includes, as a major focus, the State of Israel."

The point of greatest tension in Jewish journalism is the point at which the words "information" and, on the other side, "well-being" and "respect" balance. Every one of our readers can, I am sure, find an example where she or he believes that the information we published conflicted with the well-being of the Jewish community or the insistence on respect for Jews; and every reader can also find an example where he or she believes that we were too timid, for fear of causing disrespect, or harming the welfare of the Jewish people.

It is a very fine and difficult balance to achieve, and each one of us who practises Jewish journalism lives with the knowledge that we are inevitably off balance, to one side or the other, in the opinion of at least half of our readers.

What keeps us going is the passion that underlies both the criticism and the praise we receive. We are writing about and for a community that cares. As I look back over the issues that have provoked the greatest response during the past five years, every one of them was an issue of fundamental importance to the survival and well-being of the Jewish people: the Gulf War, the peace process, the exodus of Soviet and Ethiopian Jewry and the ongoing efforts to complete the rescue of Syrian Jewry; and in Canada, intermarriage and assimilation, and the future of Quebec Jewry.

This list is hardly exhaustive, and omits some issues to which, during the past five years, I have tried to give a higher profile: AIDS in the Jewish community; women's issues, including family violence and the plight of agunot; poverty among Jews, particularly elderly women. If I have any regrets, it is that these issues have not provoked the same breadth of response across the community as the more familiar concerns. My successor will find much to do, and a dedicated professional staff to help in the task.

But now is not a time for regrets. As I take up my new position as a member of the Immigration and Refugee Board, a position of great responsibility for the lives and welfare of others, I know that I have learned much from a community that has not forgotten that decades ago, because this country did not have a moral refugee policy, so many of our people were denied refuge on these shores. I have learned much from those who, because they cannot forget that, seek justice and practise compassion; who have built a strong and caring community; who defend the right of Jews and non-Jews alike to live free from persecution and oppression; and who live their lives according to the words of Rabbi Hillel:

"If I am not for myself, then who will be for me? But if I am only for myself, then what am I?"

Thank you all.

We can love each other despite differences

By RABBI NACHUM BRAVERMAN

I found myself recently seated beside a stranger at a banquet. He turned, saw I was wearing a yarmulke and said to me, "I hate Orthodox Jews." This is called sinat hinam, unprovoked hatred.

The Talmud records that sinat hinam was the principal cause behind the destruction of the Second Temple. Bitter factional struggles and petty individual vindictiveness destroyed the cohesion of the Jewish Commonwealth, condemning the Jews to 2,000 years of exile. Even when the Romans had besieged Jerusalem and total disaster was imminent, hostile groups within the city fought among themselves and plundered stores of food, causing terrible famine.

Today, as then, we face a great crisis of survival. Today, as then, our response is often self-destructive. In 1983 Steve Huberman reported to the Federation Council of Los Angeles that only 25 per cent of local Jews affiliated with the Jewish community. The remaining 75 per cent didn't contribute to the federation, belong to a synagogue or Jewish organization of any kind.

Statistics compiled by the Harvard Centre for Population Studies and reported in the American Jewish Year Book indicate that if intermarriage continues at its current rate of 50 per cent, five million Jews will disappear in the next 50 years. This is the overwhelming crisis of Jewish life. It threatens the financial future of all Jewish organizations and jeopardizes American support for Israel as well. The bitter factionalization of the 25 per cent who do care and do affiliate makes any effective response nearly impossible.

Most Jews today have little connection with Israel and no intention of ever living there. They are indifferent to the issues which form the nexus of intra-Jewish strife. Religious pluralism in Israel, the Law of Return, the Jerusalem bus-stop dispute — for the majority of American Jews these are sectarian issues with all the immediacy of inter-religious violence in India. The majority have a simpler and more relevant question: Why be Jewish at all? We can't answer their question because we're too busy fighting among ourselves. We are bickering while the Temple burns.

We can't pretend we don't have differences. We differ greatly in our understanding of G-d and revelation, the authority of Torah and of Halachah. We can't finesse these issues away but we must remember we're in a time of great crisis. If we want the Jewish people to survive the next 50 years we'll have to put the sectarian issues aside. We simply don't have time to fight among ourselves.

Our differences don't mean we can't love and be committed to one another, learn together and work together for Jewish survival. Our differences don't mean the other side is less intelligent, less well motivated, or less desirous of truth than ourselves. Our differences mean we disagree. Men of goodwill can and must disagree about matters of great importance without questioning their love for or commitment to one another. Two people who learn together will battle passionately, says the Talmud, and end more passionately committed to their friendship because their disagreements express a common search for truth. If we can see our differences as the honest disagreements of intelligent, well-meaning men, we can work together to confront the issues which face us all.

Jewish law records the question of may one Jew take another's life to save his own (other than in self-defence). "No," responds the Talmud, because we can't judge another person, and can't possibly know which of the two is more precious to G-d. For true dialogue to begin we must assume our interlocutors are as Jewish as ourselves, as close to G-d as ourselves, as honest, intelligent, and well-intentioned as ourselves. All too often prejudice and mistrust interfere with this assumption.

The Talmud says in every generation in which the Temple is not rebuilt it is as though it has been destroyed. We have a chance still to reassert our unity and our common goals. We can reach out to the disaffected 75 per cent and together commit ourselves to Israel and the Jewish people. Let's seize that chance now before it's swept away and famine grips the city of Jerusalem once again.

Jewish people reclaiming Dead Sea Scrolls

By ARNOLD AGES

Since 1947, when the first group of the Dead Sea Scrolls were discovered by Bedouin shepherds in the Judean desert, those documents have been celebrated without being known.

Their celebrity was enhanced over the years by a trickle of revelations made to the press by a close-knit group of scholars who spent years painstakingly unravelling, decoding, deciphering and transcribing the Hebrew and Aramaic writings found in the caves at Qumran.

Some of the scrolls, of course, were fairly easy to read. The biblical scrolls, even those with versions slightly at variance with the traditional Masoretic text — Vayikhal instead of Vayelekh in Deuteronomy 31:1 — were eminently readable.

Anyone who has had an opportunity to see photographs of some of the other materials from Qumran — non-canonical texts and manuals exclusive to the inhabitants of the desert community — will have noticed not only a sometimes esoteric vocabulary but numerous words and sentences which have faded from the leather scrolls through the ravages of time.

It is in this context that one can appreciate and understand the yeoman's work which went into the reconstructing of the original Hebrew and Aramaic of many of the documents. This is the kind of paleographical enterprise that cannot be hurried.

There is, however, a reasonable limit to this kind of work and 47 years does seem to be an adequate time span for the completion of such tasks. Had it not been for the exertions of a number of American and European scholars, however, it is doubtful that the full texts of the scrolls would be available even today.

Perhaps the most disquieting aspect of the scrolls story lies, not in the length of time it has taken to reproduce them for scholarly exploration, nor in the heated debate on the identification of the community which established itself in the Judean desert, but in the nature of the team which worked on them for the first 20 years.

This is not at all a trivial consideration, because all the speculation about the nature of the non canonical treaties at Qumran were shaped by the first group of scholars to whom the scrolls were entrusted. Their interpretations were the first to be communicated to the outside world.

Because of diverse factors — the 1947 Arab-Israel war being the most important — a library of documents written, copied, and transcribed by a group of Jewish pietists became the exclusive preserve of a coterie of Christian scholars (Catholic and Protestant).

There are uncomfortable parallels between the physical hijacking of the Dead Sea Scrolls and the spiritual hijacking of the Torah itself by Christian scholars over the centuries. Just as the Church formulated a Christian reading of the Torah, widely at variance with a Jewish understanding of that text, so the first members of the Dead Sea Scrolls research team left an indelibly Christian imprint on their analytical exercises.

Arnold Ages

It should be noted that Christians, or for that matter, any group, have the right to interpret the Torah in any fashion they wish. Again, it must be acknowledged that the Christian scholars who worked on the scrolls brought impeccable academic credentials to their work on the Hebrew and Aramaic documents at Qumran.

But their doctrinal biases filtered through their scholarship. Thus the impression often conveyed by them was that the Qumran community was a proto-Christian society with "baptismal" rites, communal dinners similar to the Last Supper and a "teacher of righteousness," who was a model for John the Baptist.

The Qumran community pictured by the first scholars was a kind of matrix from which early Christianity grew. It is not suprising that the Jewishness of the Qumran agglomeration was deemphasized when one takes into consideration the fact that one of the first leaders of the Dead Sea Scroll team gave an interview to the Jerusalem Post several years ago, in which he referred to Judaism in terms redolent of Louis Farrakhan.

Since 1967, when the Dead Sea Scrolls came into Israeli hands because of the imprudence of King Hussein in launching a war against Israel, the scrolls have maintained their celebrity but they have also become known. This is indoubtedly due, in part, to the fact that many Jewish scholars have become involved in editing and interpreting the scrolls.

In the last five years, scores of books have appeared detailing the richness of the Qumran trove and the huge number of manuscripts — not scores but hundreds — that were found. Now the scholarly debate ranges over the origin of the people who settled in Qumran and what their relationship was to other Jewish factions during the Second Temple period.

Now that these essentially Jewish documents are being read by Jewish scholars, certain aspects of the Qumran literature, hitherto ignored, have become the focus of scrutiny.

Thus documents of a halachic nature, that is to say, materials dealing with technical questions of Jewish law, as Lawrence H. Schiffman shows in his forth coming book, Reclaiming The Dead Sea Scrolls, are surfacing and are being subjected to methodical analysis. One prominent example is a discussion of water purity laws which preoccupied Qumran residents. Those same laws are addressed in Mishnaic sources.

The Dead Sea Scrolls, that precious legacy of a Jewish outpost in the Judean desert, are coming back to the Jewish people.

Lithuania's new policy

During World War II, when Lithuania was occupied by Nazi Germany, Lithuanian nationalists murdered thousands of Jews with the assent and cooperation of the Germans. In the process, one of the most illustrious Jewish communities in Europe was all but extinguished. Today, in sovereign Lithuania, the Jewish community, consisting of less than 6,000 persons, is but a shadow of its former self. "Lithuania," Gregory Kanovich — a noted Lithuanian Jewish writer — has said, "is a graveyard for Jews."

Until Lithuania regained its independence from the Soviet Union several years ago, the Holocaust was a subject of which few Lithuanians spoke, much less were aware. As in other Communist-dominated countries, the Holocaust was, for all practical purposes, a non-event. At memorials dedicated to the victims of the war, not a word was said of Jews who had been murdered by Germans and their local collaborators. Successive Lithuanian governments, taking their cue from Moscow and hard-line nationalists in Lithuania, silenced the unprecedented tragedy of the Jewish people.

Last month, in a startling reversal of policy, Lithuania publicly atoned for crimes some of its citizens perpetrated against Jews. In a television address, the prime minister, Adolfas Slezevicius, urged fellow Lithuanians to acknowledge and repent for this shameful chapter in their history.

As he put it: "During World War II, over 200,000 Lithuanian Jews were killed. Despite the fact that this holocaust was the realization of Nazi policies in our country, we should recognize that hundreds of Lithuanians took direct part in this genocide. This obliges us to repent and ask the Jewish people for forgiveness for the unjust suffering inflicted on our fellow citizens. I would also like to say that the government of Lithuania assumes responsibility for prosecuting those who participated in murder."

By any yardstick, the prime minister's speech is a welcome, albeit belated, admission of reality. And Lithuania should be commended for it. However, as the Simon Wiesenthal Center correctly points out, the speech is marred by two inaccuracies.

The first is that thousands, not merely hundreds, of Lithuanians have blood on their hands. Facts should not be distorted, if only for the sake of the future generation. The second is that Lithuania's efforts to extradite Lithuanian war criminals have fallen far short of the mark.

In this respect, Lithuania can make amends by extraditing Aleksandras Lileikis, a wartime policeman living in the United States who has been accused by U.S. federal prosecutors of handing over Jews to the Germans from 1941 to 1944.

Lithuania's response to this case may well be a clue to its overall attitude toward the Holocaust.

Saudi fundamentalists

Saudi Arabia has never been in the vanguard of progressive Arab states. In the last half century it has been a militant supporter of terrorism against Israel, a major proponent and backer of the Arab League Boycott Office and a promoter of the most rigid kind of Islam, Wahhabism.

These factors have not prevented Riyadh from becoming a target of an aspect of revitalized Islam that has become known as fundamentalism. On several different occasions since 1926, Saudi rulers have had to contend with outbursts of Islamic fundamentalism that have threatened the stability of the Saudi authorities.

In 1979, 300 militant Muslims used the occasion of the annual pilgrimage to Mecca, Islam's holiest shrine, to take over the main mosque in the city. It took police over two weeks to overcome the extremists and their supporters with many casualties on both sides.

In the last several months Saudi Arabia has been relatively free of the fundamentalist violence which has become murderously commonplace in Algeria, Sudan and Egypt. However, the United Nations conference on population in Cairo triggered a number of confrontations between Saudi fundamentlists and the government.

The activities of Muslim militants in Saudi Arabia have nothing to do with the purity of Islam since Riyadh, as the protector of Mecca and site of the annual Haj (pilgrimage) has always encouraged the most Orthodox and puritanical form of that faith. What is at stake here is simple political power as fundamentalists seek to subvert any government which in their eyes, does not operate according to their understanding of the tenets of the Muslim religion.

In this context one can only commiserate with the Saudi authorities as they attempt to rein in those violent elements within Islamic society that seek to destabilize politically existing governments. In the last decade the Middle East has begun to reach a modicum of political equilibrium with the PLO-Israel accords and the new realism of Jordan and Syria.

It would be a shame if religious zealots were permitted to reverse such historic gains.

ISRAEL AND QUEBEC

(The story referred to here appeared in the Montreal edition Aug. 25. An English translation of the letter follows.)

Au sujet de l'article intitulé "Two Candidates vie for Outremont riding" dans l'édition du 25 août dernier, la question suivante de M. Cohen, "Comment pouvons-nous dire que le nationalisme des Juifs qui ont créé l'Etat d'Israël est sain et que celui du Québec ne l'est pas" est un autre exemple des nombreux commentaires insensés attribuables au Parti Québécois. Si on fait une comparaison directe, la différence fondamentale devient apparente.

Au Québec le "nationalisme" a été artificiellement "manufacturé" par des dissidents qui, malgré certaines lois façonées de manière à limiter la présence anglaise et ainsi à continuer à exiger la séparation du reste du Canada. Ce pays, dont l'histoire a débuté au 17ème siècle et qui est estimé dans le monde entier, a été construit par les efforts et le travail des gen qui sont venus de beaucoup de milieux différents (y inclus des Juifs), qui sont vigoureusement fédéralistes et qui demeurent convaincus que la séparation est malsaine pour le Québec et pour le Canada et, qu'il n'y a aucun besoin de nationalisme.

En s'alignant du côté de ceux qui sont déterminés à détruire ce pays, des Sépharades tels que Cohen et Elbaz, qui ont accepté de vivre au Canada, démontrent peu de considération et de compréhension des ramifications de cette élection. Leurs actes ne font que diminuer leur statut dans la communauté juive.

ENGLISH TRANSLATION

Re: the article entitled "Two Candidates vie for Outremont riding" in the August 25 issue, Mr. Cohen's question "How can we say the nationalism of Jews which created the State of Israel is healthy and that of Quebec is not?" is another of the many thoughtless comments attributed to the Parti Québécois. In a direct comparison, the fundamental difference is readily apparent.

Israel's "nationalism" was born spontaneously and naturally when the entire nation rejoiced at the collective successes in bringing vibrant life to the desert homeland. The oppressed and the survivors had clung to the last vestiges of hope for a new beginning and had indeed witnessed its realization. Thus the feeling of profound nationalism overtook the young nation completely.

In Quebec the "nationalism" was artificially "manufactured" by some dissidents, who, despite some tough laws designed to severely limit the English presence in the province, continued to push for separation from the rest of Canada. The country, whose history began in the 17th century, and which is held in high esteem throughout the world, was built by the efforts and labors of people of mixed and varied backgrounds (including Jews), who for the most part were and continue to be staunchly federalist and who remain steadfast in the opinion that separation is unhealthy for both Quebec and Canada and that there is no place for "nationalism" at all.

By aligning themselves on the side of those who are bent on tearing the country apart, Sephardi Jews like Cohen and Elbaz, who accepted the opportunity to live in Canada, have demonstrated little regard or understanding of the implications of this election, and their actions will certainly diminish their stature in the Jewish community.

WHAT THE BIBLE MEANT

The United Nations conference on population and development is held once a decade. This year it is being held in Cairo, Egypt.

The Talmud teaches that human life is not to be taken lightly. It says that a person's life is equivalent to a whole world. In Judaism, so much importance is given to human life and its proper development, that Maimonides ruled that a parent who fails to provide for the education and guidance of his or her child has no repentance, because it is impossible to rectify the misdeed.

Accordingly, Judaism believes that the responsibility for giving life and nurturing it rests with the individual. The Bible states: "And God created man in His image, in the image of God He created him, male and female He created them, and God blessed them and told them to be fruitful and multiply and fill the earth and master it . . ."

The command "be fruitful and multiply" must be understood in the context of the biblical sentence. Man is commanded to strive for the lofty image that God gave him. In this image, he is instructed to master the earth and to use his potential to multiply accordingly. This command was given equally to men and women and they are both obliged to fulfil it.

BERGEN-BELSEN SURVIVORS

Last year I made a trip to the concentration camp Bergen-Belsen, since it was there where my maternal grandmother perished and I considered it a visit to her grave even if it was a mass grave and one of many. Being a child survivor myself, this was important to me and my cousin, whose mother died there too, and as I found out, more than two months after liberation.

Needless to say this was a very emotional visit and I was surprised by the welcome and help we got in the Museum of Bergen-Belsen. Mr. Jurgens, a historian, gave us a personal tour and also took us to the cemetery, which is still on the military base of the English army. He also pointed out to me the very incomplete records he has and asked me if I could help publicize a plea for help in making these records as complete as possible. All those who know about people who perished in Bergen-Belsen, or were themselves inmates of Bergen-Belsen should write to Mr. A. Jurgens, Niedersaechsische Landeszentrale fuer Politische Bildung, Gedenkstaette Bergen-Belsen, 29303 Lohheide, Germany.

Hamilton

Mr. Jurgens writes: "The data so collected, will be the basis for a commemorative book, dedicated to all former prisoners of Bergen-Belsen. Even though the injustice which was inflicted onto these people is irreparable, their countless names can at least remain as a warning memory."

How easy it is to forget

By RABBI W. GUNTHER PLAUT

Between Rosh Hashanah and Yom Kippur I had the opportunity to attend a special conference in Ottawa called by Immigration Minister Sergio Marchi. There has been a lot of discussion around the country on whom we should admit to Canada, how many people we can accommodate each year, and how we can make sure that the people who finally do arrive are beneficial to Canada.

It took me a while to digest the impressions created by this high powered and often fascinating gathering, and since Sukkot was approaching it seemed particularly appropriate to put my thoughts in order. After all, Sukkot deals with people who were refugees from Egypt, looking for a land in which they could sink down their roots and taste life to the fullest. Unfortunately, they couldn't quite bring it off. They never had the chance to get out of their huts and tents; only their children were to have that opportunity.

Canada has about 29 million inhabitants today, and the immigration department sets an annual quota of how many people we want to take. Usually the figure is around one per cent, or about a quarter of a million people, consisting of immigrants and refugees.

The conference which I attended concerned itself exclusively with immigration, and with such specific issues as integration, jobs, cultural diversity, and acceptance by resident Canadians. In a long and interesting session we also considered the matter of prejudice against immigrants, and that especially struck home.

The majority of the delegates were favorably inclined toward the whole idea of immigration as a necessary growth factor for Canada. We are, after all, an immigrant country and the distinction we have achieved rests squarely on that fact. Everyone except the First Nations are latecomers. We Jews belong to that class, as does just about everyone else.

Having wandered across many continents through many centuries, and having tasted hospitality and rejection, friendship and enmity, we Jews longed to rest in our original home, just as the descendants of the Egyptian refugees did after 40 years in the desert. But until relatively recently the Promised Land was not available for mass migration, and so we looked elsewhere. In the United States and Canada Jews found societies that promised to treat them as residents and not as tolerated strangers.

It wasn't easy — in fact, for most Jewish immigrants it was very tough. But they labored away, making many sacrifices, so that their children might inherit the good life. God be thanked, most of them did in time.

But along with that came an ever-accelerating capacity for forgetting what their parents or grandparents had gone through. I have listened with some dismay as many otherwise enlightened and charitable people now speak of "them" — the recent immigrants — and call them pushy or lazy, unsuited to Canada, and harbingers of national dissolution and decay.

Just read these words over again: they are the same that were once said about us. We didn't fit here, so why didn't we go home? And if we decided to stay, we should keep quiet and keep out of the way of the "real Canadians."

I would not be surprised if some of my readers think the picture I paint is exaggerated. But I have heard these remarks often enough to realize that being stereotyped in the past is no protection against stereotyping others when the chance arises. In other words, we have forgotten how it was.

I am glad to say that at the Ottawa conference, many of the enlightened voices belonged to Jews, but I wondered how one could best bring their message back home. The one per cent addition to our Canadian population is a very small portion of the whole. As far as I am concerned, it is all for the good. Diversity is the spice of our life.

But of course, that by itself is not enough. There must also be a sense of national pride, that in this land it is possible to live out our earthly existence in as free a manner as possible. That is enough reason for being happy to belong to such a nation, which values law and decency as national characteristics.

In time, immigrants become part of this fabric, just as we did. Though we have forgotten much, I would like to think that somewhere deep down we still recall the biblical exhortation, "You shall befriend the stranger, for you yourselves were strangers once in the land of Egypt."

Yossi Beilin raises important issues

By RABBI REUVEN P. BULKA

It is the nature of most people to resist change, especially if things are comfortable as they are. Thus, "don't rock the boat," or "if it ain't broke, don't fix it," have become well-worn cliches to justify maintaining the status quo.

On the other hand, there are others who welcome change, who are eager, even over-eager to jump on the "it cannot go on like this anymore" bandwagon. These are people who are upset about the status quo, or sometimes upset about life.

When it is upset about life that is the motivation, the advocates for change are likely to want change even after the changes. These people are perpetual change-ists. Yes, even the Jewish community has change-ists.

When speaking of change in the Jewish community, the name Yossi Beilin springs to the fore. In fact, with all the divisions within the Jewish community, the most pervasive these days seems to be whether you are pro-Beilin or anti-Beilin.

Beilin has alienated many people in many ways. His political statements, especially his views on Jerusalem, have not endeared him to a significant segment of the Jewish community, in and outside Israel.

And his comments about the Jewish Agency and the World Zionist Organization have angered many outside Israel, and even many in Israel.

But it is his comments about Diaspora philanthrophy that have raised the anger level to fever pitch.

In line with the famous observation of the Maggid of Dubnow, that the real difference between the wise child and the deviant child at the Passover seder is not so much what they say but how they say it, Beilin could have used a bit more tact in conveying his message.

Thus, instead of saying to Jews outside Israel that "you should keep your money, we don't need it," or words to that effect, he could have opted for a more diplomatic statement, such as "we deeply appreciate all your efforts for Israel until now, but with the large crisis of assimilation outside Israel, we feel that it is more appropriate to use the monies you raise to save your Jews and your Jewish communities."

In defence of Beilin, had he been so polite, his may have been dismissed as just another politically correct message. As it is, his attention-grabbing method has certainly caused people to stand up and take notice, but it has also generated such a conclusive reaction that many people dismiss him and all he says.

That is unfortunate, because Beilin has much to say that deserves our serious attention. It would be wrong to throw out the Beilin with the bitter water that he prescribes.

No matter what we may think about Beilin's Beit Yisrael idea, or about his repudiation of the Jewish Agency and the World Zionist Organization, how can we not welcome his suggestion of a census of Jews in the Diaspora, to ensure that "basic social and cultural needs can be met by the Jewish community."

Beilin may have other things in mind with the information gleaned from the census, but the idea is sound. How can we effectively address the issue of assimilation if we do not know who is assimilating? How can we reach them if we do not know who they are, and where they are?

Who among those concerned about the future of Jewry outside Israel can honestly reject Beilin's idea that every Jewish teenager outside Israel be given a free voucher to be used between the ages of 17 and 18 (I suppose the age limits are not carved in stone) to visit Israel for a month?

The trip would be preceded by language and education preparation and would be structured so that the teens would work on a project of their own choosing in Israel, meet Israeli peers, and experience the many dimensions of Israel.

Who has come up with a better strategy for addressing the continuity (more accurately, the discontinuity) dilemma?

Beilin may have presented his proposal as a total package, but we need not accept it as such. The future of the Jewish Agency and the World Zionist Organization, and State of Israel Bonds, for that matter, are not pressing issues.

But Jewish attrition is a most pressing matter, and Beilin's solution is the most easily implemented, probably the least bureaucratic, definitely the most focused, unquestionably the strategy capable of reaching the largest percentage of the most critical segment of the Jewish community.

You need a routine to start the day

By ERICA MEYER RAUZIN

By the time my gang leaves the house at 8 a.m., I've been working for two solid hours, and I'm still in my housecoat. Follow along and I'll explain (warning: minors should not attempt this without adult supervision).

The alarm goes off at 6 a.m. I lift the 4-year-old from his midnight perch across my legs, get up and stagger toward the sink. I try to splash enough cold water on my face to shock my brain into functioning before I put on a robe and head for the kitchen.

The puppy, who has grown into a big, frisky 1-year-old toy boy who is always "on," awake and ready to party, twists himself into an affectionate frenzy of licking, yelping, and charging for the back door. I let him out, turn on National Public Radio (my best friend in the sunrise kitchen), and assess the situation.

My ability to cope with breakfast in the morning relates directly to how much coping I did the night before. If I was energized after dinner and did all the dishes, washed the counter tops, swept, and put the breakfast dishes on the table, life is wonderful, breakfast is just a matter of carrying out the cereal and fruit, and I can take it easy. This happens just often enough to keep me hopeful.

But, if I was pooped after dinner, left the dishes to soak, and didn't give breakfast a thought, then I am bamboozled before I begin. At that hour, I can stare at a stack of place mats for five minutes before my brain synapses connect with my arm, causing me to put them on the table (I guess it takes me that long to give up on the notion that they will levitate and fly there without my assistance).

The place mats are followed by the bowls (our 4-year-old wants the 101 Dalmatians bowl; our middle child wants her Little Mermaid bowl and her Beauty and the Beast spoon; our oldest won't eat breakfast no matter what flatware she gets). Then comes the cereal, the fruit, the milk, the sugar, the juice . . . every choice as individualized as three little people and one sleepy lawyer can be.

Erica Meyer Rauzin

With that array on the table, I evaluate the clock to see if, just possibly, I have time to put up a pot of coffee before I make school lunches (and an office lunch, too, for my husband). Each lunch, again, is as individual as the person who will — or won't — eat it.

With three kids at a Jewish day school, it goes without saying that the lunches have to be kosher. The school requests dairy lunches and sends an obvious-sort of little memo telling us that lunches should be balanced and healthful, packed with fiber and protein, and with no junk food, candy, cookies, and chips. In other words, don't pack anything kids will eat.

I do try to pack nutritionally sound lunches. This is a pointless exercise, because — although it is not "allowed" — the children swap stuff with their buddies in a blizzard of bargaining and hondeling that, by comparison, makes an Israeli open air market seem as staid as Tiffany's.

There are just not that many items, no matter how lovely they seem to me early in the morning, that still appeal to a small child, at room temperature, four hours later. Rather than eating the treats I pack, our middle daughter much prefers to trade away her granola bar for three cream-filled cookies and a playground draft choice to be named later.

My assembly line is a row of empty lunch boxes: a black plastic quonset hut-shaped model for my husband; a blue pouch with Barney on it for the 4-year-old; a pink lunch box with a matching thermos and Barbie logos for the 8-year-old; and a plain brown paper bag for the 11-year-old, who would not deign to open a Barney pouch or a Barbie box if they were stuffed with caviar and concealed three get-out-of-school-free passes.

Now for the contents: my husband wants a low fat, high fiber meal with representatives from each tier of the food pyramid. The pre-teen will either (1) eat nothing I pack, (2) eat everything I pack and complain that she was starving, or (3) hit up her father for pizza money.

The third grader will eat any sandwich I make, as long as it's cream cheese, any snack as long as its fruity yogurt, and any drink, as long as its apple juice. She's my best customer, not exciting, but easy to please.

And the little guy wants nothing but cereal or salty carbohydrates. At home, he eats only Cheerios and macaroni and cheese, sometimes together. At school, he eats only potato chips and an occasional peanut butter sandwich. His current diet has no known nutrients. This is not due to what I serve him — I hide zucchini in the cheese sauce and load up his cereal with fresh fruit — it is due to what he consumes, which is limited to starch and orange cheese. He gives the fruit and veggies to the dog (who, being too young to know that dogs don't eat broccoli and peaches, eats them with relish). If it wasn't for vitamin tablets, my son would have rickets, scurvy, and premature baldness, but my dog is healthy.

First envoy to Israel looks back

By SHELDON KIRSHNER

It is customary for a foreign ambassador in Israel to present his/her credentials to Israel's president. It's a time-honored ceremony which causes barely a ripple.

Yet when Rolf Pauls presented his credentials to Zalman Shazar in August 1965, the event unleashed a tidal wave of of anger and angst.

"I wasn't nervous," he recalled in an interview. "I was prepared for everything."

Pauls, who turns 80 this year, was Germany's first ambassador to Israel, a position that required sensitivity, tact, a clean record and thick skin.

When he arrived in Tel Aviv to take up his post, only two decades had elapsed since the ignominious collapse of the Third Reich. He was therefore not surprised that some Israelis were less than thrilled to see a German ambassador in the Jewish state.

Israel and West Germany had established formal diplomatic relations on May 12, 1965, 15 years after the first formal talks between Israel and West Germany in Istanbul.

Pauls — a war veteran and a seasoned diplomat who bears a passing resemblance to the Hollywood actor Jimmy Stewart — was chosen as his country's first envoy to Israel for at least two reasons. He had dealt with Jewish and Israeli affairs and had played an integral role in the negotiations which culminated in the formal establishment of diplomatic relations between Bonn and Jerusalem.

As a diplomat, Pauls was initially exposed to these issues when he was posted to Washington as a counsellor for political affairs. There, he forged links with Abba Eban, then Israel's envoy to the United States, and with American Jewish leaders.

Subsequently, as a Bonn-based official in charge of fostering trade with overseas countries, Pauls worked on improving incipient German-Israeli relations.

In 1952, West Germany and Israel had signed a reparations agreement under which Holocaust survivors would receive restitution payments. Shortly afterward, an Israeli mission was opened in Bonn to implement the accord. In view of the vehement opposition, there was not a reciprocal German mission in Israel. Nevertheless, German-Israeli commercial relations grew.

In 1960, Chancellor Konrad Adenauer and Prime Minister David Ben-Gurion met in an historic encounter in New York City. Five years later, Adenauer's successor, Ludwig Erhard, suggested that official diplomatic relations be established, and Israel accepted the offer. Pauls and another German diplomat went to Israel to hammer out the details. Their interlocutors were Shimon Peres, the deputy defence minister, and Zev Shek of the Foreign Ministry.

Within about a week, an agreement was reached. But the big, unanswered question was how the Israeli public would react to the presence of a German ambassador. "It was, of course, Israel's problem," said Pauls.

Early in August, he settled into his office at the West German embassy on the fourth floor of the Sheraton Hotel in Tel Aviv. The embassy had a staff of nine diplomats, supported by 11 local workers.

To welcome Pauls to Israel, Menachem Begin — the leader of the right-wing Herut party and a Polish-born Holocaust survivor — organized an anti-German demonstration in front of the Sheraton. "Begin spoke very eloquently, though I didn't understand his speech," noted Pauls. "I read about it in the newspaper."

The public response was not entirely hostile. The morning after Begin's diatribe, a bouquet of flowers, with a card from an anonymous sender wishing Pauls all the best, was delivered to the embassy.

Four days later, on Aug. 11, Pauls presented his credentials to Shazar amid still more anti-German demonstrations. Not long afterward, Pauls' wife and 10-year-old son joined him in Israel. They lived in a cottage in Herzilya Pituach, a ritzy suburb of Tel Aviv.

* *

Pauls was born in eastern Friesland, close to the Dutch border, the son of a Protestant clergyman. The Pauls were a family of landowners and seafarers, but he joined the army when he was 20. He fought with the Wehrmacht in France and in the Soviet Union, where he lost an arm near Smolensk.

Released from hospital, he was sent to Turkey — a neutral country — as a military attache. He was then a general staff officer in Germany, Italy and, finally, France.

Politically, Pauls was a conservative, and was never a member of a Nazi organization. Although he was not involved in the July 1944 plot to assassinate Hitler, he was associated with a senior officer who took part in the failed conspiracy.

After the war, in a U.S. prisoner-of-war camp, Pauls read about the Holocaust for the first time in Stars and Stripes, the American armed forces' publication.

"I was shocked," he said. "I felt ashamed to be a German."

As for the long string of German anti-Semitic laws which preceded the Holocaust, Pauls can only say they were "illegal and inhuman."

Released from captivity, Pauls studied law at the University of Hamburg. In 1948, he began working for the Parliamentary Council in Bonn, which drafted West Germany's constitution. That job finished, he joined the Federal Chancellery, which became the Foreign Ministry.

On his first assignment, Pauls was posted to Luxembourg, where talks on reparation payments to Holocaust survivors were taking place. There, he met Nachum Goldmann, the director of the World Jewish Congress. Their friendship lasted until Goldmann's death in 1982.

As Germany's ambassador to Israel, Pauls worked tirelessly to promote bilateral ties. He tried to learn Hebrew, "but I didn't get very far." He mastered a few phrases which he has since forgotten.

Looking back at his ambassadorship in Tel Aviv, Pauls said he was impressed with Israel as a nation. "There was such an enormous concentration of energy in all fields.".

There were difficult moments, such as when he met Holocaust survivors and listened to their harrowing stories, which he describes as "depressing and heart-breaking."

During the course of his three-year tour, he received his share of unpleasant letters, but Pauls prefers to accentuate the positive. "I met people who couldn't be nicer and more helpful. And then I heard they had lost parents and relatives (in the Holocaust), and this was deeply moving."

He remains grateful to the Israeli government for having helped him acclimatize himself to the country. "The government did all it could to make things easier for us."

Pauls had a good working relationship with David Ben-Gurion, who resigned as prime minister shortly before his arrival; David HaCohen, the chair of the Knesset foreign affairs and defence committee; and Moshe Dayan, the former chief of staff who was named defence minister on the eve of the 1967 Six Day War.

During the war, on Dayan's express instructions, Pauls was given a top-level military briefing by one of his aides, Aharon Yariv, who had been director of military intelligence. "So I had very good information on the war."

Pauls left Israel in the summer of 1968, having been appointed ambassador to the United States. When his tour of duty in Washington ended in 1976, he was named the envoy in China. Pauls capped his career as the ambassador to the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO). He retired from the foreign service in 1980.

For the past 14 years, he and his wife have returned to Israel about once every other year on two-week vacations for reunions with old friends. "The great pity is that some of them have died. We are getting old."

The Pauls live in a spacious cottage, filled with Oriental carpets, in Gielgen, which is on the right bank of the Rhine River and about seven kilometres from Bonn.

They have three sons. One is a banker whose PhD dissertation was on the industrialization of kibbutzim. Their oldest son, a diplomat in Germany's Washington embassy, worked at Sde Boker — Ben-Gurion's kibbutz in the Negev — as a student. The third son is an actor in Hamburg.

Pauls expressed optimism about the current peace process in the Middle East. Asked whether Israel should withdraw from the territories, he replied: "It's up to the parties. One shouldn't give advice prematurely."

However, he added, "The Arabs of the occupied areas will be too heavy a burden for Israel. In the long run, cooperation is better and less expensive than occupation."

As for Jewish settlements in the territories, Pauls believes Israel erred in building them. Far too many troops are needed to defend them, and they limit the army's mobility, he explained.

The Holocaust, he observed, must never be forgotten. "We have to continue our intensive cooperation so as to remember what happened and to try to help each other," he said, referring to Germany and Israel.

He condemns German right-wing extremists as "a completely crazy, small minority" who should be considered dangerous because of their ability to mount violent attacks on their targets.

But Pauls is confident that the government can contain these radicals and that Germany will not go the way of the doomed Weimar Republic.

The Jewish World

By SHELDON KIRSHNER

The Washington Post is one of America's finest newspapers. Like the New York Times, it is owned by a family of Jewish background. Eugene Meyer, a Wall Street millionaire turned public servant, bought it in 1933. His daughter, Katharine Graham, inherited the daily and, after her husband's untimely death in the 1960s, she assumed the mantle of publisher.

She built it into a great newspaper and the Washington Post Company into one of the biggest media conglomerates in the United States. Today, she is one of the wealthiest women in the world, worth some $500 million.

Carol Felsenthal chronicles her life and career in Power, Privilege and the Post (G.P. Putnam, $38.95), a fascinating, gossipy and unauthorized glimpse into a most powerful clan.

Katharine Meyer Graham's father was the scion of a French rabbinical family from Alsace. Eugene Meyer bought a seat on the New York Stock Exchange when he was 25 and parlayed it into a fortune in copper, steel, motorcars and chemicals. At the age of 57, he bought the bankrupt Washington Post, a then mediocre newspaper.

As Felsenthal suggests, Meyer was a rank opportunist and an ardent assimilationist. Bouts with anti-Semitism had left him with the determination to downplay his Jewishness and to marry out of the faith. He married Agnes Ernst, a Lutheran of German ancestry, in her home in the Bronx. The ceremony was conducted by a Lutheran pastor. Felsenthal is silent as to whether Meyer actually converted to Christianity.

Because of his profound ambivalence to his Jewishness, Meyer remained cool to Zionism. And, Felsenthal adds, he resisted entreaties from Zionist friends like Louis Brandeis and Felix Frankfurter to take up the cause, financially at least, of a homeland for the Jewish people.

Katharine, known as Kay to her friends, was not raised as a Jew. Somebody at Vassar, her alma mater, apparently once asked her how it felt to be Jewish. According to Felsenthal, the question seems to have surprised her.

In 1940, she wed Phil Graham, a Florida farmer's son who had graduated from Harvard with distinction and who had been a clerk to a U.S. Supreme Court justice. Like her parents, they were married in a Luthern ceremony.

By all accounts, Phil Graham was a brilliant, though unstable, personality, prone to anti-Semitic outpourings which intensified as he grew older. As his mental health deteriorated, Graham's anti-Semitic outbursts turned into regular harangues. He would call Eugene Meyer a "kike" to his face. He would say, "Well, that's a kike for you," when he was angry. He would call his wife a "dirty Jew" and play the Nazi Horst Wessel song to her. In jest, he remarked of his own daughter, "Pretty bright for a little Jewish girl."

These are not the only unsettling revelations in this most readable of books. After Eugene Meyer died in 1959, the Washington Post's obituary never once mentioned his Jewish roots. And the funeral service was conducted at a Unitarian church. At whose behest? This remains unclear. But Felsenthal claims that his widow had mixed feelings about her husband's Jewish origin.

Five years after his death, she endowed a medical research centre at the Hebrew University in Jerusalem in his memory. Had he become a Zionist in his old age? Felsenthal doesn't address this matter.

However, she claims that Agnes Meyer possessed an ugly anti-Semitic streak. "She regretted that her children and their children would never escape their Jewish blood," Felsenthal writes. And she was not happy when her youngest daughter married a Jew.

This uneasiness appears to have rubbed off on Katharine Graham. "A Jew who looked right, talked right and acted right — who was, in other words, 'presentable ' — would be perfectly acceptable to her." But, Felsenthal notes, Graham "had no tolerance for people who were 'too Jewish.' "

TORONTO — Award-winning photographer Edward Serotta will be touring Canada with a collection of his latest photos depicting the plight of the Jewish population of Sarajevo.

The moving images in Survival in Sarajevo describe the efforts of the Joint Distribution Committee (JDC) to assist Bosnia's besieged Jewish community. This effort was extended to Bosnia's endangered Christians and Muslims as well.

There is the 77-year-old Muslim woman, Zeyneba Hardaga, who lived in Sarajevo and hid a Jewish man during the Nazi occupation. Recognized by Israel as a Righteous Gentile (the first Muslim ever to receive the honor), she refused to accept Israel's rescue offer until her entire family was allowed to emigrate with her to Israel. She and her family now live in Israel.

Another of Serotta's favorite subjects is Denis Karalic, a 13-year-old Muslim who appears in a series of photos, working for the Jewish community, being treated for a wound received in a mortar attack, crying on a bus about to leave Sarajevo, and finally arriving in Israel.

In October, Serotta will be travelling to six Canadian cities where he will be lecturing and exhibiting his photographs. He will also be screening a new video containing selected images from his collection.

Serotta has photographed for Time Magazine, the New York Times, the Washington Post. His work may be found in the collections of various museums throughout the world.

Serotta's Canadian tour is sponsored by the United Jewish Appeal, Combined Jewish Appeal, and the United Israel Appeal. A portion of the funds donated to these organizations assist the JDC in its efforts to rescue Jews in endangered communities.

He is scheduled to speak in Montreal Oct. 11. For further information contact your local Jewish Federation or UIA Canada, (416) 636-7655.

Old bowlers keep going

The Judean Benevolent Friendly Society, which registered its first five-two split back in 1919, has openings for recreational bowlers of all skill levels and ages.

The bowling league started on Trolley Street in downtown Toronto and it has followed the northward migration of the Jewish community, said spokesman Avery Matlow. Participants now bowl out of York Bowl on Wilson near Dufferin.

The league currently has 11 members, down from its heyday of 150 bowlers in its early years. The membership is hoping to revitalize the league and is calling on any interested bowlers along with past members and their children and grandchildren to continue the tradition, Matlow said.

"We're friendly people who get along well and everyone gets a fair shake," he said.

The league gets together every Sunday from 10:15 to 11:45 a.m.

For more information, call Matlow at (416) 667-1150.

Gluskin, Sheff make an artistic investment

By BILL GLADSTONE
Special to The CJN

TORONTO — Ira Gluskin and Gerry Sheff gave the Art Gallery of Ontario $1 million to bring the Barnes Foundation collection of impressionist and post-impressionist paintings to Toronto not because they are lovers of art, they say, but because they sensed right away that it would be a winning investment.

"We were looking for something big, and then the Barnes came along, and we knew it would be spectacular," says Gluskin. "There are moments and rare opportunities in life, and when they come your way, you just have to seize them."

Gluskin and Sheff are the principals of the 10-year-old Toronto investment management firm Gluskin Sheff & Associates Ltd. The company requires a minimum investment of $1 million from clients, manages more than $1 billion for high net-worth individuals, institutions and charitable foundations, and earned about $15 million in profits last year.

"We have an excellent track record," says Sheff. "We manage money only on a performance basis. So if we've done very well for our clients, we do very well for ourselves, and we get to do what we've done for the Art Gallery of Ontario."

Since their decision to become corporate sponsors of the Barnes exhibit, Gluskin and Sheff have also earned an extraordinary amount of media attention. They have been the subject of recent profiles in Toronto Life and other magazines, Toronto's three daily newspapers, and on TVO, CBC and other television networks.

Gluskin penned an article recently for the Toronto Star in which he explained why his company made this extraordinarily generous gesture to the arts establishment and the wider community. "It was our judgment six months ago that the Barnes would be the equivalent of a winning Stanley Cup team," he wrote, "and we wanted our firm to be associated with a winner."

The Barnes collection, which consists of about 80 paintings by Renoir, Matisse, Cezanne, Toulouse-Lautrec, Picasso, van Gogh, Monet, Manet, Seurat, Rousseau, Modigliani, Braque and other impressionists, has also been the focus of intense media attention, the fiduciary duo note.

"If you go down to the Y, you'll meet some guys who know nothing except racquetball, but even they will know about the Barnes collection, and their wives will be dragging them to go see it," Sheff comments.

In mid-September, Gluskin Sheff hosted a gala opening party at the Art Gallery which was attended by about 1,700 people, mostly business associates, friends of the AGO, and dignitaries. Gluskin and Sheff enjoyed themselves immensely, but were chagrined that the media reported that most of those in attendance were family and friends.

"We invited only a tiny list of friends and relatives to the party," says Gluskin. "Meanwhile, every guy I went to Hebrew school with 42 years ago has called me to complain, 'What kind of rotten guy are you by omitting my name from your list?' "

"I'm irritated," adds Sheff, jokingly. "Why should someone I haven't seen in 27 years be saying what an ingrate I am by forgetting him?"

After the party, hundreds of people who had attended wrote or phoned with thanks and comments, says Gluskin.

"There was a common denominator to many of the letters," he says. "In almost every instance, people seemed to be seeing this as a return of optimism. The party seemed to signal that the recession is over — that we can afford to stand up now; we don't have to hide our head anymore. That's what people are saying."

Both Gluskin, who grew up in Toronto, and Sheff, who comes from Montreal, are longtime philanthropic supporters of the Jewish community. "As our business has done well, we've become big supporters of the UJA and any other Jewish cause known to mankind," Gluskin divulges.

They are also active volunteers within the community. Sheff has been chair of two regional UJA campaigns in years past, and Gluskin, along with Avi Bennett, is heading up a delegation from Toronto's Jewish community that plans to visit key personnel in the U.S. State Department in Washington this year.

Although Gluskin and Sheff are careful not to present themselves as art connoisseurs, in fact their firm has amassed an impressive art collection.

"We bought our first work of art within three months of opening our doors 10 years ago," says Sheff. "We've always put importance on adding visual quality to our office."

Investment counsellor Alan Schwartz, who joined the firm about five years ago, has put his own stamp on the collection, steering it exclusively towards contemporary Canadian art.

"But don't you see? Our interest or lack of interest in art is entirely irrelevant," Sheff insists. "Back in February, when we decided to sponsor this exhibit, we understood even then that it was going to be a commercial success — one of the biggest successes ever to hit Ontario — and that's precisely what we wanted."

Senior named York's writer-in-residence

By BEN ROSE
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Does 74-year-old Harry Pollock think being named writer-in-residence at York University is the fitting climax to an eclectic career?

"Not really, though it is an honor," he said. "My next goal is to appear on Broadway in a play written especially for me and overnight the critics plunge me into stardom."

What else would you expect from the restless James Joyce scholar who has adapted and played leading roles in the Irish author's work at the famed Abbey Theatre. He has become so closely identified with Joyce's work that a Toronto reviewer hailed him as the living embodiment of Leopold Bloom, one of the characters in Ulysses.

Kevin Jones, master of Stong College, with which Pollock is affiliated, said Pollock has taught there for 25 years. As writer-in-residence he will see students and discuss their writing, but he won't have to do any marking, for which he is grateful.

As founder of Temple Sinai in 1954, as an actor in theatre groups including Theatre of Action, and as a partner for 20 years in the Grosberg, Pollock, Gwartzman advertising agency, Pollock has touched the lives of many people in Toronto.

He and his wife Vera (Bacal), formerly of Montreal, will celebrate their 50th wedding anniversary next week in their North York home. They have two children, Allyn, of Toronto, and Sharryn Ruth Dixon of Burgessville, Ont., and a 7-year-old granddaughter, Whitney Dixon.

The many facets of his life in Toronto are reflected in his novel Gabriel, published in 1975, and ahead of its time in sexual explicitness. The same could be said of his recent book of erotic poetry The He and The She of It. He edited Litters from Alofta collection of papers given at a James Joyce symposium at McMaster University in 1971, co-published with the University of Tulsa. He is a frequent contributor to the James Joyce Quarterly published in Tulsa. For 10 years he has been working on a new novel After the Funferal.

If students at York University are looking for a man who can inspire them to dig deep into their own psyches before putting pen to paper, they need only knock on the door of the university's new writer-in-residence.

Winnipeg establishes awards

By MYRON LOVE
CJN Prairie Correspondent

WINNIPEG — The Winnipeg Jewish Community Council has established two new community awards.

The Sol Kanee Community Service Award will become the highest award the community can bestow, recognizing individuals who have shown outstanding leadership within the Jewish community.

The Max Shore Memorial Award, for those who have shown leadership and dedication to the Combined Jewish Appeal and the principles of the Winnipeg Jewish Community Council, is dedicated to the late businessman and philanthropist Max Shore, who died last December at 82.

Kanee, 85, is a lawyer and businessman. He is a past national president of Canadian Jewish Congress, and serves as chair of the general structure of the New York-based World Jewish Congress.

Locally, Kanee served as president of the United Way of Greater Winnipeg, the Royal Winnipeg Ballet and the Health Sciences Centre Foundation and was a past chair of the University of Manitoba Board of Governors. He is currently board chair for the Sharon Home, Winnipeg's Jewish nursing home for seniors.

Shore was a founding member of the Jewish Foundation of Manitoba and a longtime cabinet member of the CJA. He worked hard to raise money for Israel, particularly for the Israeli War Campaign. He held leadership positons in the State of Israel Bonds and the Sharon Home, was a member of the Executive of the Zionist Organization of Canada and a board member of the YMHA and the Jewish National Fund. He helped found a JNF Nahala and Karen Hayesod prekindergarten in Upper Nazareth. He was also a founding member of Ben-Gurion University's Maimonides College

The awards will be presented each spring during the Winnipeg Jewish Community Council/Combined Jewish Appeal annual meeting.

Women's Institute offering new courses in second year

TORONTO — The era of King Solomon, family purity and the story of Rachel and Leah are among the new courses offered this year by the Women's Institute of Advanced Torah Study.

The institute, which was formed in January 1994, meets at Shaarei Tefillah Congregation, 3600 Bathurst St. The intention, according to director Goldie Plotkin and dean Chana Weisberg, was "to meet the needs of the Jewish woman ... to explore [her] Jewishness in a scholarly and intellectual milieu that will enhance and broaden [her] sense of who [she is]."

Over 300 women have taken courses so far, ranging from teenagers to senior citizens, and from those with minimal Jewish background to graduates of girls' yeshivot and seminaries.

Courses for the fall session will be given Monday mornings and Monday and Wednesday evenings.

Other courses are Incredible Codes and Secret Prophecies, examining clues to Jewish history hidden in the Torah; a course about Kabbalah and mysticism; and another about Maimonides.

A special course, offered on two Tuesday mornings in November, will deal with women in the Chanukah story.

Classes begin Oct. 17. For more information, or to register, call the institute at (905) 889-6066.

Toronto Women's ORT head hopes to increase involvement

By CAROLYN BLACKMAN
Special to The CJN

TORONTO — One of the main thrusts of Kathleen Crook's term as president of Toronto Women's ORT is to ensure the organization is accessible to everyone who wants to participate.

"Every person is important to us and I would like to see a lot of projects going on so no one feels left out," Crook said, who became president recently.

Crook joined ORT's Business and Professional chapter about five years ago and said she was immediately caught up in ORT's "tremendous work. I am a great believer in ORT's philosophy of helping people become self-sufficient by teaching them a skill.

"ORT schools create independence rather than fostering dependence and it is inspiring and exciting to see people, who otherwise may not have had the opportunity to do so, to learn a skill and work at it successfully."

Kathleen Crook

Another of Crook's main thrusts for her one-year term is to work towards amalgamating the men's and women's organizations. "Our work will be more effective if we can pool contacts and resources and ensure that no name falls through the cracks."

She said one of the joint initiatives is to establish ORT schools in Canada. She praised Ontario region president Mark Pearlman for "getting the ball rolling" and said the new North York ORT resource centre "will teach teachers and help them become more efficient in the classroom. Such a centre would go a long way in raising ORT's profile in Toronto."

Crook said one of the biggest challenges facing ORT, as well as all other service organizations, is meeting the needs of the 1990s volunteer. "Volunteerism that we know from previous generations has changed," she said. "People today have limited time and it is a huge challenge to find a job for them that they can work around their hectic schedule. By working co-operatively with the men's organization we will be able to spread out the work load."

She stressed no matter how much time or resources one is able to give to ORT, their work is valuable. "Our goal is to offer opportunities for everyone who wants to participate."

Phiacs provides disabled with transport service

By BEN ROSE
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Phiacs may not be a household word, but to many disabled people who would be housebound without it, it is the answer to a prayer.

It provides a transport service (at the cost of a comparable taxi ride) to hospitals, doctors, day care centres, schools, therapy sessions and friends for people who have no way of getting there otherwise.

"Toronto's Wheel-Trans turns down approximately 130,000 requests for transportation each year," said Marvin E. Graf, president of Phiacs (Physically Handicapped Independent Advancement Community Services), now in its 17th year of service.

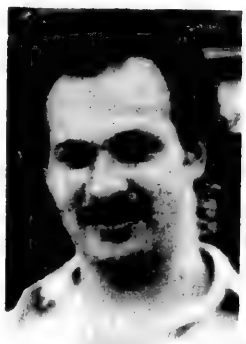
The non-profit charitable organization was started by Graf's late brother, Ben, who had cerebral palsy.

"He started it out of pure frustration because of his personal needs," the Phiacs president said.

Graf estimates that last year Phiacs transported people up to one million passenger kilometers in southern Ontario.

In recognition of its value to disabled people, the Forest Hill Rotary Club last August donated $8,000 towards the purchase of a $41,000 van.

Phiacs regularly provides transportation for Riverdale, Lyndhurst and Sunnybrook Hospitals, the Easter Seal Society, Vocational Rehabilitation Services and Veterans Affairs Canada.



Marvin Graf

Among letters of support to Phiacs, which depends on donations to make up its yearly deficit as governments do not subsidize it, is one from Tracey Goldhar, summer outings coordinator at Baycrest Centre for Geriatric Care.

Another letter from R.J. Evans, manager of Wheel-Trans, expresses thanks to Phiacs for helping Wheel-Trans to meet its obligations during emergencies.

Phone line offers health care information

On Oct. 1, Baycrest Centre for Geriatric Care launched three recorded information telephone lines on the Toronto Star's Starphone system.

Starphone is a free 24-hour news and information service where callers use their touch-tone telephones to access more than 500 information categories. Each month, nearly 1.5 million people call Starphone.

The three new lines draw on the vast expertise and resources found at Baycrest. The one-minute messages, to be changed and updated every two weeks, will allow the public to benefit from the latest information available to Baycrest professionals.

Upcoming topics include nutrition, exercise, medication, sleep, sexuality and choosing a physician. Healthier Aging can be accessed by dialing Starphone at 350-3000, and then extension 9010.

Caregiver's Info Line provides informative messages for family members caring for an aging relative in their home. The line features information on the types of community health services, support groups and other services available to caregivers and their aging relatives, and how they can be accessed.

As well, it will address day-to-day care management problems such as incontinence, medication administration and feeding problems. The needs of the caregiver will also be covered by this line, which can be reached at 350-3000, ext. 9011.

The third line, called New at Baycrest, showcases upcoming events at Baycrest like forums and symposiums of interest to the general public. It will also highlight new Baycrest programs. New at Baycrest can be accessed at 350-3000, ext. 9012.

Memorial to Marnie Kimelman launched at Toronto hospital

By LEILA SPEISMAN
CJN Staff Reporter

Marnie Kimelman

TORONTO — Marnie Kimelman was a lively, talented and much loved teenager when she was murdered by a terrorist bomb in Tel Aviv, in 1990.

But she has not been forgotten by her family, friends and the general community.

Funds for the project were raised by the Kimelman family and by the Richmond Hill Country Club, which has so far held golf tournaments, a day at the races and a monster bingo to raise the necessary monies.

Greetings were also brought by Dr. Jim Friesen, on behalf of the hospital staff; director of child services Kim O'Leary; Michael Silverman; and Jason Kimelman, one of Marnie's brothers, who spoke briefly on behalf of the family.

The renovated area includes the Bear Theatre, which will be used for the Bear Theatre production, a play put on by hospital staff for young patients, as well as for visiting performers and productions; there is also an enlarged teen lounge with a big screen TV, a pool table, video games, and a kitchen.

Dr. Gideon Koren, director of the HSC Division of Pharmacology and Toxicology, is the originator of the Bear Theatre, and is a friend of the Kimelman family.

He said that the name Marnie's Rainbow was chosen "to bring to life a biblical symbol of trust, of love, of being able to transform human tragedy into immense positive energy," as the Kimelman family has done.

An emotional Linda Kimelman, Marnie's mother, called Marnie's Rainbow "uplifting — a bright way to remember her. She would probably have worked with kids."

Marnie's best friend, Marissa Zeidel, summed it up best: "It's a nice way to remember her. She had a smile like a rainbow, laughter like a rainbow, and a personality like a rainbow."

Israel making great strides in international hockey

By PAUL LUNGEN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Israel continues to make great strides in the world of international hockey — at the organizational level if not on the ice.

Israel was recently invited to enter a national junior hockey team for the European Junior Hockey Championships in Lithuania, scheduled for March 1995.

The invitation is another first for the fledgling Israeli hockey program, which until a few years ago consisted merely of a bunch of expatriate Canadians and Russians struggling to get ice time in the country's mini-rinks.

Since then Israel has participated in several International Ice Hockey Federation (IIHF) tournaments in Slovenia, Turkey and Spain, compiling what, at best, could be described as a mediocre record.

Now Israel's juniors, aged 15 to 18, are taking up the challenge. The country's best young players will be selected during the course of the season, based on their play for Israel's five hockey teams in Haifa, Bat Yam, Metulla, Ramat Gan and Jerusalem. Afterwards, they will attend a training camp in the new olympic-sized rink now under construction at the Canada Centre in Metulla.

Paralleling the practice of the senior club, the junior squad is looking for qualified players in Canada who are eligible to represent Israel.

Players should be of Metro Toronto Hockey League AA calibre or better, said senior coach Gideon Lee.

Meanwhile three Israelis who came to Canada in the hopes of catching on with a Tier II Junior A team in Bellingham, Washington were disappointed when their efforts went for naught.

None of the teenaged skaters made the team, though centre Genya Feldman was the last cut of the Bellingham Hawks. Feldman was good enough to make the squad, Lee said, but he got caught in a numbers game which limits teams to only two foreign players. Feldman was the team's second-best centre but the coaches decided to go with foreigners in other positions, he said.

More recently, Feldman had tryouts with teams in Richmond Hill and North York in the Metro Toronto junior league and was offered places on both teams, Lee said. Unfortunately, Feldman's hockey future in Canada hinges on whether accommodations can be found for him for the upcoming season. Anyone who can place Feldman is asked to contact Lee.

Defenceman Sasha Stolyar and goalie Boris Amromin have returned to Israel.

Meanwhile, sabra skater Ran Oz, a 17-year-old defenceman who tips the scales at well over 200 lbs., initially turned down an offer to play with the Toronto Marlie Midgets and decided to return to Israel.

But following a letter to him from the Marlies, Oz changed his mind and is expected to return to Canada shortly, Lee said.

Marlies coach John Cottrell said he saw Oz practise with the Oshawa Legionnaires Junior B squad and "I was satisfied he could help our midget club.

"He's a big guy and that's one of the areas that we wanted to improve on. Watching him in the Junior B camp, he took on guys bigger than him and he didn't back down."

Oz's shooting, skating and puckhandling skills were all good, although occasionally he'd be knocked off his skates a little too easily, Cottrell said.

Asked about Oz's potential, Cottrell said, "He may have the ability to go to the [major junior] Ontario Hockey League. But not having played a lot of games, he'd have to acquire the hockey sense that comes with playing for years and years."

What Every Jew Should Know About MISSIONARIES

Crichton winner of Bronfman Award

TORONTO — Daniel Crichton, one of Canada's most gifted glass artists, has been named the 1994 recipient of the coveted Prix Saidye Bronfman Award for craftsmanship.

Chrichton was chosen from a field of 18. The award will be presented Wednesday, Nov. 23 at the opening of a special exhibition of Crichton's work at the Canadian Clay & Glass Gallery in Waterloo, Ont. The exhibition will be on display through Dec. 29.

The $20,000 Prix Saidye Bronfman Award, administered by the Canadian Crafts Council, was established in 1977 by The Samuel and Saidye Bronfman Family Foundation.

The five-member selection committee commended Crichton's "long and loving search for new relationships with glass," and thanked him for inspiring young glassworkers. He is head of the glass program at Sheridan College and has lectured internationally.

Along with the cash prize, works by award receipients enter the permanent collection of the Canadian Museum of Civilization.

Crichton's work can be found in private collections and in the public collections of the Ontario Crafts Council, Imperial Oil Ltd., the Massey Collection, Alcan, Bell Canada, the Montreal Museum of Fine Art and the Winnipeg and Vancouver Art Galleries.

Monthly Fund helps Israel's poor

By LEILA SPEISMAN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO —For nearly 20 years the Monthly Fund, quietly and without fanfare, has been raising money to help Israel's poor.

Working solely through mail contact, a small group of dedicated women has managed to send funds to selected families who desperately need help, but often are too dignified to ask for it.

The fund was initiated by Goldie Feinstat after she was asked to check up on how other monies were being distributed in Israel.

Tears came easily to Feinstat, as she told The CJN about what she saw.

"There was a broken shack, where the mother was a great tzadekes (righteous woman). Everything was dilapidated. There were many many children. They were sitting on a bed because there were no chairs.

"The mother divided a bread into as many pieces as there were children. An older girl gave each child a slice. They ate quietly, without complaining, without asking for anything else."

Another lady, who was not only desperately poor but very sick, "didn't complain. She just related the wonders of G-d, and how He delivered them from [their] problems."

Feinstat said she decided that "if there were such people, living in such dire poverty, and no one knows about it because they don't complain," she had to do something about it.

Letter campaign

The Monthly Fund raises money through a letter campaign several times a year. "We have never had a tea or any other function."

In many of the families the Monthly Fund helps, Feinstat explained, the breadwinner is in a low-paying job such as teaching. They manage to get by until there is serious illness, or they have to start a child in married life.

The fund tries to send a double portion before Rosh Hashanah and Pesach, "and other holidays if possible."

A special effort is made to include Sephardi families, Feinstat noted, and the fund supports Matan B'seser, an organization that helps needy Sephardim in Rishon L'Tzion.

A favorite project is kallah pechlach (parcels for brides), which include blankets, pillowcases, tablecloths and towels to start a home.

The women who work for the Monthly Fund do so "purely for the mitzvah of it," said Feinstat. "This is a project where you don't see your name in lights. A big splash would go against our whole way of doing things."

Feinstat herself agreed to be named in the article only because of her concern that the cause be taken seriously.

She said she was grateful for the support the fund has received from the Toronto community. "We would like to do something in January [the 20th anniversary] to thank everybody."

Seniors' problems focus of forum

TORONTO — Critical problems affecting the lives of 500,000 seniors in and around Metro Toronto will be discussed at a public forum Thursday, Oct. 27, at St. Lawrence Centre, from 9.30 a.m. to noon.

The Association of Jewish Seniors is spearheading this rally expected to attract hundreds from various ethnic groups.

"The issues we are addressing are of great importance to the well-being of seniors today, and to our children and grandchildren tomorrow," said Evelyn Shulman of the forum steering committee.

Among subjects to be discussed are pensions and taxation, cutbacks in social and health services, hospital, medical and drug coverage, day care and long term care.

A brochure advertising the forum said 32 per cent of seniors have incomes of less than $15,000, which is below the poverty line.

The majority of seniors are experiencing dramatic losses in fixed income, the brochure states, and have already been hurt by hospital cutbacks, decreases in rehabilitation services, delisting of many drugs and tests, new charges for health care, increases in sales and property taxes and decreases in long-term care beds.

Manic depression disorder characterized by extreme states

By LEILA SPEISMAN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — What do media mogul Ted Turner, abolitionist John Brown, poet William Blake and actress Patty Duke have in common with Toronto businessman Earl Mandle?

Together with at least one per cent of the world's population, they all suffer from manic depression.

Manic depression is referred to as a bipolar (basically, a double sided) disorder. It is a medical condition, which may be active (that is, the person is either in a manic state, or is going through a clinical depression) or inactive.

In the manic state, Dr. Robert Cooke of the Clarke Institute of Psychiatry Mood Disorders Clinic explained, the person is highly excited and full of excess energy. He or she has a grossly inflated sense of self-esteem and is full of grandiose ideas or plans, highly irritable, talkative and provocative.

There may be hallucinations or delusions. Sleep becomes a rarity.

Judgment is impaired, adds Nessa Martin, executive director of the Depressive and Manic Depressive Association of Ontario (DMDAO), a support, educational and informational organization.

This impaired judgment can lead to profligate spending, promiscuous sexual activity, alcohol or drug abuse and hyperactivity.

Symptoms can come on quite rapidly, and be fully in place before the person is really aware of what is happening.

There is no way to predict how often the episodes will occur, or how severe they will be.

The manic state is nearly always followed by a severe depression.

Martin explained that the depression here differs from other forms of depression in that the person tends to be more sluggish and fatigued and sleeps a great deal. (In regular depression, the person is restless, agitated and suffers from insomnia).

Episides of mania and depression may occur once every few months, every few years or in an almost constant cycle.

Cooke told The CJN that diagnosis is usually made during the 20s and 30s, when the person has a severe attack.

"At that point, they realize they were probably having milder episodes before, but didn't reach their full severity until their 20s."

Drug treatment, especially with lithium and carbamezapine, is especially effective for manic depression. Psychotherapy helps the patient — and the family — cope with the disruption and upheaval of day to day living, and can teach techniques for dealing with symptoms.

If the depression is very severe, electroconvulsive therapy may be used.

Some people can lead a close to normal life, Cooke said, but there is almost a 100 per cent certainty that once one has a manic depressive episode, it will happen again.

"In the past, we didn't pay as much attention to the disruption in a person's life. Now we are more aware that between episodes, people have to pick up the pieces. We are also more aware of the burden it places on families."

Mandle, now 46, married, and the father of a teenager, says he knew from the time he was about 15 that "something was not quite right. Things didn't go the way I thought they should, but I didn't know what was bothering me."

At the suggestion of his parents and a psychiatrist cousin, he went for help, and was diagnosed at about 17. Even though he was put on lithium (he now uses carbamazepine) during his late teens and early 20s, "I had lots of rapid cycling, and had to be hospitalized a lot."

Although his condition settled down, and he was able to build up a successful business (he is now semi-retired) and marry ("My wife Glenna has been to hell and back with me. I can't say enough about her."), just last year he had a bad episode and had to be hospitalized for six weeks, the first time in 15 years.

"It is frightening," he said, "especially to those around you."

Mandle now volunteers two days a week at the DMDAO. He feels that support groups such as the DMDAO are essential, because "it helps to compare conditions and new coping techniques, and feel that you are not alone."

Mandle is adopted. When he traced his roots a few years ago, he found that his birth mother was also manic depressive. This is not uncommon, Cooke and Martin agree, both noting that there appears to be a strong genetic component to this disease.

The Manic Depressive Association of Metropolitan Toronto is currently running a youth awareness campaign. Martin said that "research shows that symptoms appear earlier than used to be thought," and Cooke said that some researchers feel that early diagnosis may lessen the severity of symptoms, although there is not universal agreement on this point.

The association is handing out Youth Info Kits, which include copious information on manic depression, written in an informal, understandable and non-threatening style, a mood ring, and a notebook and pen to record changing moods.

There is also an excellent short film on the subject, entitled Manic Depression: portraits of survival.

For more information, contact the Manic Depressive Association of Metropolitan Toronto, Suite 252, 40 Orchard View Blvd., Toronto, M4R 1B9, telephone 486-8046.

TORONTO — Aging will come of age with author/visionary/social reformer Betty Friedan at Baycrest Centre for Geriatric Care's public health forum on Tuesday, Nov. 1.

The woman who launched the women's movement with her 1963 book The Feminine Mystique is once again doing battle — only this time her foe is ageism. In what promises to be an enlightening address, Friedan will turn her guns on the mystique of aging as she draws upon her latest work The Fountain of Age.

In The Fountain of Age, Friedan attacks the myths of aging that are epidemic in our youth-obsessed society. Aging is erroneously portayed in society as a time of unavoidable rapid physical and mental deterioration, whereas it should be seen as an adventure and a time of true creativity and enrichment, according to Friedan.

In the book, she suggests that older people have special gifts to offer society — gifts which society is only beginning to recognize.

Betty Friedan

The forum, a project of the Baycrest Women's Auxiliary, takes place at 8 p.m. in the Recital Hall at the North York Performing Arts Centre, 5040 Yonge Street. Tickets are $20 and are available through Ticketmaster at (416) 872-2222 and at the box office.

Members of the media are invited to attend the forum. Please call Michelle Noble or Jennifer Schipper at Baycrest Public Relations (416) 785-2500, ext. 2432.

Baycrest, an internationally renowned organization dedicated to enriching the quality of life of the elderly, offers a full spectrum of programs for older adults. Like Friedan, Baycrest is unmasking the mystiques of aging and demonstrating that life after 65 can be productive, healthy and vital.

The Fountain of Age is now available in paperback from Touchstone Books, a division of Simon and Schuster.

Jewish feminists celebrate Sukkot

By FRANCES KRAFT
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Succah-By-The-Water is well on its way to becoming a Toronto tradition.

The third annual feminist Sukkot celebration, organized by a group of volunteers under the auspices of the New Israel Fund (NIF), took place recently under Harbourfront's large blue-and-white striped tent.

A capacity crowd of 500 women included grandmothers, students and young mothers cuddling infants. Hundreds more had tried to purchase tickets, but had to be turned away, said Michele Landsberg.

The event is the only one of its kind in North America and perhaps in the world. Women travelled from Guelph, Kitchener, Montreal, Boston and New York to attend.

"It's so rare to find a large, public, Jewish, spiritual, authentically religious event for women," said Bonnie Orlin, a Bostonian who sits on the international board of the NIF. "I think it's remarkable."

"It's been a terrific experience," said Eve Landau, who is affiliated with Ma'yan, a New York Jewish feminist group.

"The need for all-women spiritual celebrations is so deep," Landsberg said. "Just for once we've made ourselves — the women — the central players. Tonight we rejoice to celebrate the too-often forgotten lives of strong Jewish women."

Landsberg herself, a driving force behind the event, received a tribute from Montreal scholar Norma Joseph, who discussed the lulav and etrog. Among traditional interpretations of the symbols is an analogy likening each of the etrog and the three components of the lulav to a part of the body.

"Michele, you are our four species," said Joseph. Landsberg's backbone, eyes (for having "the view of tonight when so many didn't think it could be"), mouth and "heart of passion" are attributes traditionally associated with the palm, myrtle, willow and etrog respectively, Joseph explained.

As in previous years, the Ushpizin ceremony was altered to welcome symbolic female guests, instead of the traditional male guests, to the sukkah. Rochelle Rubinstein Kaplan welcomed female prophets Sarah, Miriam, Deborah, Hannah, Avigail, Huldah and Esther.

The Ushpizin ceremony continued as participants lined up at microphones to contribute names of Jewish women "who deserve a place in the pages of history," said Chari Cohen. The seventh-century queen of a Jewish tribe in the Atlas Mountains was one of some three dozen women named.

Along the theme of this year's event — Eitz Chaim Hee (She is a Tree of Life): Rejoicing in our Foremothers, everyone present wrote the name of an important nurturing woman in her life on a leaf cut from organza. The leaves will be sewn onto silk panels which will form the walls of next year's "sukkah," a symbolic structure which graces the stage each year.

For many of the participants, the celebration represented their first opportunity to bless the lulav and etrog. Participants regrouped into "lulav circles" of up to 10 women to enable everyone to have a turn.

The ceremony was followed by Israeli dancing led by Sandy Starkman. Refreshments appropriate to the harvest festival were donated by Estherelke Kaplan.

This year's event raised over $25,000 to support women's projects in Israel, such as rape crisis centres, which receive NIF grants. Since its inception, Succah-By-The-Water has raised a total of $75,000 to fund such projects.

Holocaust book aimed at educating youth

By MAURICE LUCOW
CJN Western Correspondent

VANCOUVER — Teachers and Holocaust organizations who are trying to educate young people about the horrors of the Holocaust would be well advised to use as a reference a new paperback, The Old Brown Suitcase.

The book, by Lillian Boraks-Nemetz of Vancouver, is intended for youngsters age 12 to 17. To be introduced at the Vancouver Jewish Book Fair in November, it is described by the author as "a documentary fiction." Although some characters were invented, and minor facts altered, the story is based on historical events which are the core of the author's own experience, says the introduction.

The book opens with a geographical description of Poland, Warsaw and the Warsaw ghetto, where most of the action takes place. It describes the Jews of Poland as "a thriving community before World War II," with over 3 million Jews, or 10 per cent of the total population of the country.

The story begins in 1947 in Montreal, where 14-year-old Slava, her parents and baby sister arrive to begin a new life in Canada, after surviving the Holocaust. They are billeted with a wealthy Jewish family and Slava is overwhelmed by the variety and amount of food available and the modern dress of the girl in the family who is Slava's age.

Through a series of flashbacks, Slava recalls the desperate times in Poland — dating back to when she was 5 years old. A gift from her father, "a shiny new brown suitcase," becomes a symbol of her wanderings through Poland up to her arrival in Canada.

Slava lives through the air raids in Warsaw when the Nazis attack, the destruction of Jewish shops and homes, the German troops — "the worst ones in black uniforms and caps with the skull and bones on them ... they look sullen and angry."

The order to wear arm bands with the Star of David puzzles her because the family was secular and she knew nothing about Judaism. When her father explains what the Star of David means, she decides that "it looks better than the swastika worn by the Nazis."

The family is forced into the ghetto and sleep in a room separated from others only by sheets hanging on rods; 25 people share a kitchen and bathroom. Tuberculosis and typhoid are rampant, and Jews are dying every day.

Slava observes a neighbor lighting Friday night candles and saying the Shabbat prayers and says she likes the idea of Shabbat.

School is forbidden but classes are held secretly until the Nazis find out and the teachers disappear.

The ghetto is jammed with 400,000 people where only 160,000 used to live. Jews, including Slava's mother, are shipped off to labor camps and "no one knows who is next. We keep our suitcases packed — my own brown suitcase looks a little battered."

Somehow, the family is reunited after the liberation and the father's brother brings them to Canada.

In Canada, Slava (renamed Elizabeth by her friends because "it sounds better") begins the growing-up process. She learns to use lipstick and wear a bra. She attends her first school dance, learns what the term "wallflower" means, learns English and improves her French.

She learns from her father the difference between Christianity and Judaism. When the family moves to a small Ontario town, she finds out first-hand from her classmates what Canadian anti-Semitism is like.

Back in Montreal, Slava excels in English in her class, and her essay wins a prize — a copy of Anne of Green Gables, which she had already read in Polish.

The book ends on a happy note — Slava is adjusting to Canada and develops a close friendship with a young Jewish boy.

The story appears simple, but it deals with teen problems, racism and other factors affecting Jewish children growing up in Canada.

Above all, young Canadians, Jewish and non-Jewish, should read about the Holocaust in terms they can relate to, to get some idea of what went on in Europe not so long ago.

Author Lillian Boraks-Nemetz is a child survivor who was once a "hidden child." She will be conducting a workshop on the subject at a conference of hidden children in Montreal, on Oct. 7 at the Queen Elizabeth Hotel.

She currently teaches creative writing at the University of British Columbia.

Publisher of the book, which retails at $11.95, is Ben-Simon Publications, P.O. Box 318, Brentwood Bay, B.C., V8M 1R3; fax 604-652-6332.

Canadian production facilities to be used for U.S. movies

By BARBARA SILVERSTEIN
Special to The CJN

TORONTO — An American television executive has announced plans to spend $50 million to produce movies for his cable networks in Canada.

Tony Cox, chairman and CEO of Showtime Networks, made this announcement during his keynote address at Symposium 94: At Warp Speed, the Toronto International Film Festival's annual business conference.

Show Time Networks includes Showtime, The Movie Channel and other subscriber cable channels. Cox also oversees Viacom Network enterprises. Viacom is the parent company of Showtime Networks, Paramount Pictures, the Famous Players Theatre Chain, and Prentice Hall.

Cox said Showtime is making the move in order to offer subscribers "premieres of exclusive, fresh movies" and to reduce its dependence on studio features.

Cox admitted that choosing Canada as a production venue for the television movies was an economic decision. The $50 million is earmarked for 15 to 20 Canadian productions costing between $3 and $5 million each.

Some of the projects will be joint ventures with larger Canadian production companies like Paragon Entertainment, Atlantis Films and Alliance. Two of these projects — Mrs. Munck, starring Diane Ladd and Bruce Dern, and Down Came A Blackbird with Raul Julia and Vanessa Redgrave — are currently in production here.

Cox told his audience of 100 that within two to five years television programs will be put on software so that viewers can choose when they want to watch them.

"The product called television will finally allow the customers to consume that product when it suits them," he said. "You take a month of Showtime and you download into your house . . . store it and retrieve at your pleasure."

Tony Tobias, a music producer who attended the keynote speech, said the infusion of American money into Canadian productions is not as good as it sounds because Canadians are not being given many key positions.

"It's one thing to be spending money here, to be treating us as a source of labor, he said. "It's another thing to be putting us in leading roles in the central production anatomy."

Michael Schwartz, president of Avion Films, said Cox's decision to support Canadian production companies will boost the local film industry.

The money spent by Showtime will strengthen and develop the film infrastructure here and as it develops it will attract more investors, he said. "One keeps feeding the other."

Jon Geist, a silent partner in Avion Films, said he too found Cox's speech encouraging. "If he's the beginning of a trend — he's a big player — and if others follow, this will be a big film town, bigger than it already is."

Synagogue baseball teams square off for championships

By PAUL LUNGEN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — It wasn't quite as intense as the Yankees and the Dodgers, or even the Blue Jays and the Phillies, but there was some history involved when Beth Tikvah butted heads with Adath Israel recently.

To avoid any confusion, let it be clear there were no weighty theological issues involved in the matchup. The rabbis didn't go one-on-one with a dvar Torah, nor did the chazzans try to outdo each other with their unique vocal stylings. Instead, the synagogues' baseball teams went toe to toe in the championship game of the Inter-Synagogue Baseball League.

Davening gave way to clutch hitting as Beth Tikvah repeated as league champ, winning 18-10. The contest was a rematch of last year's final in which the same Beth Tikvah club hammered Adath Israel 24-11. The season before, Adath Israel emerged as champion of the 16-team league, defeating their nemesis Beth Tikvah in the title game.

This time around, a seven-run outburst in the third inning broke open the hotly-contested affair. Key hits from Rick Librach, Rob Waxman, Len Sadinsky and Mark Harendorf ignited the scoring parade, said Beth Tikvah captain and shortstop Howard Goldkind.

Others who provided clutch hitting included Jeff Secter, Steve Dolman, Mitch Aidelman, Neil Solomon and Goldkind. Coupled with a stingy defence, that proved the winning formula for Beth Tikvah, he said.

The Inter-Synagogue League was established in 1987 to provide competitive baseball to the members of the city's synagogues and temples. The league includes teams from Conservative and Reform synagogues.

They play a nine-inning, three-pitch game in which the pitcher throws to members of his own team, putting a premium on hitting and fielding.

For next year, Beth Tikvah's boys of summer have set themselves a new challenge, the always difficult "three-peat."

TRAVEL TALK

By BILL GLADSTONE

Bicycling in Austria: If you enjoy cycling over relatively flat pastoral terrain, featuring vineyards and marshes inhabited by cranes and other rare birds, consider taking a bicycle tour of Austria's easternmost province, the Burgenland.

It is here that the European Alps surrender to the vast Eurasian plain. The Burgenland flatly contradicts our image of Austria as a country that is two-thirds covered by mountains. Indeed, parts of the Burgenland rival Saskatchewan for flatness. Topographically speaking, the area less resembles Austria than neighboring Hungary, to which it belonged until 1918.

The land around the smooth, reed-encircled Neusiedler See is particularly suited for a day of relaxed cycling. Not long ago, I was one of a group of cyclists who pedalled through the leafy vineyards along Neusiedler's marshy skirts. The land tilts gently down some two kilometres to the lake, which shone in the afternoon sun like the burnished armor of a knight.

Soon we entered Morbisch, the last village before the Hungarian frontier; its huts and peasants have an unmistakable Hungarian look. Slightly beyond Morbisch we reached the border. It was here, only a few years ago, that the Iron Curtain was breached and thousands of East Germans poured across, many initially cutting blindly through the forests in the dead of night. Locals emblazoned trees with Austria's national colors to inform the refugees they had reached freedom.

Thankfully, the armed guards, lookout towers and barbed-wire fences of the communist era are gone. Instead, a striped roadside barrier in the up position offers cyclists and pedestrians (but not motorists) free passage to the nearby Hungarian towns of Fertorakos and Sopron.

The Neusiedler See lies predominantly in Austria but its southern extremity protrudes into Hungary like the ungainly beak of a large waterbird. The lake is home to more than 250 species of waterfowl, many rare. The storks that nest atop chimneys in local villages like Rust and Oggau have become a symbol of the region.

Former Cold War adversaries, the Austrians and the Hungarians are working jointly to establish an international nature park around the briny, mostly spring-fed body of water that is Europe's only steppe-type lake. Recognizing the great popularity and commercial potential of cycling, the Hungarians have prepared some 40 km of bicycle paths to join the 90-km network already in use around the Austrian side. Last spring, for the first time, marathon cyclists were able to circle the Neusiedler See in a day.

We took a ferry from Morbisch eastward across the reed beds and open water to the other side, the fenny finger of Austria known as the Seewinkel. During our crossing, the lake was smooth as the proverbial lady's mirror.

We pedalled through the farming village

Neusiedler has a reputation for being capricious. Only one or two metres deep in most spots, it has been known to recede in a strong wind from the leeward shore and deepen along the far shore. In hot or dry spells, it has disappeared entirely, confounding wild birds and property owners alike. When it last vanished in 1868, neighboring landowners redrew the boundaries of their estates and farmed the lake bottom. The waters returned four years later.

Two farmers' carts, each with a pair of big horses, were waiting as the ferry touched land: a characteristic rural scene. Disembarking, we pedalled through the farming village of Illmitz, towards Podersdorf some 20 km away. We stopped briefly at a roadside tower erected to give ornithologists a photoscopic view of the moors and their exotic winged creatures.

Well shaded and well marked, the bicycle path took us through fresh meadows and vineyards. The afternoon was sunny and calm. After 90 minutes, we stopped briefly at a roadside restaurant for a drink. Two hours later, we reached our finishing point, the giant windmill at Podersdorf, where we savored our achievement — about 50 km of cycling since breakfast — over a glass of local wine.

After a carefree day or two in the Burgenland, you will appreciate this sleepy, rustic terrain. Redolent of legends of crusading knights and invading Ottomans, it has long been a historic battleground between East and West. How appropriate that it was here, in our own day, that the once-impenetrable Iron Curtain was mortally ruptured as if by a jouster's lance.

Thousands of kilometres of bicycle paths wind through Austria's nine provinces, even in the country's most mountainous reaches. Vienna, Austria's capital, boasts many biking trails, including one that circles the monumental ring. Anywhere in the country, when the going gets rough, riders may simply hop aboard a train, bike and all. Bicycles may be rented at many train stations and dropped off at any other.

Untaxing and scenic, Austria's most popular biking trail runs for nearly 300 km through the Danube Valley. It is so popular that Hungary intends to extend it all the way to Budapest.

Fall's time for pumpkins

By EILEEN GOLTZ
Special to The CJN

If a roving band of out of work weathermen forced me to choose the perfect season, this would be it.

When that crisp, cool, air washes over my fading tan and all the leaves from my neighbors' trees are falling into my yard, I know that without a doubt, its fall!

Ok, so it's really football season (some people use the terms fall and football interchangeably) the holidays are over and my children have to go back to school. I can now get down to the serious business of finding the biggest and best of this season's favorite crop, the pumpkin.

I'm not talking about some wimpy, little, sort of pale yellow/orange, flat on one side poor excuse for a squash. I am talking about those bigger than a house, two people to pick it up, kind of pumpkin. Why, you ask do I want something that big? For the seeds of course! (just kidding). I consider the seeds a bonus, sort of like the prize at the bottom of the cereal box.

Most of the people I talked to think that the only good pumpkin is a canned one. Yes, I know that occasionally, people do make pies with the fresh ones, but it's usually a case of just opening that can of pumpkin puree and baking away. No more! I've decided to include a foolproof, hassle-free method for getting the fresh stuff ready to use.

HOW TO COOK PUMPKIN

Select a bright-colored, firm, unblemished pumpkin. (Note: 3 lbs. raw pumpkin equals 3 cups cooked) Cut pumpkin in half, remove seeds and stringy portion. Cut into small pieces and peel. Cook covered, in 1 to 2 inches boiling, salted water, 25 to 30 min. or until tender. Drain well and mash. You can cook other winter squash the same way except for the butternut squash which cooks in about 15 min.

CHOCO-PUMPKIN COOKIES

1 cup brown sugar
1 cup plus 3 tbsp. butter or margarine
1 cup cooked or canned pumpkin
1 tsp. vanilla
1 egg
2 cups flour
1 tsp. baking powder
1 tsp. baking soda
1 tsp. cinnamon
1 tsp. kosher pumpkin pie spice
¼ tsp. salt
1 cup chocolate chips
¼ cup milk
2 cups powdered sugar

Preheat oven to 350. Mix sugar, ½ cup brown sugar and 1 cup butter, set aside. Mix pumpkin, vanilla and egg, set aside. Stir together the flour, baking powder, baking soda, cinnamon, pumpkin pie spice and salt. Combine the sugar, pumpkin, and flour mixtures and blend well. Stir in chocolate chips. Grease cookie sheets with non stick spray and drop dough by teaspoonfuls onto them. Bake 10 to 12 minutes. In a saucepan, combine the remaining butter and brown sugar. Heat until thickened, cool 10 minutes and add the milk. Beat well and then add the powdered sugar a little at a time. Let the glaze set 5 minutes to thicken, spread on top of cooled pumpkin cookies. Makes 4 dozen.

PUMPKIN CUSTARD WITH SWEETENED SOUR CREAM

2 cups pumpkin (or 1 16 oz. can)
1 cup firmly packed brown sugar
½ tsp. salt
1 tsp. cinnamon
½ tsp. nutmeg
¼ tsp. ginger
4 eggs lightly beaten
1 cup evaporated milk
1 tsp. grated orange peel
¾ cup orange juice
1 tsp. rum extract
Sweetened sour cream
2 tbsp. sugar
¼ tsp. vanilla extract
1 cup sour cream

Preheat oven to 350. Grease ten six-ounce custard cups. Combine pumpkin, sugar, salt, cinnamon, nutmeg, ginger and eggs. Mix well. Stir in evaporated milk, orange peel, orange juice, and rum extract. Pour into custard cups filling each cup to about ½ inch from the top. Set the cups in a shallow baking pan. Fill the pan with hot water to come up about ½ way on the custard cups. Bake about 50 minutes or until set. Cool, serve with sweetened sour cream. Sweetened sour cream: Combine ingredients and place a dollop on top of the custard. Garnish with orange peel if you like. Serves 10.

SMOKY PUMPKIN SOUP

6 slices kosher beef fry, cooked crisp, crumbled, fat set aside
4 tbsp. pareve margarine
6 cups peeled cut up pumpkin, in 2 inch pieces
6 cups beef broth
½ cup kosher Marsala wine
1 tsp. dried thyme
Salt/pepper to taste
Toasted pumpkin seeds or sunflower seeds

Heat the beef fry fat and margarine in a stock pot. Add the pumpkin and saute for 15 minutes stirring occasionally. Pour in stock and simmer covered until the pumpkin is very tender, about 30 minutes. Remove from heat. Add the Marsala, thyme and salt and pepper to taste. Process the soup in batches in a blender or food processor until smooth. Return to the stock pot. Add the bacon and simmer for 10 minutes. Serve immediately, garnish with pumpkin seeds. Serves 6.

PUMPKIN BISCUITS

2 cups sifted flour
3 tbsp. sugar
4 tsp. baking powder
½ tsp. salt
½ tsp. ground cinnamon
½ cup butter or margarine
⅓ cup light cream, ½ and ½ or non dairy creamer

Preheat oven to 425. Sift together flour, baking powder, salt and cinnamon. Cut in butter with pastry blender until mixture looks like coarse crumbs. Stir in pecans. Combine cream and pumpkin and stir into flour mixture, mixing just enough to moisten dry ingredients. This is a stiff dough. Turn dough onto lightly floured board and knead gently a few times. Roll out to ½ inch thick and cut with 2 inch round cutter. Place 1 inch apart on a greased baking sheet. Bake 15 to 20 minutes or until golden brown. Serve at once with butter or honey. Makes approximately 20.

Reingewirtz Paint Store

In home decorating as in any business, stability is a key factor. For over 65 years and three generations, Reingewirtz Paint Store has provided thousands of Torontonians with a new decorative look for their homes. Gary Zweig and his father Seymour still run the store with the same emphasis on reliable, friendly service as when Gary's grandfather Nathan opened in 1929.

Outselling many of the major chains, Reingewirtz stocks a full line of Benjamin Moore and Para Paints, as well as Selectone and other home brands. Benjamin Moore interior-exterior stain starts at $19.95 per gallon, and flat latex begins at $9.50 per gallon. Aqua Velvet white begins at $24.99 per gallon.

If you live up north, and your order totals more than $50.00, Gary will deliver your paint to your home. On larger volume orders, there is an extra discount. Also, Gary can send you out a painter to give you a free estimate.

Reingewirtz Paint Store is at 107 Baldwin St., corner of Huron. Hours are Monday to Friday 7:00 a.m. to 6:00 p.m.; call 977-3502 and ask for Gary. Say you saw this ad, or bring it in, and receive an extra five percent off.

Artalog Art Services: Gallery on a Disc

Artalog offers a complete range of art services to interior decorators, home and corporate buyers, artists and collectors. We offer appraisals and restoration; professional in-home and corporate art consulting; insurance documentation; gallery exhibitions and theme shows; and custom framing along with gifts and accessories.

If you are a decorator, Artalog is the smart new way to find original Canadian and International art that completes your designs. Artalog is located inside the Elte Carpets and Home Showroom, a magnet for interior decorators and designers. Our original graphics, oils, acrylics and water colors, displayed on over-size full-color monitors, offer a selection as large as it is varied.

Corporate Purchasers

Do you want to give your home or office a new look, but never find time to search from gallery to gallery? With a few keystrokes, we do the searching, and leave the enjoyment to you. All you have to do is look over the selections, make your choice. Artalog is a Gallery on a Disc.

If you are an artist, Artalog can promote your work. Our listing service makes your work visible to large numbers of potential buyers, without the risks of packing or shipping away from the studio. For a nominal fee, we feature your work on our Computer and Photo Compact Disc Systems, offering it for sale to consultants, designers, individual or corporate purchasers, and collectors. Our portable Photo CD system is totally mobile and will allow you to view our inventory in approximately 15 minutes. We arrange to have our clients view your work either in Artalog, or in a gallery or studio.

If you are buying art for your office, or if you are a collector, we invite you to look at Artalog's large variety of works. Tell us your criteria: subject, style, nationality, favorite colors, medium and price range; and let us help you access art from our computer. Within seconds, your selection is on the screen.

Are you selling? Our exclusive listing service makes your art available to prospective buyers. No art leaves your possession until a qualified purchaser is found.

Visit us in Elte Carpets, at 80 Ronald Ave., first light west of Dufferin off Castlefield; or for your convenience, let us bring our portable Gallery on a Disc to your home or office. Call Mark Buck or any of our expert staff at (416) 789-0568, or fax us for more information at (416) 789-5658.

Palazzetti shuns design conventions with eclectic vigor

You don't need to be a surrealist to appreciate the many fine pieces at this affordable world-class home furnishings store (located in the Taps building at 1020 Lawrence Avenue West), but you'll find both your imagination and your sense of practicality well-served by each intriguing item.

Another interesting sofa is the Maxi, a true-curve sectional with unlimited expandability. In beds, there's the Nathalie, a Flou bed with lovely display cushions that cleverly hide your sleeping cushions and a choice of dozens of cotton bedcoverings that'll give it as many fresh faces as you wish.

Indeed, Palazzetti's collection of classic modern designs (C.R. Mackintosh, Eileen Gray, Mies Van der Rohe, and Jean Michel Frank, to name a few) has played a major role in educating North American consumers about design history, an area that only a few years ago had sparked little interest outside the guarded wall of the professional design community.

Viewing great design as a continuum, Palazzetti has introduced other groundbreaking architects and designers such as Carlo Scarpa, Massimo and Elena Vignelli, Massimo Iosa-Ghini and Matthew Hilton, and in 1994 two outstanding manufacturers from Italy, Poltronova and Giovannetti.

Good design is timeless; it's interesting to note how a Bauhaus sofa is enhanced by an avant-garde area rug and a post-modern coffee table. The combination of styles can apply to all areas of the home, and Palazzetti has a selection of intriguing pieces for each area.

Taps has everything and the kitchen sink for your home

It's almost too good to be true.

In an era of bold retail promise like "wholesale prices," "direct imports", "one stop shopping", and "everything under one roof", Taps Wholesale Bath Centre makes good on all of these promises and then some – even though it may not advertise them to begin with. This is a place where the standard buzzwords (quality, selection, service, price) really mean something.

Since opening ten years ago at 1020 Lawrence Avenue West, owners Mike Spino and Alan Bloch have seen Taps grow into the largest and best-equipped showroom of its kind in Toronto, probably in all of Canada. With 20,000 square feet of showroom space and 15,000 square feet of warehouse space, Taps is able to stock and display almost every important item from every major manufacturer. Taps now ships to clients all over the country, who use their toll-free number (1-800-263-2976). "People actually fly in from Vancouver just to see our showroom and place an order" says Spino. And how about the homeowner from Montreal who recently phoned to book an appointment, flew in – and flew home two hours later with a new bathroom.

But the name "Taps" understates what is, in fact, a "complete home living environment," says Spino. What you'll find is a painstaking recreation, to the nth detail, of every person's vision of what a bathroom should be. If you've imagined it, it's here – in every conceivable colour scheme and finish.

42 kitchen sinks to choose from

Selection. How about 32 completely equipped and furnished bathrooms, 48 bathroom sinks, 42 kitchen sinks (in single-, double, and triple-sink configurations), 21 whirlpools, and 9 shower enclosures right in the showroom? (With a selection like this, who needs catalogues?) There are hundreds of faucets, vanities, and bath accessories to choose from in the bath boutique. You literally have to see it to believe it. There are so many options for the kitchen and bathroom that "shopping around" is an absurd notion. You'll have your hands full just seeing everything Taps has to offer.

Goodbye guesswork. As if all the brand names and fittings aren't enough, Taps can give you an in-store demonstration of a kitchen faucet with a pullout hose as well as many of the showerheads they sell.

It's all part of a master plan by Spino and Bloch to elevate bathrooms and kitchens to their rightful position of prominence. "These are rooms you spend much of your time in," says Spino, "so it makes sense to have them as attractive and comfortable as possible."

Quality. All the top names in bath and kitchen fixtures are well-represented here: American Standard, Rubinet, Franke, Kohler, Jacuzzi, KWC, Hansgrohe, Blanco, Aqua Brass and more.

One low price for all

Service. Taps employs specialists in every department. Inquiries about any product are answered expertly and courteously. There's even a full-time in-house serviceman who does nothing but field product inquiries.

Price. How about a company policy of "Contractor or consumer – same low price for all"?

From a purely practical standpoint, all of these advantages dovetail into a win-win situation for you and your home. One visit to Taps gives you instant access to everything you need. The "one-price-for-all" policy eliminates any uneasiness about a contractor's markups on product; indeed, many clients bring their contractor in with them to plan the job together. (If you don't have a contractor, Taps will be happy to recommend one).

Every bath and kitchen needs a floor and walls, two elements that are often overlooked. Taps doesn't; their tile section is not an afterthought but a full-blown department, offering every conceivable finish in marble, granite, slate, glass block, porcelain tile, hand-painted Mexican terracotta and others from famous makers like Porcelanosa, Venice and Country Floors. Tiles come in a rainbow of colours and dozens of motifs, from traditional geometrics to soft florals to pastorals to children's theme art. Textures galore are available to complement any kitchen or bath setting. The rough and rustic slate finishes are particularly popular, says Spino. Stunning mahogany bathroom cabinetry is also available.

Taps offers other amenities to make your life easier while you shop. You'll find ample free parking outside and a supervised indoor playground inside complete with television (Sesame Street characters were not on strike as of this writing).

Rounding out the home solutions scenario are a modern home furnishings store (Palazzetti) and a kitchen showplace (Paris Kitchens) on the same premises. These additions are in keeping with Taps strategy to offer clients "a complete home living solution for the '90's" says Spino.

Canada's First Choice

TAPS® 10th Anniversary

for bathroom fixtures & finishes

When you got to go, you got to go. And when Canadians go to renovate their bathrooms, more go to Taps than any other showroom in Canada. In fact, right now fixtures from Taps are being installed in homes as far away as Halifax and Vancouver. All from just one store right here in Toronto.

Outside Toronto 1-800-263-2976

But what a store it is! With more selection and displays than you can imagine. A staff that really knows how to put it all together. And prices so low, they're attracting people from coast to coast.

So when you're renovating the bath, make Taps your first choice. No matter where you're coming from, it's the shortest distance to a renovation success.

With a taste for fine art shared by a growing clientele, Affairs of the Art owner Brian Liss embarks on his second decade in business with the reputation of a dealer who really cares for his clients.

The caring starts in house, with a staff that includes gallery manager Jean Leonard (a Master of Art History and 15 years' experience in fine art) and head framer Suzanne Regimbal (15 years' experience). It extends right to the door of your home or office, where Liss will visit you to ensure that what you're buying complements your decor.

Affairs specializes in original art and limited edition prints, and clientele is evenly split between private and corporate clients. The latter include Sony of Canada, Elizabeth Arden of Canada, The Federal Courts of Canada, Prudential Insurance of America, and Weston Bakeries. Gallery artists include Behrens, Hohimer, Fairchild, Tarkay, Fazzino, Golkar, and Masewich, and new artists are constantly being introduced as they become prominent.

Affairs' prices for both art and custom framing are highly competitive, and the service is low-key and gracious, whether you're shopping for a $1 postcard or a $5,000 original. To celebrate their 10th anniversary, Affairs is offering a chance to win an evening at the Barnes with every purchase until October 31.

WIN an evening at the Barnes exhibit. All proofs of purchases made between October 4/94 and October 31/94 will be entered in a draw from which one winner will be selected November 2 1994

A Fieldgate update on various projects

Fieldgate Construction is a family business which has been building homes for 35 years. Known mainly for townhouses, semi-detached and detached homes on 30- to 60-foot lots, most with two-car garages, Fieldgate owes its success to a marriage of quality and affordability. Across Greater Toronto, from Burlington to Whitby and as far north as Aurora, there are sites developed by Fieldgate.

The next phase of Fieldgate's Glen Abbey project in Oakville is scheduled to open for sale in the middle of October. Situated on 40-foot lots, these houses are priced from the lower $200,000's up.

On Fieldgate's site at Bathurst and Highway 7, there are 200 houses on 40- and 50-foot lots, from $240,000 up. These homes range in size from 1,800 to 4,000 square feet; many have walkout basements, and all have two- or even three-car garages. Half of these properties have been sold, and many are already occupied. This location has a special appeal, with plenty of ravine lots and extensive wooded areas.

The Bayview Hills development at Leslie and Highway 16 has homes from 3,300 to nearly 5,000 square feet on 50- and 60-foot lots, priced from $450,000 up.

Another project, also scheduled for late 1994 or early 1995, will open in Oshawa. In addition, there are two sites in Mississauga, at the Hunt Club and Credit Valley.

Fieldgate guarantees its work, and insists on quality in materials and workmanship. It has been awarded the HUDAC Certificate of Excellence, given only to builders who meet the standards set under the Ontario New Home Warranty Plan.

Careful attention is paid to design and layout. Large kitchens and family rooms are characteristic, with plenty of windows for ample light. Use of space is well thought out, with floor plans that allow furniture to be moved easily in and out, or from room to room. Styles vary from Georgian to modern; stonework and clay brick predominate.

The Bathurst site is open from Monday to Thursday 1:00 to 8:00 p.m., Friday 1:00 to 4:00 p.m., Sunday 11:00 a.m. to 6:00 p.m., and closed Saturdays; phone (905) 889-2949. For information on other Fieldgate sites, call the head office of CMF Realty, (416) 241-6000.

By BEN ROSE
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — The stated aim of Tempest Theatre in staging The Merchant of Venice was to show that intolerance can lead to hatred of Jews or hatred of Christians.

Though this is indeed a noble aspiration, the theatre's production of Shakespeare's play at Tarragon Extra Space Sept. 21-Oct. 1 proved once again that The Merchant of Venice is a rabidly anti-Semitic play.

The producers staged it in modern dress; the Venetians met in a trendy restaurant; Antonio's colleagues gossiped on cellular phones; and Shylock's daughter Jessica wore a cross and a daring dress. But the message of the play stayed the same: the evil Jewish money-lender wanted to cut a pound of flesh from Antonio's heart as an act of revenge.

Though the production did highlight the self-serving nature of Bassanio, who wanted to wed wealthy Portia and asked Antonio to borrow 3,000 ducats from Shylock on his behalf, and though it underlined Antonio's unredeeming hatred of Shylock and all Jews, it still ignited anti-Jewish feeling in the audience. No amount of sophistry will change that.

In the program notes, director Jonathan Bryn Llyr writes: "The wonder of the The Merchant of Venice lies in its ability to allow the audience to choose its own underlying meaning or intent. Is this play anti-Semitic? Yes, if you find it so. Shakespeare certainly leaves you free to decide. But you may thereby reveal more of yourself than of this play."

Yes, this reviewer found it anti-Semitic. If I thereby reveal that I am opposed to plays that whip up passions against my fellow Jews, I plead guilty.

Michael Booth portrayed Shylock in a restrained manner until the court scene where he sharpened the knife he intends to use on Antonio.

Presumably producers Keri Alletson and Michael Booth hoped to arouse sympathy for Shylock by characterizing daughter Jessica as a strumpet who gladly married a Christian to displease her father and then steals Shylock blind. At the end, in a stunning reversal, Jessica refused the share of her father's estate that Antonio had wrung for her.

"There is nothing in the text that says she turned down the money, but that's our interpretation," said Alletson.

Director Llyr portrayed Antonio as an unfeeling lout who required Shylock to turn Christian as part of the penalty of losing the court case through Portia's intervention.

Portia herself, played by a kittenish Lesley Livingston, was a bit of an enigma, at once an up-to-the-minute career woman writing notes on the back of her secretary, and also a woman determined to satisfy her own desires with Bassanio (Daniel Levinson).

Jerusalem — a source of wonder, acrimony

By SHELDON KIRSHNER
CJN Staff Reporter

Jerusalem may be the most contested city in our universe.

Fought over and repeatedly conquered and reconquered, Jerusalem has been a much-vaunted prize throughout the centuries.

Today, under Israeli sovereignty, Jerusalem is still the object of much ardor.

And as the film Holy Madness suggests, an "excess of love" may well account for the powerful effect Israel's capital exerts on the faithful of three monotheistic religions.

Holy Madness, which will be screened on Vision TV on Oct. 14 at 9 p.m., argues that Jerusalem reinforces nationalism among Jews, Christians and Muslims. Moreover, in the bizarre Jerusalem Syndrome, it even drives some visitors to distraction, violence and madness.

There are Jews who yearn to rebuild the temple, even though the site is occupied by one of the holiest mosques in Islam. In 1982, an American Jew, Allan Goodman, tried to burn down the Dome of the Rock, which is revered by Muslims. (In the late 1960s, an Australian tourist was arrested for an identical attempt.)

There are Christians who hanker for the day when Jews will convert, thus hastening the return of Jesus in the Second Coming. (There are also Christians, such as those who subscribe to the tenets of the International Christian Embassy, who love Jews because they are indebted to them for their "spiritual roots.")

Finally, there are Muslims, like one of the leaders of Israel's Islamic movement, who are convinced that Jerusalem is the patrimony of Islam.

So, as Holy Madness makes it abundantly clear, Jerusalem — a symbol of unity and devisiveness — is all things to all people, a source of wonder and acrimony.

Vision TV series examines quest of British rabbi

By BEN ROSE
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — A British rabbi's autobiographical quest for spiritual fulfilment is the subject of a five-part, half-hour TV series on Vision TV, beginning Tuesday, Oct. 11 at 9 p.m. and running weekly.

From the vantage point of his own work as a rabbi in suburban London, Rabbi Lionel Blue looks back on the time when, as a callow youth he went to Belliol College, Oxford, leaving his home in the east end of London behind.

"The world was in ashes, the Yiddish Theatre was gone and British synagogues were decaying," he says.

His ecclesiastical studies and travels led him to phone his parents at one point and ask permission to become a monk.

"My mother said, 'Over my dead body you'll become a monk. Your father says we'll give you a free trip to Israel and will cure you of all this stuff.' "

By the time the series In Search of Holy England ends, Rabbi Blue goes back to his rabbinate, having discovered the difference between cleverness and wisdom, and having learned much about human love from an accidental meeting with a group of Quakers in Norfolk.

His encounters with monks in northern English retreats, he says, reminded him of the rabbis in his youth who studied Torah far into the night, also for no material rewards.

BILL GLADSTONE'S

EYE ON ARTS

If you miss major league baseball this fall, you may find literary solace in some of the short stories, poems and essays of Shel Krakofsky. A practitioner of family medicine who lives in the small southern Ontario farming community of Komoka, near London, Krakofsky grew up in Toronto, and has written numerous stories and sketches about Jewish life in Toronto that are funny, nostalgic and original.

Evidently mirroring his childhood, his 1993 book Listening For Somersaults (General Publishing, $10) is filled with Yiddishkeit and baseball lore in almost equal measure. He brings the two seemingly divergent topics together in a clever epilogue entitled, Baseball As Personal Metaphor. In part an encomium to Sandy Koufax, who refused to pitch in a World Series opening game on Yom Kippur, the essay draws many parallels between the symbolism, rituals and rules of Judaism and those of baseball — happily, without trivializing either.

Minyan needed

Krakofsky observes that a minyan is needed both in the synagogue and on the baseball diamond: "While there are nine players on the field, a 10th, the batter, is required for a minimum quorum for the game to proceed."

He also claims that the Torah starts out with a baseball allusion: "In the big-inning..." Few essayists can so elegantly cite sources as comically diverse as Yogi Berra and Reb Levi-Yitzchak of Berdichev, the 18th-century chassidic sage.

Several other pieces in the collection also deal with baseball, including an introductory poem which says that "the Jew is always a runner at first...afraid of being picked off...wondering eternally how to arrive safely at the place called Home."

But my personal favorites have nothing to do with baseball. They are Zaida, the author's memoir of his remarkable relationship with his grandfather; The Monster of Miracle Mart, which portrays a beloved bubbie at her aggravating best; Ginsberg's Mechitza, an engrossing albeit somewhat bewildering allegory about an old-time Jewish shopkeeper; and Something Like A Rabbi, which records the comical process through which the Soproner, a fictitious downtown shule, chooses a new spiritual leader.

Krakofsky is also the author of The Reversible Coat (Moonstone Press, 1991; $9.95), a collection of poems that American writer Cynthia Ozick called "resplendent and touching and important." With such talent and passion for literature, the Komoka doctor was a natural choice when an ad hoc committee of Jewish-Canadian literary enthusiasts went in search of an editor for Parchment, a journal of contemporary Canadian Jewish writing.

That was three years ago and, as noted recently in this column, the third edition of Parchment was recently published. Krakofsky, still at the editorial helm, was assisted by Michael Greenstein (fiction editor), Kenneth Sherman (poetry editor) and a six-person editorial board.

Canadian Babylon

"There was a need for a vehicle for Canadian Jewish literary expression in English," Krakofsky explains. "There has been great concern about the diminishing Jewish expression in the Canadian Babylon. At one time almost all Canadian Jews expressed themselves in Yiddish. When Yiddish died, Jews writing in English became more Canadian and less Jewish. What we're trying to do with Parchment is to have Canadian Jews express themselves as Jews in English."

A neatly woven garment of many colors, Parchment 1994-95 is filled with a diverse assortment of stories and poems that collectively attest to the strength of the Jewish literary scene in Canada. The anthology brings together a number of isolated writers with distinctly different voices and styles, from the poetic, reductionist prose of Miriam Margles in Mapping A Small Planet, to Michael Newman's astonishing and skillful use of a 12-year-old's voice in the story, Christmas.

The collection also features Restitution, a gripping story by W. Gunther Plaut, rabbi emeritus of Holy Blossom Temple, who is perhaps the most widely known writer in the collection — or perhaps not. The story Rosh Hashana, which I regard as one of the best in the collection, was authored by "Lev Kraftchek" — a pseudonym for an unidentified writer and teacher.

A subscription to the independent, non-profit, annual journal costs $12 per year. All three issues are still available. Send cheque or money order to Parchment, 445 Hamilton Rd., London, Ontario N5Z 1S2.

Marc Jordan to perform Oct. 15

By BEN ROSE
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Singer Marc Jordan is celebrating his return from Los Angeles with a concert Oct. 15 at Bathurst Street Theatre.

The 46-year-old son of the late Charles Jordan, a popular Jewish radio singer of the 1930s and 1940s, Jordan remembers his father singing him to sleep with Maritime folk songs. The elder Jordan died six years ago at the age of 72, while still active as a voice teacher.

The Toronto concert will include Rhythm of My Heart, a song Marc penned for Rod Stewart, which became a worldwide smash hit in the '90s. He has also written songs for Bette Midler, Chicago, Manhattan Transfer, Kansas and Diana Ross.

"I thought all fathers had their own radio show," Jordan said. "Music was all around me as a child and I took piano lessons before settling on guitar."

Jordan is as well known for his hard-hitting

His song Little Lambs was inspired by the story of the Children of Duplessis, children born out of wedlock in Quebec in the '40s and '50s who were branded retarded or insane so their orphanages could be paid three times as much for their care than for normal children. So compelling are its lyrics that CBC-TV used the song in its documentary on the subject. It is also out on a single video.

Jordan's song Burning Down the Amazon became the anthem for Earth Day, Taken from the album COW, an acronym for Conserve our World, the song is a scathing condemnation of the destruction of Brazil's rain forests.

Once again a confirmed resident of Toronto — "there's great music coming out of the city" — Jordan is back where he grew up. His mother, Eleanor, lives in Toronto, as does one of his brothers, Michael, a video producer. His oldest brother, Malcolm, is a speech writer in Ottawa and a younger brother, Widor, is a cellist in Philadelphia.

One-act jewels open theatre season

TORONTO — A story about a mother who competes with her daughter is one of two intriguing Canadian one-act plays which opened the Solar Stage season. They run until Oct. 8 in the North York theatre in the Madison Centre on Yonge St.

Mother of Pearl by Catherine Hayos, Rena Polley and Howie Wiseman plays in tandem with Jewel by Joan MacLeod, which features a powerful performance by Catherine McNally as the widow of a man lost in the sinking of the Ocean Ranger oil rig off the coast of Newfoundland in 1982.

Though Mother of Pearl is a comedy, full of innovative staging and replete with laughs, its underlying message is a serious one — the failure of others to let daughters live their own lives, and the reluctance of daughters to forge ahead on their own.

The imaginative direction by Wiseman and the faultless performances by Hayos as the mother and Polley as the daughter bring to life every mother-daughter domestic tiff in the book.

The contradiction and peer pressure of modern life are well illustrated when mother advises daughter as she leaves for university: "Be modest and discreet, but popular and sought after."

Jewel, directed by Rebecca Conn, is more than the lament of a single Ocean Ranger widow, it is the painful growing up of Marjorie Clifford, a wallflower at teen dances in Calgary, who finds happiness as the wife of a rancher in Alberta's Peace River Valley.

But the happiness is short-lived, for her husband, Harry, needing funds to keep up the farm, goes to the east coast for a job on the Ocean Ranger.

BOOKS

By BERNARD BASKIN

Fear Of Fifty, by Erica Jong (HarperCollins, $29.95).

Two decades ago, Erica Jong's lubricious novel, Fear of Flying, won her fame and fortune. John Updike waxed enthusiastic. "The book," he wrote, "has class and sass, brightness and the bite . . . and her cheerful sexual frankness brings a new flavor to female prose."

Jong's narrative detailed the amorous education and adventures of a young woman determined to experience life to the fullest. It was funny, frank, brash and outrageous — unflinching in its observations of her role in the battle between the sexes.

Now, at 50, concerned with aging and fearful of the future, she sets down her thoughts on a wide range of subjects. "Modern women," she complains, "are part of a Whiplash Generation raised to be Doris Day . . . yearning to be Gloria Steinhem (and raising) our midlife daughters in the age of Nancy Reagan and Princess Di."

It is no surprise that women reaching 50 are in a state of perplexity and rage. None of the things they counted on have come to pass, she writes. "Instead, the ground under their feet keeps constantly shifting."

Surprisingly, at 50, this pampered and hedonistic woman is concerned with the spiritual emptiness of society and the relentless dicta of the marketplace. "My body is not the issue. It's whether or not I have the right to my immortal soul . . . It is not a matter of ad and fashion. It is not a matter of new-age or 12-step hype. It is the essence of whether we are allowed to be fully human or not. If you own your soul, you don't have to be afraid at 50."

In the chapter entitled How I Got to be Jewish, Jong regrets her lack of identification with Judaism and the Jewish people. "It seems astonishing to me that a woman born at the height of the Holocaust should not have been trained to a stronger sense of Judaism. And I also begin to regret not having raised [daughter] Molly more Jewishly, and not having had more Jewish children to replace those lost among the six million.

"Lately I have begun to yearn for solidarity with other Jewish feminists, to join the search for nonsexist Jewish rituals, to celebrate my Jewishness without shame, without internalized anti-Semitism, and to embrace my Jewishness as part of my search for truth in my writing."

Where the mitzvot are concerned she writes, with tongue in cheek, that women had better get busy in observing them if they want to enter " 'the obscure heaven of the Jews.' If men need 613 mitzvahs, I figure women need 1,839."

Despite myths to the contrary, Jong believes there is still plenty of anti-Semitism in America — especially of a social nature. "Otherwise, we'd be saying 'next year in Oyster Bay' or 'Grosse Pointe,' instead of 'Next Year in Jerusalem.'

Her 1987 historical novel, Serenissima, concerned a Jewish heroine in 16th-century Venice who meets and falls in love with a youthful William Shakespeare. "Venice in the 16th century was Manhattan in the early 20th century: teeming with Jews driven out of Europe and the Middle East, designed to enrich the Christian world and to change it forever . . . they became a force. And they prospered. And Venice prospered."

She is genuinely puzzled and angry at women who are resentful or jealous of their successful sisters. "I realized gradually that women had managed to do to me what men no longer had the power to do: make me feel utterly and absolutely in the wrong, make me hate my own creativity, distrust my own impression. Every time I put pen to paper I would see a chorus of jeering women telling me that everything I said was not worth saying."

Written with verve and dash, often touching and wise, this memoir of the introspective author at 50 — although not recommended to the traditionally religious or decorous reader — will stimulate discussion and, undoubtedly, some titillation.

Yiddish psychiatrist set to visit Toronto

By BEN ROSE
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — A prominent Yiddish psychiatrist and scholar from Moscow is making his first appearance in Toronto this month.

Dr. Moshe Wolf, chief psychiatrist at the Moscow City Psychiatric Hospital from 1962 to 1992, and a prolific contributor to Yiddish journals in the former Soviet Union and in North America, is now a resident of Portland, Ore.

His will speak in Yiddish on Stalin's Lost War Against the Jews, Tuesday, Oct. 11, at 8 p.m. at Workmen's Circle Hall, 471 Lawrence Avenue W. The meeting is under the auspices of Yiddishe Kultur Geselshaft, Friends of Yiddish and the Jewish Federation of Greater Toronto's Committee for Yiddish.

Wolf will also speak at a workshop of the International Conference of Yiddish Clubs on Monday, Oct. 10 at 9:30 a.m. The workshop, 1200 Years of Ashkenazi Jewry, will be held at the Bloor Street JCC.

Wolf was a guest speaker on the Forward's 95th anniversary conference in New York and at the Greater Washington Yiddish conference in May 1993. He is a world-renowned scholar in the fields of Yiddish and Hebrew literature, Jewish history and Judaism. He has had several books published in Yiddish.

New Technique Relieves Headaches

Everyone gets them in one form or another. A headache is a pain that lasts several minutes or hours; it may cover the whole head, one side of it, or sometimes the front or back. The pain may be steady or throbbing, barely noticeable, or completely debilitating. To add to the confusion some people call any dizzy, tense, or queer feeling in the head, a headache. Doctors feel that a headache is not a disease by itself but rather a symptom-perhaps the first warning-of a serious condition that probably could be controlled if detected early.

A recurrent and overlooked cause of headaches is the malfunction of spinal bones in the neck. When the bones of the spine lose their normal position or motion, sensitive nerves and blood vessels to the head can be affected. This may occur from sleeping, poor posture, car accidents, stress, virtually anything that involves moving the head. When spinal nerves and related tissues are stretched or irritated they can produce throbbing headaches. Aspirin and medications may cover up these warning signs, but do not correct the underlying structural cause.

There are 11 pairs of muscles that connect the head to the body. Some of these muscles are as small as your little finger. When a nervous system dysfunction occurs the muscles supporting the head and the neck becomes weak, or gets tight and goes into spasm. This forms "Trigger Points" in the belly of the muscle. A trigger point is similar to a muscle cramp. It is an area of uncontrolled muscle tightness causing tenderness that interferes with normal range of motion and refers pain to the head. If left untreated, scar tissue penetrates these muscles and changes their elasticity by forming adhensions. Over a long period of time the damage may become irreversible. For example, a whiplash-type injury can cause headaches to occur years after the accident.

Currently, one of the best treatments today is Trigger Point Therapy. Using the hands, the skin is gently pressed to locate underlying tight bands or nodules of muscle fibers. The muscle is compressed with sustained pressure to relax it. As pressure is applied, some patients experience temporary discomfort until the muscle relaxes. Others may feel instant relief.

Trigger Point Therapy is a highly effective way to reduce muscle spasms and relax tight knots in the neck. The patient benefits from improved range of motion with less scar tissue formation. In our clinic we notice that patients get relief from their headaches when the trigger points are gone.

L'Oreal Cosmetics: Mired in Controversy

Jewish Telegraphic Agency

WASHINGTON — Mired in controversy over its alleged compliance with the Arab boycott of Israel, the international cosmetics giant L'Oreal is about to make a multimillion dollar series of investments in several Israeli ventures.

The plans, which include a manufacturing plant, an export agreement and a focus on research and development, represent a bold departure for the company, which has been criticized for bowing to Arab pressure not to do business with Israel.

The question remains, however, whether these investments will mollify opponents of the company, who include several Jewish groups and at least two members of Congress.

In a telephone interview from his Paris office, L'Oreal Vice President Jean Pierre Valeriola said the company is taking these steps because "Israel is a country with a good economy, and we are trying to develop our market."

L'Oreal has come under heated criticism since the 1980s for alleged compliance with the Arab boycott of Israel. As recently as this past July, New York Democratic Reps. Charles Schumer and Jerrold Nadler were calling for a boycott of the company to protest its policies toward Israel.

Steamrollers crushing L'Oreal cosmetics on a midtown street at high noon? Full-page New York Times ads blasting the world's largest cosmetics company? And pro-L'Oreal faxes pouring into news organizations across the world?

What's going on in the protracted fight between the French cosmetics giant and the Jewish community?

When L'Oreal invested $7 million in Israel recently, Jewish organizations monitored the transaction with keen interest. The firm had been accused of complying with the Arab boycott of Israel. So Jewish officials watched the deal for signs that the power of the boycott might be waning.

In its transaction, L'Oreal bought a 30 per cent interest in Interbeauty, a company that distributes L'Oreal products in Israel. While the Anti-Defamation League and other groups praised the investment, they promised to continue monitoring L'Oreal activities.

"L'Oreal appears to have recognized a problem in its past dealings and has taken an important step to change things," said Jess Hordes, Washington director of the Anti-Defamation League.

Though L'Oreal's move appeared to go against the boycott, some observers charged that the French firm had only made a half-hearted gesture carefully designed not to antagonize the Arabs.

"The boycott office will be satisfied it's accomplishing its goal, as long as L'Oreal doesn't build factories that can provide jobs in Israel and develop exports," said Rabbi Abraham Cooper, associate dean of the Simon Wiesenthal Centre, who has spoken with L'Oreal officials and monitored the case.

Rabbi Cooper asked L'Oreal to take additional steps, opening new factories in Israel and publicly renouncing the boycott. Such actions could provide a crucial boost to the Mideast peace negotiations, he said. "The boycott is a major bargaining chip that is being used by [President Hafez al-]Assad of Syria in his negotiations," he said. "If L'Oreal and other big companies would denounce the boycott, they could take that chip away from Assad and make it more likely he would compromise with Israel."

In fact, L'Oreal has just made a $1 million donation supporting a nationwide Israeli campaign aimed at combating traffic accidents. Also, the company has announced that it has stationed a full-time representative in Jerusalem to explore the possibility of investing in manufacturing facilities in Israel. L'Oreal says it has been enjoying strong sales in Israel, and is looking for more investment opportunities there.

Under the boycott, companies doing business with Israel may be barred from dealing with the Arab world. It is illegal to comply with the boycott in the United States and France. But Arab and U.S. officials have admitted that the boycott is all but dead following the recent peace agreements Israel has signed with Jordan and the PLO. The battle over L'Oreal, then, may be one more over past wrongs.

But the ramifications for L'Oreal are still very real. L'Oreal denies cooperating with Syria and other hard-liners to discourage outsiders from doing business with Israel. In a statement issued this week, the company said it "did not comply with the boycott of Israel, and L'Oreal is opposed to the boycott of Israel."

Most of the boycott's actions remain shadowy. But French documents provided an unusually detailed description of how L'Oreal communicated with the boycott office in Damascus during the 1980s.

According to the documents, L'Oreal was blacklisted in 1988 after it acquired subsidiaries of Helena Rubinstein, a company with long dealings in Israel. To satisfy Damascus, L'Oreal wrote a letter to the boycott office describing a series of actions that included closing a plant in Israel.

In 1989, the boycott office took the French company off the blacklist. So far, L'Oreal doesn't seem to have been blacklisted for its recent Israeli investment.

The boycott documents emerged when a French judge seized them for a case in Paris. Now the French case has moved to federal Court in Manhattan, where the charges may be aired again.

In the suit, an Israeli businessman claims L'Oreal broke a contract with him to satisfy demands by the Arab boycott. L'Oreal denies the charges.

The suit was filed by Jean Frydman and his brother David who had invested in a joint venture with L'Oreal. Jean Frydman, a well-known figure in French and Israeli business circles, holds dual citizenship in Israel and France. Born in France, he joined the Resistance during World War II and fought the Nazi occupation for five years.

After the war, Frydman and his brother owned a variety of media investments, including a large radio network in France whose major advertisers included L'Oreal.

While they expanded in France, the Frydmans also made a series of investments in Israel. Jean became chair of the Kol Israel radio operation and head of Israel's satellite program, a government-private operation whose board boasts several retired Israeli generals, including a former head of the Mossad, Israel's chief intelligence agency.

Frydman joined forces with L'Oreal in the late 1980s, when the cosmetics company decided to purchase media businesses. To move into an area where he had little expertise, Francois Dalle, chair of L'Oreal, asked Jean Frydman to form a joint venture.

In the deal, L'Oreal would put up most of the money, while the Frydmans would negotiate acquisitions of film companies and other businesses. Called Paravision, the joint venture began operating in 1988.

Frydman made purchases, and was beginning to negotiate purchasing Columbia Pictures, the Hollywood company. Before he could make the deal, Frydman needed approval from L'Oreal executives and also executives from Nestle, since the Swiss food company holds a major stake in L'Oreal.

According to Frydman, he was at a meeting in Paris when Dalle and other executives told him that Nestle and L'Oreal were concerned about being boycotted by the Arabs.

"They said they were trying to get off the blacklist," Frydman said. "They asked questions about my involvement in Israel. Dalle asked me if I would be willing to resign my Israeli executives for six months. He said that would give them time to get off the blacklist."

When Frydman refused, Dalle suggested that Frydman resign from the joint venture. "I said, 'Are you crazy?' " Frydman recalled in a phone conversation. "That's against the law, and I would never do something to help the Arab boycott."

A few months later L'Oreal broke with Frydman. Frydman sued the company, claiming he was owed money and was discriminated against because of the boycott.

Dalle denied Frydman's version of events. He said he never suggested Frydman should resign. L'Oreal claimed the dispute was only about a business partnership that no longer worked.

"Frydman came out of the deal with $33 million, but he wants even more," said Jody Pope, an attorney with Bryan Cave, which is representing L'Oreal in the Federal Court case. "He's wrapping his private dispute in the clothing of a religious crusade. It's an extremely offensive campaign."

In the weeks before he filed suit, Frydman learned a disturbing fact: The group of L'Oreal executives who masterminded his ouster included a convicted Nazi, Jacques Correze, head of Cosmair, the New York-based company that oversees L'Oreal's operations in the United States.

Shocked at the revelation, Frydman called on Serge Klarsfeld, the well-known Nazi hunter, to investigate. Klarsfeld found that Correze was a collaborator who served five years in prison after the war for pro-Nazi activities. In response to Klarsfeld's report, the United States barred Correze fromn entering America. Meanwhile, Correze left the United States and died.

L'Oreal said Correze had been considered rehabilitated after his prison term. He was deliberately hired by the cosmetics company in 1950 as part of their efforts to heal the divisions of the war.

Meanwhile, as Frydman's court case proceeded in Paris, the judge seized records from a L'Oreal office. By accident, the court came onto a treasure trove of material about the Arab boycott.

"In one half hour, that judge found out more about the Arab boycott than the Israelis had been able to learn in 40 years of trying," said Frydman.

In detailed letters uncovered by the court, the boycott office in Damascus informed L'Oreal that the cosmetics company had violated the boycott rules when it purchased Helena Rubinstein subsidiaries in the early 1980s. The Syrians told the French company to cease operating in Israel and to stop using the Helena Rubinstein name. L'Oreal responded by saying that it had met all the provisions of the boycott.

As L'Oreal explained to Damascus, it had bought several subsidiaries of Helena Rubenstein around the world. But the French company did not own Helena Rubenstein's Israeli unit — Israeli investors owned that business. L'Oreal simply licensed the Israelis, giving them the right to make products and use the Helena Rubenstein name.

L'Oreal assured the Arabs that by the end of 1988 the Israeli "company is to stop for good the manufacturing of the Helena Rubenstein products." L'Oreal would see to it that instead of manufacturing, the Israelis would import products from Germany. In other communications, L'Oreal noted it would see to it that Helena Rubenstein units changed their names.

L'Oreal concedes it made the moves described in the correspondence. But it claims the steps were taken for valid businress reasons — not to appease the boycott. "It happened to be compatible with what the Arabs wanted," said Stanley Marcus, an attorney with Brian Cave who represents L'Oreal.

Rabbi Cooper calls L'Oreal's explanation of the moves "insulting" and says that the company did not try to explain away the documents when he met with executives recently in Paris.

Jean Frydman and L'Oreal disagree about the results of the French legal action that unearthed the documents. L'Oreal says the French court rejected Frydman's charges. Frydman says he was called in by an aide to French President Francois Mitterand who asked him to drop the case, since it could embarrass the French business establishment. Instead of continuing the court battle, the aide proposed having a commission investigate the matter.

Frydman agreed to have a jurist picked by L'Oreal and French Jewish organizations look at the evidence. When the jurist died, the Jewish organizations picked a new investigator.

In November 1993, the investigator found that L'Oreal had cooperated with the boycott. L'Oreal disputed the findings and said it had not participated in selecting the investigator and had not presented him with its side of the story.

Dissatisfied with the French proceedings, Frydman decided to bring his case to an American court, where he felt he could get a better hearing and win damages. L'Oreal contends the United States does not have jurisdiction over the French company. The court will have to decide that point.

Frydman had also notified the U.S. Commerce Department about L'Oreal activities with the Arab boycott. Commerce is investigating the matter. Under American law, simply responding to letters from the boycott office as L'Oreal did is illegal. However, it's not clear whether Commerce has jurisdiction. Frydman argues that since L'Oreal's big New York office played a major role in the case, the United States should have jurisdiction.

If Frydman wins, it would be a blow for a pillar of the French business establishment that has tried to distance itself from wartime memories of anti-Semitic activities. But even if Frydman loses, he may serve to publicize the Arab boycott and help put other companies on notice about the law.

Calgary business leaders examine Israel's potential

By RICHARD BRONSTEIN
Jewish Free Press

CALGARY — While Israel may be one 25th the size of Alberta, the small state is emerging as an economic dynamo, with an average growth rate of six per cent in each of the past three years.

"But the potential has only been scratched by Canadian companies," said Benjamin Noy, Israel's economic consul and trade commissioner to Canada.

At a recent seminar for Calgary business leaders, Noy explained that what Israel lacks in natural resources, it more than makes up for in human resources.

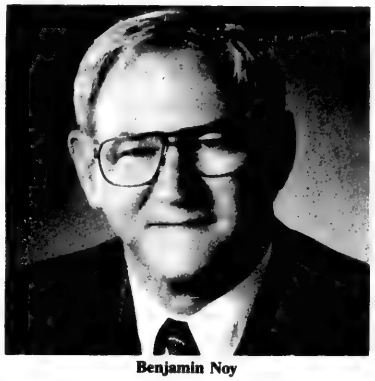
Representatives of several multinational corporations active in Israel supported the trade commissioner's views with their own stories.

The Sept. 12 seminar was sponsored by the Israel Economic Mission to Canada, the Alberta Ministry of Economic Development and Tourism, the Calgary Economic Development Authority, Tadiran Telecommunications and the Calgary Jewish Community Council.

Seminar participants learned that Israel has the highest proportion of engineers to population in the world, with 135 for each 10,000 people in the labor force compared to 38 for Canada.

"We do not have cheap labor," Noy said. "But we do offer to businesses highly skilled labor at a relatively low cost."

To harness this deep pool of R&D talent, Israel has co-funded a $100-million endowment fund with the United States for 10 years. Sales of products created through the fund have reached $1.5 billion. Israel has similar funds established with Germany, France, the Netherlands and now with Canada.



Benjamin Noy

Called the Canada-Israel Industrial Research and Development Fund, the recently created fund is headed by Dr. Henri Rothschild in Ottawa. It funds 50 per cent of the cost of developing new products or technologies by Canadian and Israeli firms. The $6-million fund is hoped to grow.

Canada-Israel free trade negotiators have so far failed to find common ground, but Noy said an agreement would benefit both countries as their industrial output is complementary rather than competitive.

"We believe in free trade," Noy said. "Israel is a small country and the only way a small country can prosper is through international trade and cooperation."

Companies such as Intel, Motorola and Digital, as well as major Canadian firms like Northern Telecom, Newbridge Networks and Babcock and Wilcox, are already active players in Israel. Most, but not all, international investment has been concentrated in the area of hi-tech industries.

Ottawa-based telecommunications firm Newbridge has seen its sales in Israel grow from $100,000 in 1989 to a projected $15 million in 1994. Overall, Newbridge is anticipating revenues of $750 million this year.

Larry Keith, a senior vice-president with the company, said Newbridge has a global marketing and research agreement with Israel's billion dollar electronic giant, Tadiran Telecommunications.

"With the prospects of long-term peace at hand, Israel has the potential to become the hub of the Middle East," Keith said. "Its manufacturing is state-of-the-art. The people are very creative with a strong work ethic."

Tadiran Canada is based in Edmonton and works with Alberta Government Telephone. The company is now marketing telecommunications equipment in Israel with MPR, a 600-person subsidiary of BC Tel.

Retired United States Air Force general Harold R. Johnson, a senior vice-president of Fairchild Corp., was also at the seminar. Fairchild Corp. has interests in the aircraft industry, telecommunications and industrial manufacturing, and Johnson travels to Israel every four to six weeks to oversee the Teuza Venture Capital Fund.

With $6 million from Fairchild, Bank Leumi and two other major Israeli corporations, the Teuza ("to strive") fund has raised an additional $16 million through a public offering on the Tel Aviv Stock Exchange to fund the growth of promising hi-tech companies. The venture fund has made 11 investments since 1992 in semiconductors, software, biogenetics and medicine.

One of the firms it is backing has developed a tomato which thrives in high salinity soil. Another firm has desktop computers that print on color plates, thereby eliminating several steps in the traditional printing process. Teuza is also backing a product which electrically stimulates the muscles of stroke victims to prevent atrophy.

Another Teuza venture is Misat Satellite Communications, developer of a low-price microwave satellite transmitter-receiver. The company's ground stations are 40 per cent cheaper than similar units in a market worth hundreds of millions of dollars.

For those interested in establishing business contacts in Israel, Noy can set up appointments with prospective partners and buyers and help in dealing with Israeli bureaucracy.

'Corporate spies' evaluate and monitor firm operations

By CAROLYN BLACKMAN
Special to The CJN

TORONTO — Call them mystery shoppers or corporate spies, but whatever you call them, Sensors Quality Management Inc. (SQM) is there to tell you how your business is being run when you are not around.

Owned by partners David Lipton and Craig Henry, SQM was formed just over a year ago to independently evaluate businesses. Although it specializes in the hospitality field, its services are available to all industries world-wide.

Lipton says he realized the service was needed when he began to get "a bit disenchanted with seeing Canadian businesses not doing as well as American businesses. The main difference is that American businesses spend more time, effort and money on training and monitoring their employees. A lot of U.S. companies are using quality control work."

SQM evaluates a business from the customer's perspective based on the company's own standards and criteria. "If a hotel's phone is to be answered in three rings, we'll check out the situation," Lipton said.

He said SQM is often called upon to check out a company's competition. "It is generally acknowledged in business that most companies like to see what their competition is doing. We can do their work for them and they can save their manpower for something else."

Lipton was recently a mystery shopper at several restaurants "and I was both disappointed and pleasantly surprised." At one restaurant, "things were not running smoothly," but another was doing fine.

Not that the well-run restaurant has no further need of SQM, Lipton said. "They can use this information to reinforce their philosophy and service standards. They can give one person a pat on the back and help others strive for better work. The best quality service program is ongoing."

Lipton said SQM can tell managers whether staff is knowledgeable about products and services, if employees are professional and courteous, if service meets expectations and if the staff is pro-active or reactive.

He stressed however, that SQM is not a consulting company. "Our representatives do not advise or counsel our clients on how their operation should be run. Rather, we observe and report, based on our client's criteria."

Lipton said that although clients use SQM for a variety of reasons, his company provides three major benefits. "First, clients obtain detailed feedback on how their business is performing in relationship to its own specific standards. Second, the information obtained during the study of operation can be used to isolate areas which may require attention or change. Finally, both strengths and weaknesses of people in the organization are identified. This can assist companies in determining areas of further employee development."

He said quality products and quality service begin with quality thinking "and it is about time that Canadian companies pulled up their socks and began thinking quality and service."

BETH DIN 'PROZBUL' CEREMONY

In a beth din (Jewish court) proceeding, coinciding with the onset of the Jewish calendar year 5755, Talmudic scholars from Yeshiva University's affiliated Rabbi Isaac Elchanan Theological Seminary (RIETS) issue a 'prosbul' to executives of United Mizrahi Bank and Trust Company (UMB), upholding the bank's right under Jewish law to collect on some $130 million in unpaid debts. Seated (left to right) RIETS Rabbis Mordechai Willig, Rabbi Dr. Sol Roth Zevulun Charlop, Max and Marion Grill Dean and Moshe Tendler. Standing (left to right) UMB representatives Vice-President Yossie Roth, President Moshe Rosen and Mark Grunwald, chief flanancial officer.

This week The CJN features... The Fabulous Harvey Seigel Band

By RUTH SCHWEITZER

TORONTO — Harvey Seigel has brought happiness to thousands of people by playing the music they love.

In the process, he has created two of the busiest bands in the country.

The Fabulous Harvey Seigel Band has been performing at weddings, bar and bat mitzvahs, corporate events, awards dinners, fundraisers and music festivals for 25 years.

Harvey Seigel's All-Star Jazz Band was formed three years ago to meet the demand for jazz standards and classics, particularly the music of great American composers such as George Gershwin, Cole Porter and Duke Ellington.

Versatility is one of the keys to the success of the bands, Seigel says. Both have a diverse repertoire — cha-chas, bossa novas, polkas, show tunes, Dixieland, swing, jazz standards, klezmer, Israeli music, '50s rock 'n' roll and contemporary hits.

All-Star Jazz Band members dress in period costumes, like the red-and-white striped vests, red hats and bow ties worn for a recent strolling Dixieland jazz event.

The bands can be made up of anywhere from three to 16 professional musicians, including male and female vocalists.

The size depends on the budget, the acoustics of the hall, audience size, the theme of the event and the type of music requested. For example, a four-person band playing a variety of music, including hits of the '80s and '90s, would be too small for a location with 20-foot ceilings.

Seigel said there is a popular misconception that the size of the band denotes only volume. Symphony orchestras are large, he explained, yet they never sound too loud as some musicians play while others pause. "It's for filling in and giving a fuller, more rounded sound."

Clients who pick music in advance do not always anticipate a crowd's taste, Seigel said. From his vantage point on stage — he is a vocalist who plays trombone, congo drums and harmonica — he "tests the waters and watches what motivates a crowd." If the crowd seems unethusiastic about the music the band is playing and he is getting requests for other types of music, he will change musical direction after getting the client's okay.

He works with his wife Sandra, whom he calls his "sound barometer." She circulates throughout the room and indicates whether sound should go up or down or whether a speaker should be repositioned. At weddings, she will coordinate the evening.

Seigel elevates the sound system above head level so the sound does not interfere with conversation at the tables near the stage. "Controlled volume is a very important thing," Seigel said. "People want to talk and they should be able to talk without raising their voices." After dinner, when the tempo picks up, he turns the volume up a bit.

Seigel stressed the music makes a simchah memorable. "If the music is incredible, they will have a wonderful evening. They will remember the party if they had a wonderful time, and that will only be due to the quality of the band and the musicians."

Seigel played harmonica, flute, ukelele, baritone ukelele and banjo at an early age. He learned trombone while attending Bloor Collegiate and at 17 formed a band that played dances and private affairs.

Seigel, now 56, is well-known in the jazz community, both here and in the United States. Two years ago he played trombone with the Wallace Davenport Band at the Maison Bourbon on Bourbon Street in New Orleans.

Seigel and his wife were in the New Orleans club as tourists, not knowing a soul there, when the band's drummer recognized him. Seigel ended up playing with the band for two nights. On the second night Davenport stepped down and let Seigel lead the band. "We played and played and played. It was an incredible evening," he said. "I was playing with the greats of New Orleans, playing the music we love."

RECIPE OF THE WEEK

Teriyaki Chicken and Cucumber Stir-Fry

Ingredients: 4 boneless, skinless chicken breast halves; 1 tbsp [15 mL] cornstarch; 4 tbsp [50 mL] bottled teriyaki sauce, divided; 1 clove garlic, minced; 1/2 large Ontario Greenhouse Cucumber; 4 tsp [20 mL] cornstarch; 1/2 cup [125 mL] water; 2 tbsp [25 mL] vegetable oil, divided; 1 medium onion, diced; 1/2 cup [125 mL] shredded carrot.

Cut chicken into 1/2 ubog [1 cm] pieces. Combine 1 tbsp [15 mL] cornstarch with 1 tbsp [15 mL] teriyaki sauce and garlic; stir in chicken. Let stand 15 minutes. Cub cucumber in half lenghtwise, then crosswise into 1/4 inch [6 mm] slices. Combine 4 tsp [20 mL] cornstarch, remaining teriyaki sauce and water.

Heat 1 tbsp [15 mL] oil in wok or large skillet over high heat. Add chicken and stir-fry for 2 minutes; remove. Heat remaining oil. Add cucumber, onion and carrot and stir-fry for 4 minutes or until crisp-tender. Add chicken and teriyaki sauce mixture. Cook and stir until sauce boils and thickens. Serve over noodles. Serves 4.

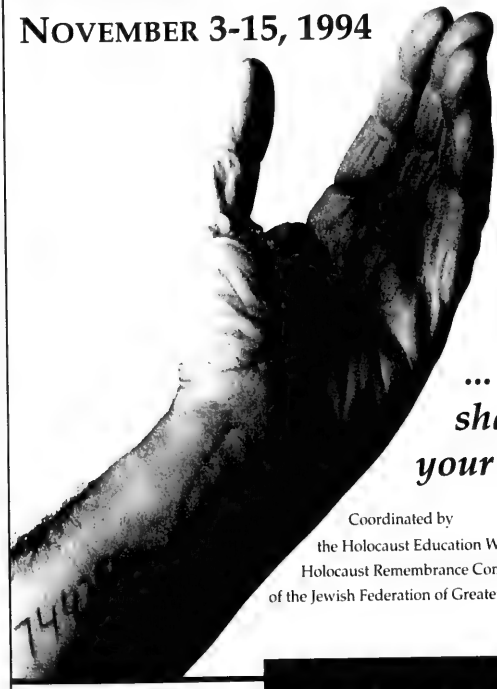
HOLOCAUST EDUCATION WEEK

NOVEMBER 3-15, 1994



... and you shall teach your children

Coordinated by the Holocaust Education Week Sub-Committee,
Holocaust Remembrance Committee of the Jewish Federation of Greater Toronto

REMEMBER

On behalf of the Holocaust Remembrance Committee, it is my pleasure to invite you to participate in the 14th Annual HOLOCAUST EDUCATION WEEK. The committee has worked very hard to provide you with a wide array of informative and stimulating programs, suited to all ages and interests.

As part of the Holocaust Remembrance Committee, HOLOCAUST EDUCATION WEEK serves to fulfill our mandate by both remembering the horrific events of 50 years ago and educating the community. Only through remembrance and education can we both honour the memory of those lost in the Holocaust and sensitize future generations to its lessons.

Our many other sub-committees also contribute with ongoing Holocaust education programming such as the annual community Yom Hashoah Commemoration; educational outreach to churches and schools; seminars for educators and students; documentation of survivors' testimonies; various special projects and exhibits and the permanent Holocaust Education and Memorial Centre.

It was 50 years ago that the Allies invaded Europe and the defeat of Germany was imminent. Yet, the Nazi killing machine was more vehement than ever and European Jewry was further decimated. At this time also, the whole world knew of the unspeakable atrocities of the death camps. Yet nothing was done. This great "darkness before the dawn" was a time of indifference, isolation and ignominy. As we witness continued persecution, "ethnic cleansing" and renewed anti-Semitism today, it is incumbent on us all to ensure that the warnings from the past do not go unheeded and we act to show our solidarity.

I would like to take this opportunity to both congratulate and thank Lilian Schacter and her outstanding committee, all volunteers, for their dedication and tireless efforts which have culminated in the excellent programs herein described.

The committee has done its part - now it's up to you! With a deeper understanding of our past, we can make a difference so that our actions today will realize our hopes for tomorrow.

Eleanor Getzler
Chairperson
Holocaust Remembrance Committee
Jewish Federation of Greater Toronto

PROGRAM CHAIRPERSON'S MESSAGE

For the past fourteen years, the HOLOCAUST EDUCATION WEEK Sub-Committee has coordinated this community-wide event which occurs around the date of Kristallnacht, November 9/10.

Our purpose is to educate the general public about the Holocaust, and to commemorate, on the eve of Kristallnacht, the beginning of a campaign of unimaginable brutality and terror against the Jewish people. We attempt to reach people of all ages, ethnic backgrounds and religions. The programs ensure a continuous examination of the events which led to such an unprecedented crime against humanity, and help us understand the incomprehensible annihilation of European Jewry from different perspectives.

During the Holocaust, we learned the brutal lessons of hatred, indifference, abandonment and victimization. Having learned these lessons, it, therefore, remains our duty to share this story and to create an awareness of the extreme dangers of religious and racial intolerance. We hope to teach not only about man's enormous capacity for evil but also about his ultimate goodness in the actions of the rescuer. We want to believe and hope to persuade young people that the humanitarian values of caring and compassion toward our fellow man must prevail over brutality and indifference.

In April 1993, the U.S. Holocaust Museum was opened in Washington, D.C. It is considered the American memorial to the 6 million Jews as well as the millions of other victims murdered by the Nazis during World War II. It has so far succeeded in its purpose to educate with an almost overwhelming response of visitors. We are fortunate to have as our opening night guest speaker Dr. Michael Berenbaum, whose expertise and commitment guided the Museum to fruition.

We are also presenting programs that deal with events that occurred fifty years ago - the deportation of Hungarian Jewry, the story of Hannah Senesh, and the landing of Allied troops in Europe. This brochure describes these programs in detail. We hope that you will attend many of them during this year's HOLOCAUST EDUCATION WEEK.

I extend my heartfelt thanks to my dedicated committee members. Without their hard work and commitment, this program would not have been possible. I also wish to extend a special thank you to Eleanor Getzler, chairperson, and Pnina Zilberman, director, of the Holocaust Remembrance Committee, Jewish Federation of Greater Toronto.

Hyman Goldman Adjunct Professor of Theology, Georgetown University, Washington, D.C.

"The North Americanization of the Holocaust"

As Project Director of the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Museum from 1988-1993, Dr. Berenbaum directed the creative staff that brought the Museum into being, and charted its intellectual course. He has authored numerous scholarly articles on the Holocaust and has had nine books published, most recently, The World Must Know. More than a catalogue of the Museum's exhibit, it is a work of superb scholarship documenting the human stories of the Holocaust.

> "The World Must Know by Michael Berenbaum is a skillfully organized and clearly told account of the German Holocaust that consumed, with unparalleled malevolence, 6 million Jews and millions of innocent others.... This important book, a vital guide through the unique corridors of the United States Holocaust Memorial Museum in Washington, D.C. merits the widest of audiences."

By RON CSILLAG
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — For years, Western activists for oppressed Jews longing to leave their harsh homelands liked to say they wanted nothing more than to be put out of business.

Over the past few years, that has largely happened, with long, hard-fought battles finally bringing about emigration — such as from the former Soviet Union and Eastern Europe — or dramatic rescues by Israel, like those in Ethiopia and Albania.

Now, perhaps the last frontline campaign for an oppressed Jewish community is coming to an end. Within the next few months, every Jew who so wishes will have left Syria.

For Judy Feld Carr, head of the National Task Force for Syrian Jews, who has come to be known simply as "Mrs. Judy" among the Jews of Syria, this is an especially emotional time.

"It is the end of an era in Jewish history," Carr says. "It's the most wonderful thing."

Before this year ends, Syria's once-thriving Jewish community will have dwindled to fewer than 300 souls who will choose to remain — and those "will stay at their own risk," Carr says.

Perhaps there was no better symbol of the success and finality of the Syrian Jewish emigration than the presence here last weekend of the chief rabbi of Syria and his wife, neither of whom will return to their homeland, but will join their six children — one named Judy — in the large Syrian Jewish emigre community in Brooklyn, N.Y.

Clutching a new mezuzah presented to him by Carr and a few dozen of the most powerful local movers and shakers for Syrian Jewry, Rabbi Ibrahim Hamra still chose his words carefully, a reticence no doubt reinforced by years of the monitoring, harassment and arbitrary arrest of Syria's Jews by the dreaded secret police, the Mukhabarat.

"The Jewish community of Syria has broken through to the light, no longer living forbidden in a hostile Muslim state but rather freely, in a country of our choosing," Rabbi Hamra said in a speech in Hebrew, his wife Harriette standing at his side.

"In light of this major change, I found myself completing my work as head of a community that faced the problems of living in Syria," Rabbi Hamra said, politely understating what living as a Jew in the Arab state entailed. "And I am certain only of my past. The future is hidden from my eyes and I am full of hope for a wonderful future for the community and for the members of the family."

Most of Rabbi Hamra's "family" has already quit Syria, home to over 100,000 Jews in 1900 and 40,000 Jews by 1948. Carr feels that once the emigration is finished, there will be fewer than 200 Jews left in Damascus, roughly 85 in Qamishli and just five in Aleppo. These will be the elderly, the frightened of change and the ones who feel their ties with the country cannot be broken.

Those who stay behind will continue to be monitored, as before, by the secret police. It's unlikely, Carr says, that Syria's anti-Jewish

Israeli minister seeks restrictions on immigration

Rabin rejects remarks

Jewish Telegraphic Agency and Jerusalem Post Foreign Service

JERUSALEM — Labor and Welfare Minister Ora Namir has unleashed a fury here by suggesting Israel be more "selective" in the immigrants it absorbs from the former Soviet Union.

In an interview published earlier this month in the Israeli daily Ha'aretz, Namir criticized the wave of immigration in the past 18 months for including a disproportionate number of old and disabled immigrants.

She said many of those are sent by family members who do not want to take care of them and who take advantage of Israel's generous social welfare policies.

Government and immigration officials condemned Namir's remarks, saying her ideas ran counter to fundamental Zionist principles which call for Israel to be a home and haven for every Jew who wants to make aliyah.

But Namir said these dependents are a heavy burden on Israel's social security system.

"I wouldn't say a word if the family came together, but they send their (elderly relatives) to relieve themselves of their care, and they go to the United States," she said.

They know "there's no other country like Israel," said Namir, who added, "I don't think we can handle it."

In the interview, Namir appeared to suggest that Israel limit the number of dependents by a selection process. But when pressed, she stopped short of calling for a policy to bar the entry of those considered undesirable.

"I didn't say to deny them entry," she said. "I just said we have to check (the situation) more carefully."

Her comments provoked a sharp rebuke from Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin, who said he completely rejected Namir's remarks.

Other leaders also lashed out at Namir.

Immigration advocate and former refusenik Natan Sharansky said he was "shocked" at Namir's "call for the selection of immigrants. Only the government of the British Mandate would do this.

"This is the end of Zionism," lamented Sharansky, and he called for Namir's resignation.

The Knesset's Absorption Committee passed a unanimous resolution expressing "profound shock" at Namir's comments, calling them "an attack on the very roots of Zionism and an affront to our brethren who wish to return to their homeland."

Committee chairman Emanuel Zissman went even further, describing his fellow Labor Party colleague's remarks as "crazy."

Interviewed on radio from outside the country, the acting chairman of the Jewish Agency, Yehiel Leket, called Namir's remarks very serious.

He said it is not feasible to scrutinize the "contribution each immigrant can make to the state," and proposing to do so "alters the basic principles of the State of Israel."

The principle of Israel as a Jewish homeland "will rise or fall over the question" of whether to adopt Namir's ideas or "to keep the gates of this country open to Jews wherever they are," said Absorption Minister Yair Tsaban.

While official condemnation poured in, a random telephone-in poll on Army Radio indicated that most Israelis agreed with Namir.

Of more than 1,500 people who responded to a question, "Do you support Namir's remarks?" some 1,280 said yes, while only some 330 said they opposed the minister.

The results, however, did not faze Tsaban and other immigrant leaders, who agreed that the unscientific poll drew a certain type of respondent.

"I don't know how you phrased and analyzed your poll," Tsaban told Army Radio, "but I bet you would have gotten an even higher percentage of support for doing away with income tax."

He said he was well aware that certain sectors opposed giving the olim benefits to ease their absorption but that these opponents were a "minority among a very substantial majority."

Namir, for her part, held firm.

"What I said is part of the public agenda," she said in a radio interview. "It's difficult and very severe, but I don't regret anything."

She said Israel wants elderly and infirm immigrants to come, "but with their whole families."

Ora Namir

Namir maintained there has been a big drop recently in the number of young, working people who have immigrated to Israel.

Among the immigrants in the last 18 months, about one-third are old, one-third are handicapped and one-third are single parents, she said.

Tsaban disputed her figures. He said the most surprising thing about immigration in the past few years is how consistent the demographic breakdown has been.

Fifteen per cent are elderly, 10 per cent are single parents and "a lot less" are handicapped, he said.

In fact, he said, the new immigrants have contributed to Israeli science, the economy and society.

Protesters to neo-Nazis: Get out!

By BARBARA SILVERSTEIN
Special to The CJN

TORONTO — "Nazis get out of Riverdale," was the cry as 200 people from various anti-racist groups recently gathered to protest a neo-Nazi assault in Toronto's east end neighborhood.

The demonstrators headed down the Danforth chanting and waving placards with anti-racism and anti-Nazi slogans. They proceeded to the north-west corner of Pape and Danforth, where a neo-Nazi gang had assaulted some members of the International Socialists (I.S.), an anti-racist and socialist organization, on Sept. 24.

Participants included the Toronto Coalition Against Racism and the Coalition Against the Reform Party, as well as three local politicians: Metro councillor Roger Hollander, Toronto city councillor Peter Tabuns and Ontario Consumer Affairs Minister Marilyn Churley, MPP for Riverdale.

"We're reclaiming this corner so that nobody will be forced out because of their anti-Nazi sentiments," Phil Johnson, a demonstration marshal, told the crowd.

Hollander told those gathered that no form of Nazism — no matter how small the group — should be ignored because during the early '30s the Nazis in Germany were considered to be a "small insignificant group," and were not taken seriously until it was too late.

"Nazism is a plague. We should treat it as such," he said. "We should knock it off before it hits the ground."

After the rally, Hollander told The CJN, "I believe in the phrase, 'Never Again.' I believe it only has meaning if we take seriously these threats and fear-mongering at the beginning."

Peter Votsch, one of the I.S. members beaten by the neo-Nazis, also took part in the demonstration.

"Last week at this time we were punched and kicked when we were distributing anti-Nazi and anti-racism literature," he said, still showing marks of the assault. "I come from a family of Holocaust survivors. I've grown up with the tears of my family. It was telling to be beaten for my beliefs."

'I felt a lot of anger'

"I felt a lot of anger when the attack took place," he later told The CJN. "I felt like they [the Nazis] were coming after my family again."

While Votsch needed five stitches in his lip — he was the most seriously hurt — he said another member with knife wounds to the face had narrowly missed serious injury.

On the day of the assault, Votsch said he was very worried when he arrived at Pape and Danforth — where he and fellow I.S. members sell their newspaper and distribute anti-racism literature — and saw a line of skinheads wearing black T-shirts with a white power symbol — a red circle with a white cross.

"There were 25 Nazis and 10 of us," he said. "They simply surrounded us and called us 'filth' and 'white trash' and an African member 'nigger'. They kicked us into the intersection. We were taken advantage of by a group that is used to street fighting. A number of our members were kicked continuously."

Votsch said the skinheads also unfurled a confederate flag — another symbol of white supremacy — and said, "The East End belongs to us."

"We've had neo-Nazis in the East End for decades," said Tabuns. He said the Klu Klux Klan had an office in the area in the '70s and the headquarters for a "hate [telephone] line" was also in Riverdale.

"There has been a steady, but unpredictable flow of incidents," he said, which included the defacing of the Jewish cemetery on Jones Avenue last fall, the distribution of racist literature and neo-Nazi recruitment in schools.

Bernie Farber, community relations officer for the Canadian Jewish Congress, later told The CJN the neo-Nazis targeted the East End for recruitment because traditionally it has been a working class area. But they have not been successful in infiltrating the Riverdale community, he said.

"As usual [the neo-Nazis] were wrong," Farber said, adding that their recruitment record in Riverdale was one of the weakest. "Riverdale has always been a neighborhood of anti-racist activity. The neo-Nazis have failed miserably."

Racism hinders peace, human rights: UN leader

By CAROLYN BLACKMAN
Special to The CJN

MARKHAM — Understanding the factors causing racism, racial discrimination and crimes of hatred is one of today's major challenges among proponents of peace and respect for human rights, says the chief of the New York Office, UN Centre for Human Rights.

"Racism is one of the most abhorent scourges which has accompanied humanity for far too long. In communities where it grows unchecked it marginalizes groups of the population, creates tensions and sometimes explosions which deeply mark intercommunal relations. No society can tolerate racism against even a few without endangering the human rights of all," says Elsa Stamatopoulou-Robbins.

Stamatopoulou-Robbins was guest speaker at a recent community forum entitled Confronting Hate, Affirming Diversity, sponsored by the Committee on Race and Ethnocultural Equity of Markham, and the Ontario Anti-Racism Secretariat, Ministry of Citizenship.

Reading from a prepared speech by Hose Ayala Lasso, United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, she said that the concept of human dignity is not the invention of any one society, culture, philosophy or religion.

"The imperative of human dignity is not a recent concept either. We see its traces in civilization going back to the dawn of recorded history. In today's international community, the imperative for human dignity is not the monopoly of any one state or group of states, but in fact the common heritage of mankind in which all can lay claim."

Ayala Lasso said, however, that despite UN efforts to examine incidents of racism, racial discrimination and related intolerance, as well as governmental measures to overcome them, "it has been distressing to realize that discrimination is still very much part of the lives of many millions of people throughout the world. Reports reach us with increasing frequency of discrimination against immigrants, migrant workers, minorities, indigenous people, refugees and reports of anti-Semitism and xenophobia."

He said that in an attempt to eradicate this racism and racial discrimination from a worldwide perspective, the UN has made as its goals for this decade to strive for the promotion of human rights and fundamental freedoms for all, to arrest any expansion of racist policies, to resist any policies and practices which lead to the strengthening of the racist regimes, to isolate mythical beliefs that contribute to racism and to put an end to racist regimes.

'It has been distressing to realize that discrimination is still very much part of the lives of many millions throughout the world'

A number of policy mechanisms are therefore recommended to member states, including non-discrimination in all educational programs and policies; the education of teachers on how to deal with the problem of relations between children belonging to different communities; and ensuring that curricula and textbooks reflect anti-racist principles and promote intercultural education.

Ayala Lasso said that at the national and regional levels the UN General Assembly recommends that member states review their national programs to combat racial discrimination, seize opportunities to close gaps between different groups and undertake to provide housing, educational and employment programs that have proved to be successful in combating racial discrimination and xenophobia.

"The General Assembly also recommends that member states encourage the participation of journalists and human rights advocates from minority groups and communities in the mass media. Radio and television programs should increase the number of broadcasts produced in cooperation with racial and cultural minority groups and multicultural activities of the media should also be encouraged."

He noted that the effort to ensure equal opportunities for all in society is not a question of affirmative action, but rather "that every member of the community, based on individual qualifications and merit, be judged without discrimination. In this area, general social programs of early education and further training would raise the qualifications of the more disadvantaged groups in society and contribute to the elimination of disparities."

He said that the key elements to which we will have to pay greater attention in the future are human rights education and the creation of climates of mutual tolerance and understanding between different communities.

"In this context we must remember the value of the different cultures of our globe and that each is an important part of the common heritage of all. Sensitivity training in the early school years and the broader based community action programs are important tools to achieve this objective.

"Consideration may be given to setting up community relations commissions, not only in areas where tensions have actually manifested themselves but also as a general mechanism in all communities. Such commissions could reinforce existing intergroup understandings and identify at an early stage the seeds of future tensions so as to act preventively.

"The participation of vulnerable groups in the elaboration of national and local plans of action is crucial, since it constitutes a tangible recognition of their dignity and of the principle of equality."

He stressed that society's commitment to equality must be demonstrated clearly through the provision of legal remedies, and assistance and relief to the victims of racism and racial discrimination.

Spy agency denies prior knowledge of shul vandalism

By DAVID LAZARUS
and PAUL LUNGEN
CJN Staff Reporters

TORONTO — The director of the Canadian Security and Intelligence Service (CSIS) last week lifted a corner of the veil masking the spy organization, saying CSIS did not have advance warning of three Toronto synagogue desecrations in June 1992.

In a letter to Canadian Jewish Congress president Irving Abella, CSIS director Ward Elcock stated that "to have had foreknowledge of any plans to desecrate a synagogue or any other place of worship and to have failed to immediately alert the police would have represented a fundamental breach of Service policy. I have absolutely no reason to believe that any employee of the Service has failed in his or her duty in this matter."

The letter was issued shortly after CBC's The Fifth Estate had conducted a documentary investigation into Grant Bristow, an alleged CSIS informant who helped found the white supremacist Heritage Front. The Fifth Estate report alleged that CSIS staged the June 1992 visit to Canada of U.S. neo-Nazi Tom Metzger and his subsequent arrest and deportation. It also alleged that CSIS had advance knowledge of the three synagogue desecrations that followed his deportation.

The report prompted Congress to voice its "deep concern" over the allegations. The CSIS response followed.

"I think this is a unique event," Abella said. "It is remarkable that the director [of CSIS] felt it necessary to reassure the Jewish community that this event did not take place. . . [He] rarely if ever communicates with the public."

Solicitor General Herb Gray, whose ministry oversees CSIS, told

Herb Gray

The CJN "I was certainly aware that the letter was sent. I'm pleased it was sent. I've certainly asked for assurances from the director of CSIS that CSIS was acting within the law."

Gray also said the civilian Security Intelligence Review Committee (SIRC) will examine the new allegations that have been raised about CSIS.

Toronto Sun reporter Bill Dunphy, who broke the story about Bristow and his alleged CSIS connection, wrote that The Fifth Estate report on the Bristow affair "ain't true." According to his information, Front leader Wolfgang Droege recruited Metzger to speak to the group. Law enforcement agencies seized on the Metzger visit, allowing him into Canada and later deporting him to test a section of the Immigration Act.

"An unrelated York Regional Police investigation of a runaway teenager turned up the likeliest suspect [in the synagogue desecrations] — a 17-year-old American skinhead who'd come up for the [Metzger] event," the Sun reported.

David Studer, an executive producer with The Fifth Estate said, "We are considering a response to [Elcock's] letter. We stand by our story. We worked very hard to confirm the things we said in the story.

"It's important to note that we requested an interview with Elcock while we were preparing our story and were turned down."

* * *

Despite the assurances from CSIS about the synagogue desecrations, Congress still has "two core concerns" about Bristow:

"Did Bristow actually help create the Heritage Front and facilitate its progress [using funds he was paid as a CSIS mole]?"

And second, "Did the Heritage Front actually spy on Congress and [the Jewish Students] Network?"

These two questions, posed by national community relations committee (NCRC) chair Hal Joffe during a recent report to the CJC national executive in Montreal, point to a debate taking place within Jewish community circles, and Canadian society as a whole.

The debate revolves around this question: When does the infiltration of a potentially subversive organization cross a certain ambiguous boundary and actually aid and abet the subversion?

As Joffe said at the meeting, "We support infiltration. But our concern is not over infiltration. It is that someone who was paid by CSIS should not be at the forefront of the organization."

In other words, "Has CSIS done us more harm than good?" Joffe asked.

Irving Abella

These questions are expected to be addressed when a parliamentary subcommittee — headed by Toronto MP Derek Lee — holds hearings on the activities of CSIS.

Joffe said Congress indicated to the subcommittee that it would like to make an oral submission on the Bristow affair.

In his general report to the executive, Joffe said the NCRC scored a success recently by helping to persuade Alberta Attorney General Ken Rostad to ask the Supreme Court of Canada to reinstate the conviction of James Keegstra, which was overturned on Rosh Hashanah by the province's Court of Appeal on technical grounds.

Joffe said Congress is also assessing whether it should intervene at the Supreme Court level.

The NCRC, Joffe said, also helped to expose the agenda of Don Andrews, whom Joffe described as a neo-Nazi. Andrews is a leader of the Nationalist Party which tried to organize a Canada-wide "European Heritage Week."

Toronto JCC's northern branch gets a new name and program

By PAUL LUNGEN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — It's got a new name, a new program guide, a new set of initials and, its proponents say, a new attitude as well.

The northern branch of the Jewish Community Centre (JCC) on Bathurst Street is no more. In its place is the new Bathurst Jewish Centre (BJC), a recently-constituted entity established under the aegis of Richter & Associates, the JCC's receiver.

As of last Monday, the BJC came under the control of a new seven-person management board, said Sheila Engel, one of the board members. "Our mandate is to manage and operate the facility for the receiver."

That status will continue, pending a final disposition of the JCC's three branches, said Howard English, a spokesman for the BJC. The Jewish Federation of Greater Toronto, the JCC and the Bank of Montreal, the JCC's main creditor, have agreed in principle to a plan that will see the Bathurst, Bloor and Valley branches of the JCC become independent entities. Two weeks ago, the Bloor JCC announced it had taken steps towards institutional independence, pending the final disposition.

Meanwhile, it's business as usual at the Bathurst facility, Engel said.

With the onset of the autumn season, the BJC has published its 1994 fall program guide, with a lineup of activities very similar to past offerings of the Bathurst JCC.

Among the programs being offered are those in dance and music that were cut when the Leah Posluns Theatre (LPT) was closed, Engel said.

The school of dance is again operating under director Jacque Foesier. The music program is being supervised by Sandra McArthur. Both were among the 31 JCC staff members who were let go when the LPT was closed, English said.

The difference between the programs being offered now and those offered in the past is that current programs will not be subsidized. Instead, they must stand on their own feet and pay for themselves, Engel said.

Discussions are also under way to consider reinstating in the new year a program similar to the defunct Institute for Jewish Learning, English said.

BJC takes over role

The BJC program guide outlining 150 programs and courses was mailed out recently to 10,000 JCC members. Page 3 of the guide sets out a scale of membership fees, which pegs adult membership at $418 (which includes an $18 yearly affiliation fee). Young adults (18-25) are asked to pay $258 in total and seniors (over 65) $268, including the affiliation fee.

Health club fees will jump about $100 a year. Under the new schedule, adults will be asked to pay $475 in addition to their general fees. Young adults will have to pay an additional $325. That would make the fee for an adult health club membership $893 plus GST. Engel said no policy has yet been established to determine whether memberships will be recognized at the Bloor JCC and vice versa.

The new BJC fees will still keep the facility competitive with other clubs of comparable size, said Harold Cipin, BJC's acting executive-director.

"The increase will go back into the facility" and not be used to pay down any JCC debt, Cipin said.

"The prices were too low before," Engel added. "We need to run [the BJC] in such a way that it remains solvent."

One of the goals of the new management team is to "get back old members," Engel said. (Many members left during the lengthy period when the JCC stumbled from one financial crisis to another and when the future of the facility was in doubt.)

The new managment team "has a very strong commitment to maintaining what is and making it better," she said. "We're alive and focusing on the future.

"The morale of the staff has picked up," Cipin said. "They finally saw closure on something that's dragged on for months."

However staff who were let go when the LPT was closed are mounting a campaign "to raise the consciousness of the community for our deep concern for the future of the JCC of Toronto," according to a flyer distributed by the group. "As well, we express our outrage at the lack of dignity with which a group of 31 employees of the JCC and the LPT were summarily fired with no cause, no notice, no severance and no vacation pay."

The group seeks "appropriate compensation for the group of 31 and to reinstate the LPT."

English said there were no plans to mount theatrical productions at the LPT, though it will be used for other purposes, such as hosting the upcoming Jewish Book Fair.

He also said there were no plans to let go any other BJC staff.

In addition to Engel, the BJC's new board members include Michael Kerbel (chair), Geoffrey Bledin, Phillip Daniels, Marty Goldberg, Tom Lobel and Paul Nightingale.

NCJW tackles breast cancer, ways to help people on welfare

By MYRON LOVE
CJN Prairies Correspondent

WINNIPEG — The National Council of Jewish Women of Canada (NCJW) National Meeting highlights were a presentation about screening programs for breast cancer and a discussion of ways to help single mothers and their children escape the trap of welfare dependency.

It was held at Fort Garry Hotel on Oct. 2 and 3.

Bonnie Mitchelson, Manitoba's minister of family services, opened the Monday morning discussion on combatting child poverty by calling for bold changes to Canada's social safety net. "Government coffers are not a bottomless pit," she said. "There is no new money for new programs."

Mitchelson reported that Manitoba has the highest number of teen pregnancies per capita in Canada — most of whom end up as single mothers on welfare without completing high school — as well as the highest number of Aboriginal people per capita, many of whom also have come to rely on the province's social safety net.

She went on to describe a joint federal-provincial pilot program in Manitoba called Taking Charge whose aim is to wean single mothers off welfare and put them into the workforce.

An example of how the program operates is an internship program the government created in partnership with the Canadian Liver Foundation. The foundation recently moved its cross-Canada telephone operation to Winnipeg and hired 170 operators. Forty of the job openings were reserved for single parents on welfare. The two levels of government continued to provide social assistance for the 40 for the first month while they received on-the-job-training. All are still working for the foundation.

"The government can't do it alone," Mitchelson said. "We need partnerships with business and community organizations such as National Council."

As an example of what can be done through partnership, NCJW member Sharon Clavir of Toronto noted a program the NCJW Toronto section started which links seniors with local schools as foster grandparents.

Miriam Charron of Montreal described a Montreal NCJW-supported after school program for high risk children from single parent families. The children receive hot meals, help with homework and lessons in social skills. There are also parenting classes offered. Lack of funding restricts it to two days a week.

Carla Goldstein from Winnipeg suggested that government provide seed money to hire a staff person and/or volunteer coordinator to help organizations made up of volunteers combatting child poverty.

Jodi Zabludowski of Edmonton described a head start program for disadvantaged children Edmonton NCJW is operating which includes parenting classes and nutrition classes for the parents.

Charron, Clavir and Tammy Rubin of Edmonton all were critical of government welfare programs which either make it too easy for young single mothers to collect or difficult to break free.

Just as NCJW has played a role in alleviating child poverty, the organization has also been active in breast cancer screening programs. Dr. Virginia Fraser, a Winnipeg breast cancer specialist, singled out the organization for its work in informing women about provincial screening programs.

She discussed the costs of screening and mammograms and the difficulty in reaching target groups, particularly in cities. She spoke of the need for education programs and public pressure on governments for funding.

Jewish woman named judge in Quebec

MONTREAL — Sylviane Borenstein, a legal aid lawyer for over 20 years, has become what is believed to be the first Jewish woman named a judge in Quebec at any level.

Borenstein, 51, was sworn in last week as a judge of Quebec Superior Court's Montreal District, following the announcement of her appointment by federal Justice Minister Allan Rock.

Borenstein also made history in 1990 when she was elected batonnier of the Quebec Bar. It was a first on three counts because neither a woman nor a Jew nor an immigrant had held that position.

Born in France, Borenstein has lived in Montreal for 36 years. She obtained a law degree from McGill University in 1966 and was called to the Quebec Bar in 1967.

After six years in private practice, Borenstein became director of the Outremont and Park Extension legal aid office in 1973, where she remained until her appointment to the bench.

"I'm very happy and awed at the same time," she said. "All my life I have been combatting injustice and now I have been called upon to render justice."

A divorced mother of four children, Borenstein's specialty is family law. Borenstein jumped at the chance to work in legal aid when the program was launched in Quebec in 1973, she said. "I really like that kind of work."

There have been many male Jewish judges in Quebec (including former Superior Court chief justice Alan Gold). Borenstein thinks the lack of Jewish women simply reflects the relatively low number of Jewish female lawyers of an age likely to be named a judge.

Sylviane Borenstein

Borenstein has been active in a number of Jewish organizations, including serving as vice-president of Career Women's Network of Federation CJA, on the executive of the Baron de Hirsch Institute, and co-president of the Law and Social Action Committee of Canadian Jewish Congress.

She also campaigned for the freedom of Soviet Jewry and was a member of the Association of Canadian Lawyers and Jurists for Soviet Jewry.

Wiesenthal Centre seeks action on war criminal prosecutions

OTTAWA — The Simon Wiesenthal Centre has called on the Liberal government to speed up war crimes prosecutions and criminalize Holocaust denial.

In a meeting with Justice Minister Allan Rock last Friday, Canadian representatives of the international Nazi-hunting organization said the previous Mulroney government failed to prosecute alleged war criminals, and called on the Liberals to do better.

"Hundreds of Nazi war criminals who committed horrendous crimes during World War II, involving the death of thousands of innocent people in countless towns and villages, managed to deceive our immigration authorities and settle in Canada," said Sol Littman, the centre's Canadian director. "Here, they found safety and immunity from prosecution. They were safer here than in Argentina or Paraguay."

Centre representatives pointed out that in the past five years, Canada's Special Unit on War Crimes and Crimes against Humanity had travelled widely, hired a large staff and reviewed hundreds of cases, yet brought only five alleged war criminals before the courts.

Of these, one was acquitted, two charges were withdrawn and one charge was stayed. Only one, Jacob Luitjens, was successfully prosecuted.

In contrast, the Office of Special Investigations of the United States Justice Department (OSI) has 16 cases currently before the courts and is actively investigating a further 395. Since its creation in 1979, the OSI has secured the denationalization and deportation of 45 Nazi war criminals.

"The Americans face exactly the same problems that the Canadian Special Unit faces," said Littman. "They too are confronted with aging witnesses, failing memories, uncooperative Eastern European governments and unpredictable judges, yet their record is infinitely superior to ours."

The reason, Wiesenthal Centre representatives said, was that the Mulroney government was "not sincere" in its effort to bring war criminals to justice.

"It was all show, intended to make it look as if something was happening, but in reality the Mulroney government didn't have its heart in it," said Littman.

The centre charged that the Conservative government deliberately chose to proceed by the slowest, most expensive and most difficult of legal means available, namely criminal prosecution rather than the less difficult route of denaturalization and deportation used by the Americans.

"The Liberal government now has a narrow window of opportunity to undo the misjudgments, neglect and posturing of the previous government," Littman said. "We urge them to proceed as quickly and firmly as possible."

The centre also urged the justice minister to follow the lead of Switzerland, Germany and France and make denial of the Holocaust a form of incitement and hate utterance punishable under the criminal code as a hate crime.

It also called for legislation to "undo" the recent Supreme Court of Canada decision in the Imre Finta case. Jewish groups are upset at the decision, which they say allows an alleged war criminal to use the defence of following orders.

Conservative Jews divided by camp magazine story

Jewish Telegraphic Agency

NEW YORK — In another example of the ever-deepening rift between Canadian Conservative Jews and their American counterparts, the Canadian arm of the Conservative movement's camp system refused to distribute the Summer 1994 issue of Ramah — the Magazine because it included an article about female camp alumnae who are now Conservative rabbis and cantors.

The magazine's former editor, Lori Forman, has charged that the Conservative movement's leadership in New York did not sufficiently push the Canadians to send out the issue because it was afraid of losing the funding the Canadians provide to the Jewish Theological Seminary.

That charge was disputed by a seminary spokesman.

According to Rabbi Mitch Cohen, the director of Camp Ramah in Canada, camp officials refused to distribute the issue because they felt the article on clergywomen represented American — rather than Canadian — Conservative values.

"Anything having to do with women's rights in the movement is very, very sensitive here," said Rabbi Cohen. "But this has less to do with women's rights than with American control over Canadian values.

"Camp Ramah in Canada still has a form of religious practice which is not completely egalitarian," he explained. "That form of religious practice still needs to be respected, and is not by many people in our movement."

Rabbi Cohen told The CJN the camp's lay committee found "nothing offensive" about the article per se, "but the celebration of woman as rabbis was seen as a sensitive matter."

The Committee on Jewish Law and Standards, the Conservative movement's powerful interpreter of Halachah, decided in 1983 to ordain women as rabbis.

But the Conservative movement in Canada remains far more conservative than its American counterpart. Women as rabbis has long discomfitted Canadian Conservatives, while synagogues in Canada are not generally egalitarian. Only one, Congregation Shaar Shalom in Halifax, has a female rabbi, compared to dozens in the United States.

According to Forman, the Canadians feared the article about clergywomen would be "bad publicity" and could drive away the 75 campers from Orthodox homes who attended the camp.

But, said Forman, herself a Conservative rabbi who spent eight summers attending Ramah camps, more than half the campers at the Camp Ramah in Canada are Americans from Detroit, Cleveland and Pittsburgh, whose egalitarian practices should be respected.

The Ramah system includes seven camps — six in the United States and one in Utterson, about two hours north of Toronto — which serve about 4,000 campers a year.

Camp Ramah Canada employs a modified form of egalitarianism in its worship services. According to Rabbi Cohen, girls are called to the Torah but are not counted toward a minyan.

The controversy over the magazine has been simmering since the spring, when Forman distributed proofs of the magazine to Camp Ramah officials.

Citing opposition to the article about female clergy, leaders of Canada's camp refused to send Forman the mailing labels for the magazine.

Forman and 46 other female rabbis and cantors sent a letter to Rabbi Ismar Schorsch, chancellor of the Jewish Theological Seminary and head of the Leadership Council of Conservative Judaism, and asked him to intervene.

By June, according to Forman, Canadian rabbis were threatening to withhold money from JTS if the magazine was distributed in Canada. Rabbi Schorsch and Sheldon Dorph, national Ramah director, went to Canada to make sure funding was not cut off, she said.

"Canada has threatened over and over to leave the movement" over the issue of ordaining women, she said, "and the seminary is trying very hard not to lose them for fundraising reasons."

According to JTS spokesman Shammai Engelmayer, "The Canadian office has a right to distribute magazines as they see fit. Not everyone in Canada agrees with egalitarianism, and there was a feeling that the article could be seen as a slap in the face to those who don't feel that way.

Forman believes that while Canada's Conservative congregations are entitled to disagree with the ordination of women, censoring the fact that women are ordained within the movement contradicts the pluralism Conservative Judaism ostensibly values.

Forman said she was distressed but not surprised by the refusal of the movement's leadership to intervene.

The movement's leaders "don't want to celebrate" the role of women as rabbis and cantors, she charged.

Engelmayer described that charge as "absurd on its face."

"We had a whole conference here last year celebrating the 10th anniversary of women in the rabbinate," he said.

Forman said that while the magazine ultimately was not distributed, she and her colleagues succeeded in raising "a lot of consciousness" over the issue of women rabbis and cantors.

In 1991, Conservative cantors in Ontario split from their umbrella group and formed a separate body over the issue of admitting qualified women into the Conservative cantorate.

The following year, almost all Conservative rabbis in and around Toronto came perilously close to quitting the Rabbinical Assembly, the movement's umbrella for rabbis, over a number of controversial issues emanating from the United States.

As it is, many Conservative synagogues in Canada are affiliated with the U.S.-based Union for Traditional Judaism, founded by rabbis and scholars to bring more conservatism to the movement. The UTJ was established in 1983 — the same year the Conservative movement began ordaining women.

NAME GAME

There is a story in almost every Jewish surname and Toronto lawyer FRED M. CATZMAN has been researching their origins over the past few years. Mr. Catzman reports on his research in The CJN.

PLACE NAMES (TOPONYMICS)

In the Russian Empire of the early 19th century there were a number of edicts of expulsion of Jews from different areas. At about the same time, adoption of surnames became mandatory. It was not unnatural for Jews to assume names of their former origin. This accounts for the many toponymic Jewish surnames like Pinsky and Slytzky, people who were expelled from Pinsk and Slutzk Sometimes the name was adopted because the bearer visited rather than resided there. For example, not many Jews resided in Leipzig, but a person who visited the famous Leipzig fair might adopt the name Leipziger.

Large areas were responsible for names like Litvack (Lithuania), Litwin (Latvia or Lithuania), Pollock (Poland) and Woloshyn (Vallachia).

SORIN — SOSSIN — SOSKIN — SIRKIN

Others are Sourkes, Suris, Surin, Sorkin, Serlin and Sherkin, to mention only a few.

Festival director explains film entry from 'Palestine'

By DAVID LAZARUS
CJN Staff Reporter

MONTREAL — The head of the Montreal World Film Festival has finally sent a long-awaited response to the Israeli Consulate explaining why it listed "Palestine" as a participating country during the August 25-Sept. 5 event.

But the letter, written by festival director Serge Losique, fails to regret the inclusion of "Palestine" or to promise that it won't happen again, as the consulate wanted.

"The letter answers why, but it does not say it was a mistake," Israeli consul Aviva Raz said. "Even though we finally got an answer, we can't say we're completely satisfied."

The letter, dated Sept. 15, came six days after the consulate, frustrated by two weeks of fruitless attempts to reach Losique by telephone, mailed him a formal written complaint demanding an explanation.

The consulate had also threatened to raise the level of diplomatic intervention if Losique did not reply by the end of September.

Raz said Losique's reply, while welcome and friendly in tone, did not specifically express regret or address the consulate's concerns over the possibility of a future "Palestine" presence at the festival.

She said the letter explains that the film in question screened under the banner of "Palestine," Curfew — a Dutch-Palestinian production depicting the life of a family in Gaza and the winner of three international awards, including the UNESCO Prize at Cannes — was shown at other festivals without incident.

The letter also states that the use of "Palestine" was based solely on information submitted to festival organizers by director Rashid Masharawi on the festival application form.

The letter, as well, expresses a desire to maintain positive contacts between Israel and the festival, Raz said.

Raz reiterated that Israel has never objected to Palestinian films being shown at film festivals — only that "Palestine" not be listed as a participating nation since it is not recognized as such either by the international community or by the Declaration of Principles signed by Israel and by the PLO.

Raz said the consulate will send a letter to Losique "demanding that it not happen again.

"Other international festivals made a mistake but that does not mean it should happen here too," Raz said.

She said the consulate letter will make it clear that even the forms filled out for international film festivals might give filmmakers the ability to describe themselves any way they want, so Montreal organizers have a duty to abide by international standards in recognizing nationhood.

Raz said she was "quite optimistic" because Losique's letter was "very friendly."

But next year, she indicated, the consulate will know before the festival begins whether "Palestine" is planned to be included. This year the consulate saw the "Palestine" listing only when it opened the catalogue.

Raz declined, however, to speculate on whether the consulate would threaten to withdraw from next year's festival if "Palestine" is again allowed to be listed as a participating nation.

"That is hypothetical," Raz said. "They will be aware of the issue next year and it will be quite clear what we expect."

Chief Rabbi of Syria departs homeland

measures will be rescinded. All telephone calls and mail to and from the community are watched; Jews cannot vote, hold high office, sell businesses or homes or emigrate.

Oddly perhaps, the Nazi-like measures never applied to the practice of Judaism. Jews were permitted to worship freely, have prayer books and other supplies, observe holidays and study at Jewish schools.

Sadly though, the emigration has meant that today — for an observant community — there are no rabbis left and there is no shochet. (Kosher meat is sent from Turkey). A layman performs the occasional brit milah. Synagogues and schools are shuttered and quiet.

Nevertheless, Carr stresses, the Dr. Ronald Feld Fund for Jews in Arab Lands, set up at Toronto's Beth Tzedec Synagogue in 1973 and at Beth Tfiloh Congregation in Baltimore nine years ago, must keep raising money so books, supplies and articles of comfort can continue to be sent.

It was in April 1992 when Syrian President Hafez al-Assad announced he would relax travel restrictions for Jews. Over 2,500 left, mostly to "visit" the United States, before the door was abruptly shut six months later, for no stated reason.

Since then, a steady trickle has come out, including all former prisoners. For Carr and other activists, Assad's move was a cynical ploy; it won him much-needed PR points with the West but it still did not allow free emigration.

The continuing problem is that Syrian Jews arrive on travel visas, meaning they are visitors. Thus, they cannot claim refugee status and the benefits that brings.

As well, Jews leaving Syria cannot sell possessions or businesses. They can leave with the equivalent of $2,000 and two suitcases each.

Carr's own involvement with Syrian Jewry began 23 years ago, when attention was focused mainly on Soviet Jewry. Although the campaign was carried out quietly and with little fanfare, she recalls "living on raw nerves ... the suffering, the crying, the tears."

It was also Carr who helped institute Shabbat Zachor, the annual spring remembrance day for oppressed Jewry, particularly in Syria, held in synagogues throughout the world. The Sabbath is also a yahrzeit for four young Syrian Jewish girls and two boys who were murdered in 1974, caught trying to escape from Syria after being betrayed by their Arab smugglers.

Now that Syria's Jewish population has all but vanished, there are just two substantial Jewish communities in the Orient: Iran (which is not Arab) has a community of between 10,000 and 15,000, while Morocco tallies some 8,000 Jews. Tunisia's community is said to number between 1,000 and 2,000. Figures on Yemeni Jews are difficult to obtain and are often inaccurate.

As the long, frustrating campaign for Syrian Jewry winds down, Carr and other activists are drawing a deep breath, taking stock and will likely move on to another cause, perhaps helping the emigres adjust to their new surroundings.

Or as Rabbi Hamra noted here last week, on Simchat Torah we recited the prayer that concludes the five books of the Torah "and immediately, in one breath without pausing, we went on to read the Creation in Genesis. And what, more than this, symbolizes the saying that for every end, there is a new beginning?"

St. Catharines rejects call for Heritage Week

By PAUL LUNGEN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — You can add St. Catharines, Ont. to the list of cities that have turned down a request by representatives of the neo-Nazi Nationalist Party to proclaim Oct. 9-15 as European Heritage Week.

Early last week St. Catharines Mayor Joseph McCaffery acceded to the request and issued the proclamation. But less than two days later the proclamation was rescinded.

City solicitor Annette Poulin told The CJN that the mayor "rescinded the decision because he received additional information he didn't have." She said Toronto Mayor June Rowlands provided McCaffery's office with background material about European Heritage Week and the organization that sponsored it. That led to its rejection.

Rowlands played a key role last August in informing fellow mayors in Victoria, Halifax and Vaughan, Ont. that the white supremacist Nationalist Party was promoting European heritage week. Each of these cities either refused to proclaim the week or rescinded an earlier proclamation.

Poulin said Mayor McCaffery receives many requests for official proclamations and it is "very unusual" for one to be rescinded. In accepting the proclamation, the mayor believed that "it was recognizing the contributions of local groups."

Anti-racists saw the request as a ploy by the Nationalist Party, whose leader Don Andrews was convicted in 1985 for promoting hatred against non-whites, to denigrate other groups and assert the superiority of Europeans.

Letting the proclamation stand would have had "the effect of legitimizing a violent and racist hate group," said B'nai Brith Canada executive vice-president Frank Dimant.

"It would be morally repugnant and unconscionable for any mayor in this country to knowingly and wilfully proclaim a European Heritage Week," said Louis Lenkinski, chair of community relations for Canadian Jewish Congress.

In a letter to McCaffery, Lenkinski stated that failure to rescind the proclamation "might place into some jeopardy those minority groups in your city who have historically been the targets of neo-Nazis, skinheads and other extremist racists."

Israel, Czech Republic on the agenda for UIA mission

By JOEL JACOBSON
CJN Maritime Correspondent

HALIFAX — An 11-day United Israel Appeal mission to Israel and the former Czechoslovakia should create campaign enthusiasm for a score of Atlantic Canadians, a UIA official said.

Victor Goldberg, chair of the Halifax portion of the annual fund drive, said the trip will include visits to Atlantic Canadian projects in Israel and meetings with high Israeli government officials.

"We will be in Prague and other parts of the Czech Republic for four days at the start of the trip (which began Oct. 5 and ends Oct. 16) and this should show us all a sense of the Jewish past and present identity in that country."

Goldberg said mission members will work hard raising funds on their returns. The Halifax fundraising goal is $300,000, with another $600,000 for other areas of the Atlantic region.

The mission will visit Or Yehuda, a renewal project funded by Atlantic Canada, have dinner with the tourism minister, meet Maritimers living in Israel, visit Youth Aliyah village in Jerusalem, breakfast at the Israeli Embassy in Prague and meet with the executive director of the Jewish Community of the Czech Republic.

Among those participating are James Spatz of Halifax, Ivan Levine of Fredericton, Mark Rosen of Halifax, and Richard and Ruth Goldbloom of the UIA campaign committee.

By JANICE ARNOLD
CJN Staff Reporter

MONTREAL — In 1996, Jerusalem will stage a lavish year-long celebration of the 3,000th anniversary of King David's capture of the city for the Hebrews.

Mayor Ehud Olmert hopes the extravaganza will reinforce in the world's mind that Jerusalem is "the capital of the Jewish people."

During a recent visit to Montreal, Olmert unveiled the preliminary schedule of Jerusalem 3000 before a national committee headed by Neri Bloomfield, which is charged with rallying the Canadian Jewish community to support the project and related activities in Canada.

Olmert said the trimillenium events should attract hundreds of thousands of visitors to Jerusalem and be broadcast internationally. Jerusalem 3000 will emphasize the fact that the city has been central to Jews continuously for 3,000 consecutive years, since King David captured it from the Canaanites around 1,000 BCE and made it the capital of a united Jewish kingdom.

The celebration will also acknowledge the importance of Jerusalem to Islam and Christianity.

The program will include music, theatre, dance and visual arts events on a grand scale, mostly dedicated to David, considered one of the greatest Jewish heroes — a warrior and a poet.

Among the highlights will be a "sight and sound spectacular" in the Old City by Italian director Franco Zeffirelli, chronicling the story of Jerusalem from King David's time to the present; an open-air production of Verdi's opera Nabucco, which is based on the biblical account of Babylonian King Nebuchadnezzar's destruction of the First Temple; a gala concert by the Israel Philharmonic Orchestra, under the baton of Zubin Mehta, of classical works inspired by the Psalms performed next to the Old City walls; a production of Beethoven's Fidelio by the German State Opera, directed by Daniel Barenboim; a multi-media show in which stage and screen actors (names to be confirmed) will read biblical passages about the life of King David; and a massive street costume pageant featuring 30 tall floats created in Viareggio, Italy, noted for its papier mache art.

Not all will be strictly cultural. A King David's feast will consist of a 12-course banquet prepared by 30 of the world's leading chefs; and a dramatized chess game will have actors on foot and on horesback battle on the squares of the municipal courtyard.

An event with a distinctly Christian flavor is a festival of gospel choirs from around the world; and Islamic art and science will be the subject of a nine-month exhibition at the Tower of David Museum.

Olmert, who was elected mayor last year, is a former Likud cabinet minister. He denied that the timing of Jerusalem 3000 has anything to do with the peace talks with the Palestinians, which promise to eventually deal with the status of Jerusalem.

This is not an issue because, according to Olmert, Jerusalem will maintain "the status quo as the united, indivisible capital only of the State of Israel and the Jewish people.

"That is the position of the government and it is the national consensus," he said.

Olmert will only concede to the management of holy sites by their respective religious bodies. "Otherwise, there will be no change."

One visitor who is not welcome by Olmert is PLO chairman Yasser Arafat because "I'm afraid he will stir emotions and incite extremists to violence. He has said he will wage a jihad over Jerusalem."

Olmert is also not happy about the increasingly semi-official status of Orient House, a PLO centre in East Jerusalem which has received foreign visitors.

"I expect the government to take action against [Orient House] because it is a threat to the basic concept of an undivided capital of the State of Israel," he said.

Olmert was vague about funding for Jerusalem 3000. The Israeli government has not promised any particular sum for the project, he indicated.

It is hoped most events will find commercial sponsorship and that the sale of broadcast rights will bring in other revenue, he said.

The Bloomfield committee, which is under the auspices of the Canadian Zionist Federation, is intended to include representatives of all the major Jewish organizations and perhaps some prominent non-Jewish ones.

Its function is not to raise money for Jerusalem 3000 as such, but to organize related events in Canada, such as a concert by the Jerusalem Symphony or art exchanges, and to find the necessary corporate sponsors, Bloomfield said.

"No other city today embodies the broad sweep of human history like Jerusalem," she told the committee's inaugural meeting. "No other city today stands as a testimony to the spirituality of human kind like Jerusalem."

The main reason for Olmert's trip to Montreal, which also included a meeting with Mayor Jean Dore at city hall and a lecture at McGill University, was to make Jerusalem's bid for the international convention of gynecologists and obstetricians which was taking place here — and he didn't leave disappointed.

Jerusalem was selected over Cairo and Marrakesh, Morocco as the site of the triennial congress of the International Federation of Gynecologists and Obstetricians in the year 2000.

This year's week-long congress was attended by 9,000 delegates and is estimated to have generated $50 million in business for the city.

THE LEARNING FAMILY

Ulpan Akiva's Innovative program which encourages the shared family experience.

Families from all over the world, as well as from Israel, congregate at Ulpan Akiva's Green Beach Hotel campus, beside the beach in southern Netanya, for a unique family experience combining learning with leisure, enjoying all full-board accommodation. Parents and their teenage (over 12 years) children take a part in Hebrew or Arabic courses while in the summer, the younger kids join a day camp nearby (at Moshav Udim).

The families are joining a learning community of Israelis, tourists, temporary residents and new immigrants — Jews and non-Jews — students of all ages, civil servants, teachers on sabbatical and others.

The courses last 24 days or 8 weeks, with 5 hours of classes a day. Then there are loads of social and cultural activities during the remaining hours of the day and evening, plus walks, tours and a study Shabbat.

Hungary sorry for Jewish war deaths

Jewish Telegraphic Agency

NEW YORK — The Hungarian government, through its foreign minister, has apologized to the Jewish people for its role in the Holocaust.

During World War II, Hungarian pro-Nazi fascists, the Arrow Cross — both in league with the Nazis and independently — rounded up Jews and deported them to their deaths.

In meetings here last week with the World Jewish Congress and the Jewish Agency for Israel, Hungarian Foreign Minister Laszlo Kovacs also took steps toward a formal memorandum of understanding on restitution of Jewish property seized by the Nazis and the Communists.

Speaking on behalf of Hungarian Prime Minister Gyula Horn, Kovacs told the WJC last Tuesday: "It is self-deception if anyone shifts responsibility for the genocide in Hungary solely and exclusively to Nazi Germany."

The Jewish group described Kovacs' statement as "one of the most far-reaching by any of the former East European Nazi collaborationist governments."

Kovacs, who was in the United States for a scheduled address to the United Nations, also stressed Hungarian responsibility for anti-Jewish acts years before the Holocaust.

"The shutting out of society and even persecution of Jews of Hungarian citizenship did not begin on May 19, 1944, when the Germans occupied the country," said Kovacs.

"We should not forget about the murders committed by the White Terror Squads in 1919, (the quotas) in the 1920s and the shameful anti-Jewish laws, which meant a trampling of the law.

"Consequently it has to be stated unambiguously that history obliges us to apologize," he said.

Kovacs is a member of the Socialist Party, which was created by the reform wing of the former Communist Party and took control of Hungary in elections last May. The Socialists ousted the previous centre-right government, with which the Jewish community had many strong disagreements.

In an earlier meeting with the American Jewish Committee, Kovacs said that it is "of the utmost importance how Hungarian Jewry feels in Hungary, because it shows how democracy has developed in the country."

Last Friday, after meeting with the AJ-Committee, Kovacs told the Jewish Telegraphic Agency, "It is crucial for the Hungarian government to stop and protest against any appearance of anti-Semitism."

Leslie Keller, chairman of the WJC East European Commission and a leader of the Hungarian Jewish community, described Kovacs' statements as "extraordinary and marking a new, positive chapter in Hungarian-Jewish relations."

In a private meeting with WJC President Edgar Bronfman and later with the heads of the WJC and the Jewish Agency, the Hungarian foreign minister also discussed the restoration of confiscated Jewish property.

"We talked about substance, and a great deal of progress was made," said Elan Steinberg, WJC executive director.

Last April Hungary and the World Jewish Restitution Organization signed an accord on the return of confiscated property.

Hungary and Slovakia are the only former Communist countries in Eastern Europe to have entered such agreements with the Jewish community.

Sydney Jews bury scrolls

Jewish Telegraphic Agency

SYDNEY — More than 1,500 members of Sydney's Jewish community attended a special burial service last week for Torah scrolls and other holy books burned in a Sept. 25 fire that destroyed the sanctuary of the city's Orthodox Central Synagogue.

All 17 of the synagogue's Torah scrolls, including 15 stored inside a recently installed fireproof safe, were destroyed in the blaze after the intense heat caused the safe to buckle.

Arson was originally suspected but police and fire officials have indicated that the blaze was caused by a malfunction in the air-conditioning unit.

Sydney's Orthodox rabbis declared that Australia's Labor Day, which fell Oct. 3, was be a day of public fasting.

Many in the crowd at the cemetery and among the hundreds of worshipers at a specially convened afternoon service at the surviving synagogue hall, were observing the fast and devoting the day to religious study.

At the burial, rabbis and communal figures, joined by Israeli Ambassador Yehuda Avner, recited Psalms. They also buried sacks containing the charred remains of the scrolls, which the synagogue's Rabbi Selwyn Franklin announced would be reinterred in the foundation of the shul's Holy Ark when it is rebuilt.

Rabbi Franklin said he had been told that the fire resulted in the largest single number of Torahs being destroyed at any one time since the Holocaust.

At the synagogue service following the burial, messages of support received from leading civil and political figures were read to the capacity crowd, which included Catholic and Anglican Church representatives, as well as federal and state parliamentarians.

Franklin told the gathering that the devastation of the fire would be met by a renewed vigor and commitment within his congregation.

Quoting the Prophet Haggai's words — spoken over 2,000 years ago — that the Second Temple would exceed the glory of the first, he said that the rebuilt synagogue will bear testimony to his congregation's unity of purpose in maintaining Judaism.

The News in Brief

Haiti Force Approved

TEL AVIV — After temporarily blocking the move, Israel's High Court of Justice last week unanimously approved sending a 30-member police contingent to assume peacekeeping duties in Haiti.

The court's decision, combined with the cabinet's earlier approval of the mission, cleared the way for the departure of the 28 men and women who volunteered to help restore stability in Haiti.

In reaching its decision, the court rejected an appeal by former Kach activist Noam Federman, who had questioned the legality of sending Israeli police on an overseas mission.

The expanded five-judge panel apparently accepted arguments put forward by the government, which argued that sending the police volunteers to serve as part of an international force is not illegal.

Russia to Set Up Jericho Office

TEL AVIV — Russia will soon establish a low-level liaison office in the Jericho region.

The decision to open an interest section in Jericho, which officially fell under Palestinian self-rule in May, was announced in Moscow during an official visit there by Palestinian leader Mahmoud Abbas, also known as Abu Mazen.

An interest section falls short of full diplomatic representation, a move prevented by the Palestinian self-rule accord, which denies the Palestinians the right to have direct diplomatic ties with foreign governments.

In late August, Germany became the first country to establish a mission in the Palestinian autonomous areas when it opened an office in Jericho to monitor the spending of German aid to the Palestinians.

Yad Vashem to Open Classes

JERUSALEM — Israeli Education Minister Amnon Rubinstein has expressed the government's support for the opening of a school for Holocaust studies at the Yad Vashem Holocaust Memorial here.

Rubinstein said the Education Ministry will assist in the inauguration of the Central School for Holocaust Studies and will aid in its expansion.

Rubinstein added the school will further government efforts to educate all Israeli students about the Holocaust, its consequences and lessons.

The chairman of Yad Vashem, Avner Shalev, said classes at the new school will begin soon and that 70,000 students and 550 teachers will participate in programs there in the coming year.

Most U.S. Jews Have Never Visited

TEL AVIV — More than 70 per cent of American Jews have never visited Israel, according to a Haifa University researcher.

In his study, based on statistics provided by various Jewish federations across the United States, researcher David Mittelburg also found that intermarriage was higher among young American Jews who have not visited Israel.

Mittelburg's study, which covered some 10,000 people, disclosed that in the 35-44 age group, only 19 per cent had ever visited Israel.

Among those between the ages of 18-34, 30 per cent had visited Israel; in the 45-and-above age group, the total rose to 44 per cent.

The study indicated that in the 18-34 age group, intermarriage was as high as 62 per cent among those who had never visited Israel, compared to 19 per cent among those in the same age group who had traveled at least once to Israel.

Moses U.S. Envoy to Romania

NEW YORK — Alfred Moses, president of the American Jewish Committee and a longtime advocate for Romanian Jewry, has been appointed U.S. ambassador to Romania.

The appointment, which was unanimously confirmed this month by the U.S. Senate, has riled some emotions in Romania, where seven Romanian parliamentarians have charged that Moses was a supporter of the late Communist dictator Nicolae Ceausescu.

Moses, a Washington attorney who in the 1970s was special counsel to President Jimmy Carter, has vigorously denied that, saying the charges are "absolutely baseless."

"My dealings with Ceausescu were formal, proper and frigid," Moses, 65, said.

The controversy over Moses' appointment revives old issues about links between Romanian Jewry — which often became a bargaining chip in Romanian-American negotiations during the Communist era — and the Ceausescu dictatorship, which was overthrown in 1989.

No More Aid for Russians

AMSTERDAM — The Jewish Social Welfare Foundation here has announced it will no longer give legal assistance to refugees from the former Soviet Union seeking political asylum in Holland.

The foundation explained it believes many of those arriving from the former Soviet Union have attained forged documents to back up claims of their Jewish origin.

About 1,000 people with false documents arrived in Holland during the past year-and-a-half, the foundation said.

The organization also noted that others claiming to have arrived directly from the former Soviet Union in fact arrived from Israel.

Holland offers political asylum only to those who were persecuted in their own country but not to those who arrive via Israel.

French Leader to EU Post

PARIS — Jean Kahn, the president of the European Jewish Congress, has been appointed chairman of a European Union panel that will monitor racism.

Kahn's appointment as chairman of the European Consultative Commission on Racism and Xenophobia was announced recently by German Foreign Minister Klaus Kinkel, who currently holds the rotating presidency of the European Union.

The 12 member states of the EU ratified the creation of the new anti-racism commission during the last EU summit, held in June on the Greek island of Corfu.

Kahn was appointed French representative to the commission in July in his capacity as leader of the European Jewish Congress. He also serves as head of CRIF, the umbrella organization representing French Jewish communal organizations.

Check, Mate

JERUSALEM — "When I was in the darkness of solitary confinement, I used to play chess in my head to keep sane — and, of course, I always won all the games," Natan Sharansky said last week after playing to a surprise draw in a simultaneous game with world chess champion Gary Kasparov.

"You have to remember, it was a simultaneous match," Sharansky added. "I was really disappointed. I had hoped to win."

He said he had "consoled" Kasparov by pointing out they are both graduates of the Soviet Chess School.

Sharansky said that his dream as a boy was to be world chess champion. He had been champion of his school and later of his home city, although his interest waned when he became a dissident. "But chess has served me always as a model for logic," he said.

in recognition of excellence in communal leadership and dedicated public service

Sunday, November 27, 1994
Sheraton Centre Hotel, Toronto
Grand Ballroom

Reception: 5:00 p.m. Dinner: 6:00 p.m.

Tickets to the Dinner are $107 per person with a minimum contribution of $360
(for which a tax receipt will be issued)

Campaign Chairman:
Ronald Appleby, Q.C.

Dinner Chairman:
Prof. J. Robert S. Prichard

The special project to be initiated on the occasion of the Negev Dinner will be known as "The Joey Tanenbaum Youth Institute for Studies in Nature, History and the Environment."

The Tanenbaum Youth Institute is an educational/social concept; bringing young people together to learn, live and interact in an outdoor setting at Yatir in the northern Negev Desert area of Israel. It will involve youth from varied backgrounds — Israelis, new immigrants, overseas students, youngsters from disadvantaged families and young people who may be emotionally or physically challenged.

This project will provide the necessary elements to make the dream a reality — providing appropriate staff, guides, necessary audio/visual equipment, materials, research and curriculum development. It will truly be a project of the spirit, rather than bricks and mortar, of which we can all be proud.

By RABBI AARON LEVINE

In this week's sedrah we read that our Patriarch Avrom (Abram) on his journey to the land of Canaan, took with him his wife, his nephew Lot, "and the souls that they had made in Charan." (Genesis 12:5) Asks the Midrash, "If the entire world got together to try to create a mosquito and endow it with a soul, they would be unable to do so, and here you say that they made souls?" "But what it means," answers the Midrash, "is that Avrom and Sarai converted souls (people) and taught them to believe in the Almighty."

It is true that Judaism warmly welcomes one who has proven a sincere desire to convert, and there are famous converts in our history (Ruth, the great grandmother of King David, is perhaps the most famous example). Nevertheless, we are firmly against actively seeking converts, as evidenced in many places in the Talmud. Keeping the Torah and mitzvot in the proper manner is a serious and difficult task. The convert assumes a tremendous responsibility by embracing our faith. Non-adherence to the basic tenets of that faith in a "faithful" manner is detrimental both for the convert and for the Jewish people. "Missionarizing" means that both parties treat that responsibility very lightly and very irresponsibly.

But there is another way that we "can make souls." The Torah tells us that it is a mitzvah to return a lost article to its owner (Deuteronomy 22:1-4). The Talmud teaches us that saving a person's life (returning to him his body) is certainly fulfillment of this mitzvah (see Bava Kamma 81b; Sanhedrin 73a). The Talmud further states that one who "saves a soul" by teaching him Torah and mitzvah observance, and thus brings him into the World to Come, is considered greater than one who saves the physical life of an individual (see Bava Metzia, Mishnah, 33a).

If so, the opportunity is ripe, and available in every far-flung corner of the world — in every city, town, and village — to help return the Jewish soul to our Jewish brethren and sisters whose souls are lost to Torah and Yiddishkeit.

The world has a phrase, "Mind your own business." The Torah, on the other hand, teaches us that "Kol Yisrael areivim zeh bozeh — All Israel is responsible one for the other" (see Talmud Shovuos 39a). If we care about our fellow Jews then it is our business to do whatever we can to teach him and her the beauty of Torah and mitzvah observance and to bring them the merit of being able to enter The World to Come by becoming observant Jews.

Naturally, this must be done with love, with tact, with genuine concern, with sensitivity and by appropriate means. To our great dismay, we are well aware that there are non-Jewish missionaries of all sorts and under all guises who are vying for the "Jewish soul" (and, by the way, are not a force to be ignored).

Nevertheless, Baruch HaShem (thank G-d), we have our many kiruv organizations, who are working tirelessly to bring our lost Jewish brothers and sisters back to the fold. Never must we forget that "Kol hamekayem nefesh achas miYisraeli ke'ilu kayeim olom malei — whoever saves or preserves even one Jewish soul is considered to have preserved the whole world" (Bava Basra 11a).

I was at the Torah Umesorah (Jewish Day School) Principal's convention this past May when the news reached us of Suri Feldman, the 14-year-old Jewish girl from Brooklyn who, during a school outing, got lost in a Connecticut forest. The story made national headlines. The Kiddush HaShem (sanctification of G-d's Name) that was made as thousands of Jews were united in their prayers, in their outpouring of concern, in the busloads of volunteers that came forward to help the 90 state policemen in their search, in the shipments of food that poured in from Jews to feed the searchers — was incredible.

The news media, the police, and the non-Jewish world were overwhelmed by what they were witnessing. Lt. Louis E. Lacaprucia, of the Connecticut State Police said, "I have never seen such a response as this; I have never seen such an outpouring. Before this week I knew very little about Jewish culture; I received quite an education in those three agonizing days."

Perhaps the most dramatic demonstration of unity occurred in the closing minutes of those trying 48 hours. A vast number of the Jewish schools in Brooklyn had organized a collective recitation of Tehillim (Psalms) for Suri's safety, which began at 10:30 a.m. on Friday morning. Suri was found safe at 10:32 a.m. And as one Jewish teacher explained, "The Jewish people are supposed to be like one person, with one heart. One part of the Jewish people was out there, lost. We had to find her."

And after Shacharit services on Shabbat morning, Rabbi Sholom Strachjer, a principal in Cleveland, Ohio, got up and told the assemblage of great roshei yeshivah and over 1,000 principals and laymen the following: "Look at the mobilization of forces and the efforts that were expended, the prayers that were offered, the tears that were shed for the finding and saving of this one Jewish neshamah (soul). We have the opportunity collectively of finding and saving hundreds of spiritually lost neshamos each and every day. Let this story teach us how precious each and every Jewish soul is."

You don't have to be a principal or teacher in order to be able to save a neshamah. Any Jew who cares enough about their heritage, who cares enough to want to give eternal life to another Jew, can extend their hearts and hands to warmly and lovingly embrace and influence other people, drawing them closer to Torah and mitzvot. May we be privileged to have the merit of finding and saving even just one Jewish neshamah!

Difficulties in government — cracks in opposition

By YESHAYAHU ANUG

My last column conveyed the mixed feelings of the Israeli public which now confronts the bitter-sweet realities of advancing peace-making. In the contest between hopes and fears the government seems to be scoring some points.

However, this makes the progress of the peace process with the Arabs even harder, because it heats up the internal debate.

The last fortnight started with well-staged demonstrations against the return of the Golan to Syria. These were impressive and revealed divisions in the Labor Party which were about to be repaired when the demonstrations (which included a hunger-strike) ended together with the holiday period that had helped them to take place.

More serious was the fallout in the ranks of the Likud, as reliable polls revealed that 45 per cent of Likud voters now believe that their party's policy of "not an inch" will eventually lead to war, while 28 per cent opted for territorial concessions in exchange for full peace. The Likud leadership does not dismiss these embarrassing findings and their choice is now between an attempt to restore the intransigent position, and a move towards a more plausible political platform, which, incidentally, could come close to that of Labor supporters who oppose total evacuation but favor territorial compromises.

Whatever the effects of the alarm signal, the traditional Likud formula, "peace for peace," has been utterly discredited as a credible policy for the party which hopes to win the next elections.

The Likud leadership cannot further postpone a long overdue internal debate. If it were to adopt formally a more flexible position, the entire political scene could change. In any case, it will be in the best interest of that party to further distance itself from the violent rejectionists of any peace process and to isolate those fringe groups at the periphery of Israel's political world.

Yeshayahu Anug

Good news for Yizhak Rabin? Only up to a point, because his own house is also in some disorder. He considers the support he now commands in the Knesset to be insufficient for bolder peace initiatives; and he tried to enlarge the coalition by paying a very high and deeply resented political price to the insatiable and chronically unreliable Shas party.

On the peace front itself, the problems with both Syrians and Palestinians are still unresolved and the time clock cannot be stopped without risk of closing the "window of opportunity" that, for better or for worse, definitely exists.

Officially, the bilateral talks with Syria are stagnating and contacts are kept alive by American perseverance. U.S Secretary of State Warren Christopher is expected here again and he will try to close more gaps. But President Hafez al-Assad is still reluctant to engage in direct high-level meetings with Israelis and scorns the idea of photo-opportunities with them, although he should know how magic their impact could be on public opinion here.

Rabin, on the other hand, keeps reassuring Israelis that he has made no commitment to full withdrawal from the Golan in exchange for full peace, but at the same time mentions the phased peace accord with Egypt as a precedent to be applied to Syria, which comes pretty close to the same thing.

He also promises to submit the once-finalized conditions for full peace with Syria to a national referendum. The general impression here is that the negotiations on all the complex ingredients of peace, such as frontiers, security arrangements, foreign monitoring, repercussions from Israeli-Lebanese relations, are still to be agreed upon, but that once these are determined, things will start moving rapidly towards a climax and then — as a package deal — get public approval.

In the ongoing Israeli-PLO talks, some understandings were reached, but the process could be bogged down during implementation. According to the Oslo agreement, elections must be held in the West Bank before Palestinian autonomy can be established. Not only are the differences over the status of the elected body, (legislative as the PLO wants, or administrative as Israel insists), still unsettled, but there is an even more critical issue to be solved.

The Israeli Army is expected to be redeployed outside the populated areas where elections are to be held; but another provision of the same Oslo agreement stipulates that no Jewish settlements are to be dismantled in the interim three-year autonomy period.

One can hardly figure out how, in the absence of a close Israeli military presence, Arab terrorist attacks or clashes between violent opponents of the peace process on both sides can be avoided — or handled if they occur. And there is also the issue of East Jerusalem and its future status, which cannot be resolved by postponement alone.

I said in the first paragraph that the apparent internal success of the government's policy could make progress in the peace process even harder. I want to explain that, although the public is apparently now more ready than before — and clearly more than is reflected by the present Knesset picture — to support the government's peace policies, the government itself feels that it can only proceed very cautiously and slowly. Any acceleration could only sharpen the internal debate.

Meanwhile, the external signals are tempting. The peace process is clearly paying political and promising economic dividends that cannot be overlooked. The Arab boycott is clinically dead, as Saudi Arabia and the Gulf States have practically abolished it. Morocco and Tunisia are now establishing formal ties with Israel and other Muslim countries will probably follow. The ties with Jordan are strengthening although differences over frontiers and water are still to be settled. And finally, Israel's international position has spectacularly improved as a result of her being engaged in the peace process.

However, these signals, for which the government takes full credit, are dismissed by its opponents on the political scene as mere down payments for the final product, which in their view will be an uncertain peace between an untrustworthy Arab world and a territorially crippled, "indefensible" Israel.

Much too rosy scenarios and some too sinister ones, all excessively inflated, fill the air and the media, and are stretching public hopes and fears to a dangerous limit. No wonder then, that the blueprint for peace, still vaguely outlined by the government, and which, under the circumstances, appears acceptable to most Israelis, should be so suspicious to so many others.

Kibbutz is 'finished with ideology'

By NECHEMIA MEYERS

As I discovered on a recent visit to Kibbutz Hahotrim, on the outskirts of Haifa, its dining hall operates just like any capitalistic cafeteria. Kibbutzniks push their trays along the food counter, placing on them whatever they want to eat. Then, coming to the cashier, they pay for their selections with a kibbutz credit card, and the sum is deducted from their personal account.

When I expressed my amazement at this departure from kibbutz tradition to dining hall manager Berta Roitemberg, she disdainfully dismissed my comment, saying: "We're finished with ideology. We've joined the 20th century."

Berta not only runs the kibbutz dining hall, but also directs a kibbutz-based firm which prepares calorie-counted meals for distribution to some 1,000 dieters in various parts of northern Israel. She got the idea for such an enterprise from the fact that she and her staff were already preparing special meals for dozens of kibbutz members who needed them for dietary or medical reasons. This expertise, Berta reasoned, could provide the basis for a company that would sell ready-to-heat-and-eat meals to busy city people who want to lose weight but don't have the time or patience to count calories themselves.

There were doubters aplenty among her fellow kibbutzniks, but since Hahotrim, like other settlements, is badly in need of supplementary income, the kibbutz decided to give Berta's idea a try, setting up a special kosher kitchen in a separate building (because the settlement's main kitchen does not observe the laws of kashrut).

The meals from Hahotrim generally contain 900 or 1,000 calories and are delivered by refrigerated vehicles to the homes of customers once a week. They receive a seven-day, prepackaged supply of food, 21 multi-course meals in all.

Berta maintains a card file containing the culinary preferences of every man and woman on her list, in this way ensuring that they will not only get the specified number of calories, but also the kind of tasty foods they prefer. They can, for example, ask for a variety of ethnic dishes from the Middle East, China and elsewhere. Moreover, the company's customers, who include Police Minister Moshe Shahal and a variety of other public personalities, are free, at any time, to call Berta and consult with her about possible changes in their menu. Many of them, she notes, take meals from the kibbutz for a month or two and then decide to continue on their own. As often as not, however, these people soon come back for another round of prepared diet meals.

Next on the agenda is the opening of a branch of the firm in the Tel Aviv area. Then, politics permitting, perhaps Berta and her colleagues will start supplying diet meals to Arab politicians and sheikhs in neighboring countries.

And, who knows, maybe they'll eventually start selling their products to the credit-card holders of Kibbutz Hahotrim as well.

Israel achieves new status at United Nations

B LARRY YUDELSON
Jewish Telegraphic Agency

When the 49th annual United Nations General Assembly opened last month, Israel's ambassador to the UN, Gad Ya'acobi, voiced the hope of building on the diplomatic gains of a "breakthrough" year.

"We are very satisfied with what happened this past year concerning the Israeli-United Nations relationship," Ya'acobi said in an interview. "We are gradually becoming a participant and a legitimate member state, rather than a client and an object."

Ya'acobi attributes his country's new stature to recent progress in the Middle East peace process and the collapse of the Soviet Union, which had long targeted Israel in the international body.

As evidence of its growing acceptance, Israel, in the past year alone, established diplomatic ties with 21 additional nations. Israel now has relations with 146 out of the 185 member states in the UN, the highest number since the state was established in 1948.

Israel's new status at the UN is reflected in part by the elimination, deferral or amendment of 23 of the 30 long-standing anti-Israel resolutions that, until this year, were renewed annually — and with little fuss — by the world body's non-binding General Assembly.

The change was also reflected in Israel's participation in such UN-sponsored projects as the monitoring of South Africa's first all-race elections earlier this year and the aiding of Rwandan refugees in Zaire.

In addition, three Israelis were elected, for the first time in decades, to UN posts.

Now Ya'acobi is hoping to move forward.

First on the agenda, he said, will be securing passage of a resolution endorsing the peace agreements of this past year — the Cairo Accord on implementing Palestinian autonomy and the Washington Declaration ending the state of war between Jordan and Israel.

The resolution, a draft of which already exists, also would call for regional cooperation in the Middle East and a comprehensive peace based on mutual recognition of all the countries in the region.

This resolution would follow up on a resolution passed last year, which praised the Declaration of Principles signed in September 1993 by Israel and the Palestine Liberation Organization.

Ya'acobi said he expects the resolution to be pushed by the United States, Russia, Norway, Egypt and the PLO, and to receive the support of all but three or four member states.

These states — likely to include Libya, Iraq and Iran — now find themselves in a minority vis-a-vis their stances toward Israel.

Ya'acobi said he also plans to devote attention to the remaining seven anti-Israel resolutions that passed the UN body last year and are expected to return to the floor this year.

Israel, according to Ya'acobi, will argue that some of these resolutions prejudge the outcome of the ongoing Israel-Arab peace process.

These include resolutions that address the status of Jerusalem and demand Israeli withdrawal from the Golan Heights and Lebanon.

"Those issues have to be solved in direct negotiations," said Ya'acobi.

On these resolutions, Israel will be fighting the PLO and Arab states who say the UN should make its voice heard on these topics, even if they are eventually to be resolved in negotiations.

One UN battle Israeli diplomats do not expect to win involves a group of resolutions authorizing and endorsing the Committee on the Exercise of the Inalienable Rights of the Palestinian People, which has traditionally been a source of virulently anti-Israel propaganda.

Explaining their pessimism, the Israelis note that the United Nations did not eliminate its committee on apartheid until after the election of Nelson Mandela as South Africa's first black president. The Israelis say they expect the Palestinians to insist on maintaining the pro-Palestinian bodies until a final settlement is reached.

But, according to Ya'acobi, Israel will counter that the money spent funding this committee, and a similar body affiliated with the UN Secretariat, would be better used in directly aiding the Palestinians.

Ya'acobi praised the work being done by the UN agencies in the territories as "vital."

The key agencies involved in the region are the United Nations Development Program and the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestinian Refugees. UNDP has this year doubled its budget in the territories to $30 million. And UNWRA has begun building permanent housing in the Gaza Strip for the first time.

Beyond their direct expenditures, Ya'acobi said that the two agencies are playing a crucial role as a conduit for international aid. With the PLO still unable or unwilling to provide the degree of accountability that foreign donor nations insist on, the problem is being "solved partially, as an interim arrangement, through the UNDP and UNRWA," said Ya'acobi.

"The donors' money will be passed through those two agencies, in full coordination with the Palestinian Authority," he said.

Another key diplomatic issue on this year's General Assembly agenda is the fate of a resolution condemning Israeli nuclear weaponry, according to Ya'acobi. Last year, Israel came close to defeating the resolution; this year, Ya'acobi believes, it will succeed.

In its place, however, is likely to be a resolution calling for a Middle Eastern nuclear-free zone. Israel, the only Middle Eastern country generally believed to have current nuclear capability, insists that such a nuclear-free zone must follow, not precede, a state of comprehensive regional peace.

"It is not logical — and it contradicts our basic interests — to think that Israel will be inspected on this matter while Iran, Iraq and perhaps Libya are (developing) nuclear potential," Ya'acobi said, adding, "They are the declared enemies of Israel."

Referring to any potential proposal on the matter, Ya'acobi said, "We don't know yet if the proposal of some of the moderate Arab countries is acceptable to us."

Another matter which may have to await the arrival of a comprehensive regional peace is Israel's inclusion in a UN regional group. The ability to serve on the Security Council and other key committees is dependent on being a member of a regional group. But admission to a regional group requires a total consensus of the group's members.

Israel belongs in the Asian group, but even after peace accords with its immediate neighbors, Israel cannot assume that Iran or Libya would allow it to join. Until recently, in view of its isolation at the United Nations, Israel made little effort to join a regional group. But as Israel emerged from its pariah status at the world body two years ago, it turned its attention to seeking observer status in the Western European and Others regional group, which includes such Western but non-European nations as the United States and Australia.

This effort has floundered, however, because bringing Israel on board the European group would dilute the strength of the current members. While the United States has supported Israel's move, other states have blocked the bid.

While Ya'acobi said he does not expect to join the grouping this year, he said the effort has produced other positive results, such as the election of Israeli individuals to UN committees.

Peace dividends

Israel's long political isolation is ending faster than perhaps anyone dared to think just a few years ago. Since 1991, the year the Madrid peace process was launched, Israel has established or re-established ties with an array of countries in Africa, Asia and Europe. And the process has accelerated since last September, when Israel forged the historic rapprochement with the PLO.

Last July, in a long-anticipated development, Jordan officially ended its state of war with Israel. Several months later, Morocco became the second Arab country to establish relations with Israel.

In recent weeks, the peace dividend has yielded still more results for Israel. On Sept. 30, the six members of the Gulf Cooperation Council — Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, Oman, Bahrain, Qatar and the United Arab Emirates — partially jettisoned the Arab economic boycott against Israel. This was followed, on Oct. 2, by an announcement in which Tunisia and Israel agreed to open low-level diplomatic relations. Capping it all off is the impending arrival of an Israeli delegation in Bahrain later this month for discussions on evironmental issues affecting the region. The talks are part of a group of multilateral Middle East discussions on the environment and other matters.

The decision by the Gulf Cooperation Council to drop the secondary and tertiary boycotts of Israel means that foreign companies doing business with the Jewish state will henceforth not be blacklisted by its constituent members. Regrettably, the Arab League has not endorsed this position, linking it with progress on the Syrian and Lebanese peace tracks. Nevertheless, the Gulf Cooperation Council's decision to ease the boycott — which has cost Israel about $40 billion in lost investments since 1948 — is a bold step forward, and is expected to lead to further advances in related areas.

The exchange of economic liaison offices between Israel and Tunisia is also a welcome sign of the times. It comes nearly a decade after the Israeli air force raided PLO headquarters near Tunis, the capital of this stable North African nation. With Israel and the PLO now at peace, Tunisia no longer had a compelling reason to shun Jerusalem. Ties between Tunisia and Israel will doubtless grow as the peace process blossoms.

The impending visit of an Israeli team to Bahrain, scheduled to be led by Environment Minister Yossi Sarid, is yet another indicator that the ice in Israel's relations with the Arab world has been broken. Israelis have been waiting for years for such good news. Thankfully, it is now coming to pass.

Elementary justice

Recently it was announced that New York City will soon build its own Holocaust museum. At the same time, American federal prosecutors have asked a Washington court to take away the American citizenship of one of those people responsible for the Holocaust.

While Canada appears to have developed judicial sclerosis in its attempt to put Nazi war criminals on trial, American officials seem determined not to permit the executioners to have the last word or deed.

Prosecutors are seeking the ouster of an alleged Nazi collaborator now living in Norwood, Mass. He is said to have headed a Lithuanian arm of the Nazi Gestapo from 1941 to 1944 and has been identified as such by Eli M. Rosenbaum, acting director of the Office of Special Investigations of the American justice department. Rosenbaum stresses the importance of this prosecution because the individual in question was "a senior perpetrator of the Holocaust, the first senior Lithuanian police official ever prosecuted for war crimes."

One of the reasons American prosecutors will probably have more success in dealing with alleged Nazi criminals than Canadian ones is because the United States cannot and does not lay criminal charges for war crimes. However, it is possible to revoke someone's citizenship if it can be proven the individual lied about his wartime activities in applying for immigrant status.

It is also significant that Lithuanian authorities, despite the break-up of the Soviet Union, have cooperated with American prosecutors in handing over important documents bearing the signature of the Massachusetts resident, documents showing that he handed over hundreds of Lithuanian Jews to the Nazis. The Jewish victims were herded into a site at Panerial, near Vilna, and murdered.

Depriving an individual of his citizenship and deporting him are lesser punishments than incarceration, but they are the best instruments available under American law. This act, moreover, expresses an elementary justice — that the perpetrator of war crimes should not enjoy peaceful retirement.

Letters to the Editor

Letters are welcome if they are brief, in English or French, typewritten with lines double spaced, and of interest to our reading public. Readers are cautioned not to make sweeping claims against persons or institutions which they cannot verify, as libel laws are very stringent. We reserve the right to edit and condense letters, which must bear the sender's address, phone number and both handwritten and typed signatures.

FACKENHEIM'S POSITION

My views of the Oslo Accord and its sequels are much more nuanced than your account (Sept. 29) made it appear: I do not "slam" it in toto.

I have become persuaded that the previous Israeli policies cannot be carried on any longer, and that the present government's accord, once made, cannot be reversed. But much more stamina is needed in acting on it.

What I, and I believe most Israelis, look for are red lines: about how much to yield to the PLO, and on what terms; about how to show the necessary toughness on Jewish Jerusalem; and about how to handle Syria and the Golan.

On the last subject, to surrender the Golan, or any part of it, now seems folly when it would surely be more prudent to make peace with Jordan, Morocco, Tunisia and yes, the PLO, and leave Syria, for a while, in the cold.

As for the PLO, to give just one example, watch how they lose no opportunity, not even when talking to children, to proclaim their goal as Jerusalem as capital of a Palestinian state.

Why this unbending attitude, and not just on Jerusalem as their capital, which it never was? The only answer that makes sense is not some sort of self-rule for the Arab population in the Arab part of the city, which they can have, but political control over the holy places, Muslim and Christian, with us having to come to them, cap in hand, for permission to pray — or rather, once more, to wail — at the Western Wall. But for us, having reached Zion after two millennia of waiting, to lose it again would be the end of Zionism.

The government ought to respond to this threat with a strong reaffirmation of Zionism. This would, like something else, reunite Israelis after the Oslo accord has divided them as they have never been divided before.

NOT FIRST CJC MEET

Maurice Lucow has correctly stressed the important role of the Jews of Winnipeg and Western Canada in the movement towards the founding conference of Canadian Jewish Congress in 1919, and in the efforts to reestablish the Congress as a permanent body in 1934 in his report on the coming CJC conference in Vancouver The CJN, Sept. 29).

He is incorrect however in stating this will be the "first ever CJC Western conference."

The first conference of the Western and Pacific Regions of Canadian Jewish Congress took place in Vancouver on June 7 and 8, 1958, in honor of the centenary of the Jews in B.C. National president Sam Bronfman, executive chair Monroe Abbey and executive director Saul Hayes were in attendance. Over 100 delegates came from Winnipeg, Regina, Saskatoon, Calgary and Edmonton as well as Vancouver.

Topics discussed at that 1958 conference included Jewish education, the problem of religious education in the public schools, fundraising, and "How to make Congress more effective on the local scene." This information comes from the Jewish Western Bulletin, (June 6 and 13, 1958) during my tenure as editor.

Among the Winnipeg delegates were Saul and Sybil Cherniack; Saul was then Western regional chair. Hy Altman was the Pacific region chair and Esmond (Bud) Lando played an active role in the conference as national vice-president from the Pacific region.

During 1966-72 I also recall Western regional Congress meetings in Calgary and Regina as well as Winnipeg, while I served as CJC Western regional director. Of course the coming Vancouver conference may be much larger than past western meetings in view of the much enlarged Jewish population in British Columbia.

(Incidentally, Saul Cherniack is another recent appointee to the Order of Canada. Saul was one of the first appointees to the watchdog committee of CSIS, after he retired from active politics. He served in the late '60s and early '70s as a cabinet member in the Manitoba government of Premier Ed Schreyer.)

By and large I must say I am very impressed with the scope of coverage and the calibre of articles appearing in The CJN. Yeshayahu Anug's articles on Israel are particularly incisive.

It gives the undersigned great pleasure to inform you that The General Vanier Royal Canadian Legion Branch (Que. No. 234) at Roxboro has, at the September general meeting, overwhelmingly voted in favor of allowing religious head dress, namely yarmulkas and turbans, etc., to be worn by eligible members and guests at the Legion Hall, at all times.

I would like to point out that each branch of the Royal Canadian Legion has a set of house rules and branch by-laws separate from the general by-laws of the Royal Canadian Legion, Dominion Command.

All the adverse publicity given the Royal Canadian Legion was purely caused by ignorance of the public and the media of the structure of the Royal Canadian Legion. We are a very democratic organization and have proved this once again.

EDITORIAL OFF BASE

Your assertion (CJN, Sept. 14) that Morocco's decision to establish diplomatic ties with Israel is "rooted in Israel's rapprochement with the PLO" is correct, but this is not "leading to a just and lasting peace."

It is common knowledge that Iraq is desperate to join the peace process and there are rumors concerning Libya too. The reason for this is clear. Israel has capitulated to the PLO by not enforcing the Oslo accords.

The government has not shown concern that, one year later, the PLO covenant has not been overhauled. Secondly, Arafat solemnly signed that terrorism would end and if it occurs, its perpetrators would be brought to justice. The mass-circulation daily Yediot reported Sept. 14 that 5754 was the worst year in the history of the State of Israel for terrorist murders; at least 16 of them were committed by Fatah, which is under direct command of Arafat. Together with this, not one trial has taken place of any of the murderers.

Thus, it is clear to Israel's enemies that they have nothing to lose by entering into peace agreements.

Biblical data find new confirmation

By RABBI W. GUNTHER PLAUT

The headline of this article may puzzle many readers. After all, if any part of the Bible tells us what took place, do we need further confirmation?

But there are considerable numbers of scholars — in Israel and outside it — who point to the fact that there is no outside evidence to support significant biblical accounts.

One of these involves the ancient city of Hebron. It was a principal target of Joshua's troops during the conquest of the land, and according to the Torah (Numbers 13:22) it was an old city, formerly known as Kiryat-Arba. But, say the archeologists, no dig has found any evidence that Hebron existed before the 10th century, which is several hundred years later than the time of Joshua.

Now, an unbiased reader would conclude that we do have the biblical record on hand, and that it must be taken seriously even though it cannot be backed by archeological evidence, and that one should not make the absence of such evidence the reason for denying the accurate biblical account. For what has not been discovered to date may be discovered tomorrow, and even if no such discovery is ever made it is easy to imagine that ancient Kiryat-Arba/Hebron was so thoroughly destroyed that we cannot find any remains.

Rabbi Plaut

In the September/October 1994 issue of Biblical Archeology Review, Charles R. Krahmalkov refers to these "rejectionist scholars." So certain are they of their point of view, Krahmalkov says, that one of them writes: "It is quite clear that the biblical writers knew nothing about events in Palestine before the 10th century BCE." (i.e., the time of David and Solomon).

However, in this fascinating article, Krahmalkov provides evidence that in fact there is archeological support for the existence of Hebron as an important city in Canaan at the time of Joshua.

In the late Bronze Age, when the conquest took place, Egypt had ruled the area for about 300 years (about 1500-1200), and some Egyptian wall mats have been found which list the extent of the empire and note principal cities in various parts of the Near East. Not only is Hebron clearly marked as being an important place, the mats also show that the towns surrounding it are precisely those mentioned in Joshua, Chapter 15. Krahmalkov makes the same case for other locales. Thus, the town of Kedesh figures in the war of Deborah and Barak (Judges, Chapters 4 and 5). Scholars have doubted this mention, because no local archeological evidence had been found so far for it. But it too is mentioned on an Egyptian wall mat, thus unmistakably refuting its "non-existence."

What bothers me especially about the rejectionist scholars is their absolute certainty that they are right and everyone else, including the Bible, is wrong. This scholarly arrogance puts me off every time. Whenever I read accounts bereft of all modesty I come to the conclusion that they are probably wrong. For those who occupy themselves with biblical studies this back-and-forth presents a fascinating spectacle, which in itself is worthy of independent study.

After blast, Argentine Jews still reeling

By LAURA FLEISCHMAN
Jewish Telegraphic Agency

Last summer's terrorist attack that destroyed the headquarters of the Jewish community in Buenos Aires has been a striking, despicable shock for Argentines. The strike, which killed nearly a hundred people and wounded hundreds more, triggered mourning, despair, haunting fear, and a deep sense of insecurity.

Ironically, this sense of insecurity has been exacerbated rather than alleviated by the government's decision to establish a Security Secretariat to concentrate policing in the hands of the government.

This super secretariat, first proposed following a popular uprising in the interior of Argentina last year, gained momentum after the Chiapas outbreak in Mexico. But the extent to which this structure will actually make the intelligence community more capable of dealing with international terrorism is dubious.

Rather, past traditions of a security apparatus, and the perceived threat of latent social conflict, raise fears that the government is refurbishing its repressive structure to deal with internal threats, as has been customary in Argentina.

Indeed, fear is not an unknown sentiment among Argentines who lived in distress from 1976 to 1983, when a military regime perpetrated clandestine terror against society. Thousands of political prisoners were seized and disappeared in the hands of a "security" apparatus that became expert in racketeering, torturing and killing civilians.

During those years, Argentinean Jews, in particular, suffered the weight of repression due to the entrenched anti-Semitic feelings of the security apparatus. Jews trapped in the hand of the terrorist state were treated with special cruelty because they were considered to be intrinsically subversive.

Anti-Semites within the security apparatus, and among extreme right-wing nationalists, have often attempted to persuade the rest of society that Jews were aliens in Argentina. In their view, Jews were citizens of Israel, a foreign country with a different flag and national anthem and, therefore, unable to integrate into Argentine society.

But anti-Semitism predates the military regime in Argentina. Its violent antecedents can be traced to the early decades of this century. The awareness that being a Jew could have terrible consequences was evident in the 1960s, when ugly eruptions of anti-Semitism led to bombings, beatings, assaults, painted swastikas on the streets, and even instances of torture of Argentinean Jews.

Many childhood memories include bomb threats, attacks against schools and synagogues, and strict security measures that Jewish establishments carried out as a means of shielding children from a nightmare of violence that enveloped Argentina.

The inability and even unwillingness of civilian regimes to contain, investigate, and punish the perpetrators of those right-wing nationalist attacks (often supported and tolerated by the police) was disturbing, but not surprising.

Jews understood that right-wing ultra-nationalist groups held disproportionate power within key institutions of the state apparatus, including the armed forces and educational institutions. Jews began to accommodate themselves to this reality, finding consolation in the fact that anti-Semitism was not unique to Argentina.

When democracy was restored in Argentina in 1983, elected president Raul Alfonsin managed to pursue some degree of truth and justice by publicizing the horrors perpetrated by the previous regime and by holding public trials of leading members of the military junta and other senior officers.

Everybody hoped that violence in Argentina would be a thing of the past. However, democracy did not imply the pacification of anti-democratic groups. When President Carlos Menem gave amnesty to the generals that had been tried in the previous administration for assassination and human rights violations and when he ended the trials of former torturers, the process of healing through due process was curtailed. Some perpetrators were even allowed to resume their jobs within the security apparatus.

After 1983, fear of anti-Semitism diminished, although there was an awareness in the back of people's minds that private political violence was not fully de-activated, and that perpetrators were still walking freely in the streets of Buenos Aires.

People encountered notorious torturers, and in one case, a well-known police torturer enrolled his child in a school located in a Jewish neighborhood of the capital district.

Nonetheless, even with the reappearance of Nazi books and the desecration of Jewish cemeteries in recent years, Argentine Jews were unprepared for the most recent attack, despite the bombing of the Israeli Embassy in 1992.

There is mounting suspicion that the latest bombing in Argentina has international dimensions, and that pro-Iranian terrorist groups could be behind the attack. Some also believe that some Argentineans might have given logistical support.

Until now, the government has not given many clues to the 1992 bombing of the Israeli Embassy. Israelis even have reported that elements within the Argentine police undermined the investigation of that incident.

This time, the sinister word "disappeared," which once referred to the thousands victimized by a repressive military regime, referred to people who were not accounted for after the July 18 blast. The term resounded in Argentina, where many former perpetrators of human rights abuses are currently unemployed.

Many of these individuals relate "subversion" to the Jewish condition. They have not been punished for previous violations of human rights, and are available to join any anti-Jewish crusade. For they believe they are above the rule of law.

I am a YAM, a YAM I am

By JACK CHISVIN

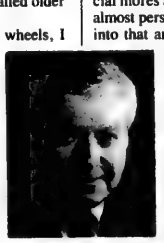
A few weeks ago I celebrated a birthday. Celebrated might be an exaggeration. Let's say I experienced a birthday, or to be precise, I was reminded of my birthday when during the course of the day I found a card in my morning mail basket and another under my dinner plate that night.

Now, having a birthday is not unusual. Everyone has one, and everyone keeps looking forward to the next, for the alternative is something we don't dare contemplate. But the undeniable truth is that with each passing birthday we get further removed from youth.

Not that I no longer empathize with youth. I was a pretty cool guy myself once. My hair was cut bristly short in a crew cut, my shoes were tied with colored laces, my tie was worn with the narrow end overlaying the wide end, and my trousers were very narrow at the cuff, ballooned at the knee and deeply pleated.

I banded with screaming crowds of my contemporaries at concerts to hear a skinny little singer called Frankie croon about my clothes — "I wanna zoot suit with a reat pleat." I also displayed other peculiar mannerisms: I called older people Ma'am or Sir.

Since neither I nor my friends had wheels, I used public transportation. If the conveyance was full when an older person boarded, I got up and offered my seat — outrageous behavior by today's standards.



Jack Chisvin

Youth is not only a time of life but a state of mind which some lucky people never outgrow. It is a tenor of the will, a range of the emotions, a freedom of the senses and an unbounded imagination. Nobody grows old by merely counting the years. People grow old by deserting their ideals and running out of tomorrows.

Every age has groups which define its trends and fads. Within recent memory, beatniks, hippies and yuppies have appeared on and disappeared from the scene. But I am ambivalent about issues of identity. When I was first addressed as "Sir," I was shocked into worrying about who I am. Sir is for older people. Surely, that couldn't be me.

Thirty years later, after my generation failed to do anything outrageous to rock the boat of social mores and become heroes of our time, I was almost persuaded to believe I had been subsumed into that amorphous mass of senior citizens.

Like the time I bought seniors' movie tickets. As the designated buyer for my wife and two friends, I was instructed to ask for the tickets even though at that time none of us qualified. We supposed that to a teenage cashier, our grey hair was sufficient qualification.

I placed a $20 bill in the wicket and asked for four . . . the word "seniors" wouldn't come out of my mouth. My puritanical upbringing swept over me. I was guilt personified, certain the cashier could see through me and I would be publicly embarrassed. I stood there dry-mouthed, my voice fading into an imperceptible croak. Without hesitation I was handed four senior tickets and four dollars change. Deja-vu — it was like being called "sir" again for the first time.

I am not retired, nor do I even think about it, but together with my adventurous mate, we manage to take time to do things that defy age. We joined in spelunking by descending a lava tube in the Galapogos Islands; we snorkelled in the Great Barrier Reef off the coast of Australia; we skied the Plunge at Telluride; we went white water rafting in Costa Rica; we took a jungle treck in Sumatra — all of this after I reached the venerable age of 60.

There is one downside with each trip we take. At the end of it we are always older than we were at the start. Our latest escapade was a 75-mile hike up and down the vineyards of Burgundy. Sitting in the airplane on the flight home, for the moment isolated from the great public issues that would greet me, I was nevertheless not at ease. I was in a void, just on the edge of knowing something, when gradually I started feeling good about myself. Our travel experience left no doubt that I am still youthful, and active. I recalled having read that the fastest growing age group is not the over-60s but the over-100s, so I have yet to approach the onset of old age. I am merely mature.

There and then I discovered my identity. In our fetish for acronyms, and with apologies to Dr. Seuss, I am a YAM, a YAM I am — Youthful, Active and Mature. What more could a sentient being ask for?

Hitler's birthplace reflects infamous past

By SHELDON KIRSHNER

"We are not proud of it, nor can we hide it," said Josef Dax, the person who met me at the empty railway station one warm sunny mid-morning in late June.

Dax, the 33-year-old executive assistant to Braunau's mayor, was referring to the most notorious burgher ever produced by this secluded border town in Upper Austria, some 300 kilometres west of Vienna.

At 6:30 p.m., on April 20, 1889, in the Gasthof zum Pommer, Klara Polzl, the third wife of a customs officer 23 years her senior, gave birth to a boy who was to become the greatest enemy of the Jewish people.

He was christened Adolf Hitler, and his name is inscribed in crabbed letters in a mouldering registry kept behind lock and key in Braunau's pre-eminent Roman Catholic church. Ironically, the Gothic pile, St. Stefan, which pierces Braunau's low skyline, was completed in 1492, the year the Jewish community was expelled from Spain during the Spanish Inquisition.

Although Hitler's association with Braunau was extremely short-lived — he and his family moved away when he was very young, and he never returned — this lovely town lying amid green rolling hills on the Inn River has been cursed by his terrible legacy.

"The only thing famous — or infamous — about Braunau is that it is Hitler's birthplace," observed Johann Wolf ruefully. He is a 46-year-old teacher of English and geography who grew up here.

Its notoriety notwithstanding, Braunau is terra incognita to many Austrians and Europeans, a clean, picturesque, tranquil, remote burg of 17,000 inhabitants which, according to the locals, has never had a Jewish community.

"A Jewish family, the Wertheimers, lived in the district before the war," noted Dax, whose father was all of 15 when the Allies liberated Austria from Germany's hegemonial grip in 1945. "They emigrated in the 1930s."

Connected to Germany by a narrow bridge, Braunau was a commercial hub and a military garrison during its Habsburg Empire phase. Its population was about 4,000 when Hitler was born and 5,000 when Austria was annexed by Germany in 1938.

Braunau's predominantly Roman Catholic residents welcomed the Anschluss and, it appears, were proud that a native son, Hitler, sprang from Braunau. "Only a few people in Braunau and the rest of Austria were anti-Nazi," claimed Peter Untareiner, Braunau's sole Protestant pastor.

By Dax's account, the German occupation of Braunau came to an inglorious end on May 1, 1945, when the Wehrmacht fled, following a threat by the American army to bombard the town.

Since then, much to Braunau's dismay, the town has been haunted by the spectre of the Third Reich and the Holocaust.

In 1979, on the 90th anniversary of Hitler's birth, neo-Nazis and anti-Nazis staged noisy, disruptive demonstrations here. A decade later, when neo-Nazis and their opponents converged on Braunau yet again, the town was better prepared, with metal barriers and riot squads ringing the house where Hitler was born.

The three-storey yellow building on 15 Salzburger Vorstadt, just off Braunau's expansive main square, was originally an inn, then an army barracks and then a library. In recent years, it has served as a day care centre for handicapped children. To its left is a furniture shop. To its right, a clothing store.

In front of the house is a plain stone marker quarried from Mauthausen, the former concentration camp. The inscription reads: "For peace, freedom and democracy. Never again fascism. In memory of the millions of dead."

The memorial was placed on the site in March 1989 at the initiative of its newly-elected mayor, Gerhard Skiba. His father was "a simple soldier" in the Wehrmacht and, he believes, knew absolutely nothing about the Holocaust until hostilities had ceased.

Skiba, 47, put up the memorial as a reminder of the past and as a warning against "budding neo-Nazism." He did not consult the city council, knowing that representatives of the right-wing Freedom party and elements within the conservative People's party might oppose his plan.

At the ceremony marking the placement of the monument, Skiba delivered an impassioned speech. The German text, translated into English, runs as follows:

"Since we here in Braunau are also aware of historical facts, we do not repress the tragic ones. Just the opposite. We bow in reverence and mourning to all the victims of that horrible time... We are aware of the values which are important to us — the support of openness and tolerance, the respect for differing opinions, and the sense for justice and democracy...

"With this, we will remove the breeding ground for ideas which once drove our country and its people into darkness. There may be no pause in the struggle for peace, human rights and against intolerance and anti-Semitism."

Skiba, a soft-spoken man, derives satisfaction from the fact that Hitler's former residence is used by the disabled who, he points out, were callously disposed of in euthanasia programs under Nazi rule.

He hopes the house can be converted into a museum-cum-documentation centre on the Nazi era, with emphasis on Austria's role in the Third Reich and the Holocaust.

The project remains on hold, pending a decision by the Pommer family to sell the property. In 1983, Skiba's predecessor sought permission from the Pommers to erect a plaque on the building, but the heir — an elderly lady — refused. She feared that vandals would break its windows.

In point of fact, the house has never been vandalized, and Nazi sympathizers have left bouquets of flowers there. However, the anti-fascist memorial has been spray-painted with swastikas.

Apart from the memorial, Braunau remembers the past in various ways.

In 1988, on the 50th anniversary of the Anschluss, schools required pupils to submit essays and projects on the event.

Four years later, Braunau sponsored a day-long seminar on the war, inviting participants from Poland, France, the Czech Republic and Germany.

In the future, Braunau wants to build a fountain in memory of Franz Jagerstatter, a member of the Austrian resistance movement executed by the Nazis in 1943.

Johannes Buchstaller — a 37-year-old biology and math teacher — claims that students in his secondary school are, in general, familiar with the Holocaust and the war (which claimed 520 soldiers from Braunau). Excursions to Mauthausen, he says, are mandatory from the age of 14.

Buchstaller doubts whether Braunau's image has been sullied by its inextricable link with Hitler. But no unanimity exists insofar as this question is concerned.

Dax has heard comments characterizing Braunau as a "Nazi town." When Rudolf Schmidt, a retired music teacher, travelled in Italy and in the former Yugoslavia, he felt a palpable coolness. "There are a lot of people in Braunau who are ashamed," he said. "Others say, 'We had nothing to do with it.' "

Stefan Hoffer, the parish priest at St. Stefan, the church where Hitler was baptized, contends that Braunau has not been stigmatized. But in the next breath, he allows that Braunauers who visit Israel disingenuously claim they're from the "Salzburg area." Salzburg, the birthplace of Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart, is approximately 60 kilometres north of Braunau.

Nearly 50 years have elapsed since the war ended. Yet some of the residents of Braunau — whose economy is dependent on an aluminum plant and glass and automobile parts factories — continue to live with painful memories of that time.

Mayor Gerhard Skiba

A technician in the German air force, Reinhard Untareiner was an ardent Nazi and an unreconstructed anti-Semite until his death in 1975. "He blamed all problems on Jews. I couldn't speak to him about this. He tried to turn me into an anti-Semite."

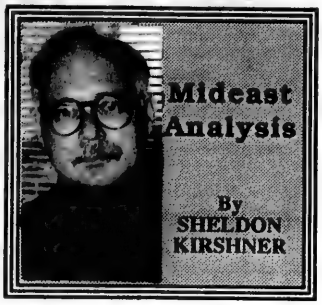
Schmidt's father joined the Nazi party after the Anschluss, but was apparently not "a fanatic." A conscript in the Wehrmacht, he vanished without a trace in the Balkans.

Wolf's father, also in the Wehrmacht, served in the Soviet Union and Poland. "He heard rumors of atrocities against civilians, but it was forbidden to ask questions." His father, he said, never knowingly knew a Jew.

Like other towns in Europe which do not have a Jewish community, Braunau is plagued by that bizarre but recurring phenomenon — anti-Semitism without Jews.

Elderly residents solemnly informed Dax that Jews were "to blame" for Austria's imminent entry into the European Union. "Anti-Semitic propaganda is still in their heads," he said disgustedly. Schmidt, for his part, has heard anti-Jewish jokes, told with a Yiddish inflection. Buchstaller argues that anti-Semitic attitudes in Braunau, consisting of "old legends," are no different than elsewhere in Austria. Skiba bemoans the existence of anti-Semitism and xenophobia.

Despite the persistence of anti-Semitic feelings, Braunau is politically liberal, a bastion of the Social Democratic party. In the 1986 presidential election, Kurt Waldheim — the candidate who concealed his past, much to Austria's subsequent embarrassment — trailed his Socialist rival by a margin of 5,291 to 4,103.



Following the 1948-49 War of Independence, Israel and its Arab adversaries entered into indirect peace talks in the Swiss city of Lausanne. The purpose of the negotiations, sponsored by the United Nations, was ambitious — a "final settlement" of the Arab-Israeli dispute.

Running from April to September 1949, the Lausanne conference was a failure. Nevertheless, it was an historic occasion, a chance for Israel and its Arab neighbors to settle their differences peacefully.

Strange as it may sound, not a single monograph devoted entirely to this diplomatic episode had ever been written until the recent appearance of Neal Caplan's slender volume, The Lausanne Conference, 1949: A Case Study in Middle East Peacemaking (Syracuse University Press, $9.95, US).

Published under the auspices of the Moshe Dayan Center for Middle Eastern and African Studies, The Lausanne Conference is a thoroughly-researched work, based on Hebrew, Arabic, English and French documents.

The author — a Middle East specialist whose books include Palestine Jewry and the Arab Question, 1917-1925 and Futile Diplomacy, Arab-Zionist Negotiation Attempts, 1913-1948 — teaches at Montreal's Vanier College.

The ill-fated conference was conducted under the umbrella of the Palestine Conciliation Commission. But the Western powers played a crucial behind-the-scenes role.

Opportunity wasted

The United States concluded that the talks could only succeed if Israel allowed a substantial number of Palestinian refugees to return to their homes in what was now Israel. However, Israel was not keen. In a meeting with U.S. Secretary of State Dean Acheson, Israeli Foreign Minister Moshe Sharett argued that the refugee problem — which remains a major question today — could only be resolved in the context of a comprehensive peace accord.

David Ben-Gurion — Israel's prime minister — added his voice to the debate. While reiterating Sharett's position, he maintained that the introduction of large numbers of Arabs into Israel would create a potential fifth column.

Facing an intractable deadlock in Lausanne, Israel floated a trial balloon which, in retrospect, seems incredible. The Gaza Strip and its Palestinian population would be annexed by Israel, thereby solving the refugee problem. Oddly enough, the proposal was roundly rejected by the Arabs.

Next, in yet another futile effort to get the talks going, the United States suggested that Israel cede the port of Eilat to Egypt. Then Britain presented a plan which, among other things, called for Israeli territorial concessions in the southern Negev, the repatriation of refugees, and Haifa port facilities for the Arab states.

Watching these developments with trepidation, Israel changed its strategy, Caplan writes. It would no longer chase after real peace, since the Arabs would demand an intolerably high price in exchange. Instead, Israel would be satisfied with a mere armistice. Thus, as Caplan observes, Israel's linkage between a refugee settlement and an overall peace agreement was broken.

This new strategy, combined with an Israeli offer to resettle 100,000 refugees, did not impress the Arabs. Evidently, the United States was of the same mind. In a bid to induce Israeli "flexibility," the Truman administration suspended payments to a $100 million loan previously granted by the Export-Import Bank of Washington.

This punitive action had no effect whatsoever on the peace process. At the end of the day, Israel and the Arabs were still far apart on substantive issues.

In Caplan's view, Lausanne was a fiasco for at least three reasons: the growing conviction of each side that time worked in its favor, and that serious concessions were not necessary; the Arab tactic of using the conference to subvert Israel rather than making peace with the Jewish state; and, finally, the desire by Israel to consolidate its military gains without offering significant concessions on territory or refugees.

As a result, a golden opportunity to resolve the Arab-Israeli conflict through peaceful means was frittered away.

VAUGHAN — It's rare in municipal politics, but in Vaughan's newly-created Ward 5, it's an all-Jewish slate of candidates for the Nov. 14 city-wide vote.

Seeking re-election is Bernie Green, first elected to council in 1988 in what used to be Ward 3. The ward, co-held by Coun. Mario Racco, was split earlier this year after the Ontario Municipal Board (OMB) approved the concept of one councillor per ward.

But in so doing, Green charged at the time, the OMB gerrymandered the ward and created a "Jewish ghetto" because the rejigging meant Ward 5 was 80-85 per cent Jewish.

According to Green, that also limited the possibility of Jewish candidates winning election in any other ward, and would always mean the district would be "the Jewish ward" on council.

Vaughan's council last year approved the new boundaries, and Green reluctantly went along, believing the dividing line would be along Bathurst Street. But the OMB split Ward 3 along New Westminster Drive, meaning thousands more Jewish residents are in the new southeastern ward than if the line had been drawn at Bathurst.

Ward 5 is bounded by Clark Avenue, south along New Westminster to Steeles, north along Yonge Street to Highway 7, west to Bathurst and south to Clark. It has a population of just over 25,000.

The area takes in almost all of Thornhill's Jewish residents, including the Spring Farm community, those affiliated with Chabad-Lubavitch of Thornhill and several day schools and synagogues.

Making another stab at local politics is David Chapley, who held Ward 3 on council from 1982 to 1991 and doubled as local and regional councillor from 1988 to 1991.

As well, he was Hydro commissioner from 1985 to 1992.

Chapley, 44, tallies a long list of community involvement, including at Vaughan's non-profit housing corporation, the public library board and the race and ethnocultural relations committee.

He's also on the executive of Jewish Federation of Greater Toronto, and a member of both the community relations committee of Canadian Jewish Congress and B'nai Brith's League for Human Rights.

Also running hard for the council seat is Henry Cowen (Sittayoun), a business manager and long-time Jewish communal activist.

Cowen, in his late 50s, says he likes to "think big" now that Vaughan is no longer a town but a city.

He'd like to see a centre for performing arts, similar to North York's; world-class tennis courts and a soccer stadium; and a tax freeze for two years.

Cowen, making his first bid for public office, would seek twice-weekly garbage collection in summer months, clearing driveway entrances and side streets after snow ploughing, and open-air swimming pools in some parks.

A fifth-generation Sabra who immigrated to Canada in 1957, Cowen tallies a long list of Jewish activities, including fundraising for several organizations. He's involved with B'nai Brith, the Labor Zionist Movement, Canadian Jewish Congress and was president of Magen David Sephardic Congregation.

Green, 47, says he's running largely on his record, the "key element" of which has been a zero per cent tax increase last year and .5 per cent reduction this year.

Green also points to the new pool at the Dufferin-Clark community centre, the new municipal library on Clark and new traffic lights at key intersections. During his terms, he "took a leadership role" in the establishment of three new Jewish day schools in the ward, proposed branches of both the Reena Foundation and Aish HaTorah, and twinning Vaughan with the Israeli town of Ramla.

If re-elected, Green says he'll push for improved maintenance for parks and streets "but not at extra cost," and a three-year tax freeze.

Green is promised a stiff challenge from Susan Kadis, the two-term York Region Board of Education trustee from Thornhill.

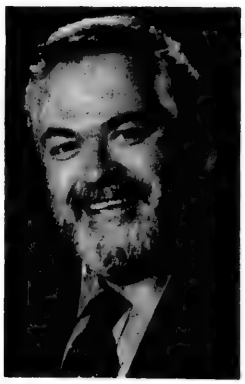
Municipal Decision '94

By MOURA WOLPERT
CJN Correspondent

Emmy Weisz



Marvin Caplan

HAMILTON — There's a good chance Hamilton may have a Jewish representative on city council after the Nov. 14 municipal elections.

Marvin Caplan and Emmy Weisz are among nine candidates competing for two seats as aldermen in Ward One, which has a large Jewish population.

Only one of the two present representatives, long-time alderman Mary Kiss, is running again; Terry Cooke is vacating his seat to run for the job of regional chair.

The last Jew to serve on city council was Ward One alderman Paul Drage, who died in the early '80s while in office.

A former Torontonian who has been a resident of Ward One since he opened Marvin Caplan Gentlemen's Apparel here in 1978, Caplan has long taken a keen interest in municipal affairs and in the development of the downtown core.

He decided to run for office, he told The CJN, out of sense of frustration at "the lack of vision, the lack of planning" he has observed here over the years.

His background as a retailer and an active member of numerous business organizations, including the Hamilton and District Chamber of Commerce, the Retail Council of Canada and the Rotary Club, and as a founding member and current president of the Downtown Hamilton Business Improvement Area and immediate past president of the Social Planning and Research Council of Hamilton and District, will be immensely beneficial, he says.

It has also helped him develop "the listening skills" as well as "the ability to ask questions no one else ever seems to think of asking" — essential attributes for effective representation in municipal government, he says.

Besides his involvement in local, national and Jewish causes too numerous to list, Caplan is also a frequent lecturer on business-related subjects at local high schools, Mohawk College and McMaster University. He has taught a course on Canadian Jewish history at Beth Jacob Sunday high school.

Emmy Weisz is a social worker whose prime concerns are persons with special needs and the elderly, efficient public services and "intelligent, productive, long term planning."

A native of Holland, she survived World War II as a hidden child and on her own. She and her husband, Erich, also a survivor, have been residents of Ward One for over 30 years, and are the parents of two grown sons.

A graduate of the McMaster University School of Social Work, Weisz also holds a masters degress in social work from the University of Toronto.

She is the founding president of the Alzheimer Society for Halton-Wentworth, served on the board of Jewish seniors' residence Shalom Village, and was executive director of Beth Tikvah, a home for developmentally handicapped adults.

Weisz is also a past president of The Consumer Association for the Hamilton area, The Ontario Association of Professional Social Workers (Hamilton Branch), and the National Committee on Consumer Issues for the Elderly.

Her concern for the needs of the elderly and infirm has frequently led her to investigate such hazards as slippery supermarket floors and cracked sidewalks.

She is presently a member of the National Advisory Committee on Elder Abuse in the Ethno-cultural Community and on the Pathway Committee at city hall.

Jay Feinberg reaches out to community

By LEILA SPEISMAN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO —Time is running out for Jay Feinberg, the 26-year-old New Jersey man whose valiant three year search for a bone marrow transplant has captured the hearts and imaginations of his fellow Jews.

In an interview taped last week for airing on the Oct. 17 Shirley Show, Feinberg and his mother, Arlene, clutching each others' hands, announced that his physician told them a few days ago that he has only a few months left to live.

Toronto's Jewish community once more has the oppurtunity to help, as they have so enthusiastically in the past. A mass blood screening is being held Oct. 18, at Shaarei Shomayim Synagogue, 470 Glencairn Ave. from 5 pm to 9 pm.

Anyone from 17 to 50, and in good health, can be a donor. Those who have already been tested, for Jay Feinberg or for previous appeals for Alison Atlas, need not be tested again.

"It was like a bad dream," Jay said, when asked by host Shirley Solomon how he felt when he got the latest bad news. "I felt like I was looking right through him [the doctor]. I kept thinking that I'll wake up and everything will be different."

There is no question that there is hope for Jay, who suffers from chronic myelogenous leukemia. A highlight of the show is the meeting between 19-year-old Thornhill teenager Audey Stanleigh and Steve Cheifetz, the Windsor man whose bone marrow donation, located, ironically, through a clinic for Feinberg, saved his life.

Cheifetz' wife urged the audience to be tested. "It could be your brother, or your sister or your child. If you would want them to be helped, you have to be prepared to help others."

Women's publication launched

By FRANCES KRAFT
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — "Maybe I'm a bit idealistic," says Dorothy Lichtblau, 42, reflecting on her goals for Jewish Women's Forum.

The publication she envisioned months ago became a reality with the printing of 5,000 copies of the first September/October issue.

"There are many perspectives [within the Jewish community], and I think diversity makes things rich," Lichtblau said in a recent interview. She wants JWF to be an "interactive" publication in which "people feel they have a voice."

Lichtblau, who is both publisher and editor of JWF, sees it as a vehicle for education and unification within the Jewish community. "I feel there's a strength in working together," she said.

It's only in the past few years that Lichtblau, a Toronto-born child of Holocaust survivors, has become more involved in the Jewish community. A member of the egalitarian First Narayever Congregation, she is also part of Toronto's Jewish Feminist Community, an outgrowth of the first feminist Sukkot service held here in 1992.

"It's been a long process. Maybe the core of it is trying to come to terms with who I am: female, Jewish, and someone for whom the arts are very important," she said.

A teacher by training, Lichtblau is also an actor, playwright, storyteller and journalist. JWF represents her first foray into publishing.

The 12-page premiere issue, printed newsletter-style on recycled bond paper, is dedicated to women throughout Jewish history. It includes profiles of Rabbi Gilah Dror, president of the Rabbinical Assembly of Israel, and of Toronto writer Rhea Tregebov, as well as an article on 2nd-century scholar Beruriah and a biblical analysis (In Search of the Hidden Twin Sisters of the Tribes of Israel) by Orthodox lawyer Shayna Kravetz.

Each issue of JWF will have a theme. Upcoming issues will deal with A Jewish Education: What Do We Teach Our Children? (November/December), How Jewish Women Can Help Create Peace Consciousness (January/Febuary, and Jewish Feminism: A Process of Cultural Transformation (March/April).

Dorothy Lichtblau

Lichtblau believes her publication is unique in Canada, but is aware of similar publications in the United States. The response to the first issue, of which over 3,000 copies have been distributed, has been "really wonderful," she said.

She hopes the response will be reflected in subscriptions, advertising and editorial contributions. The magazine is not community-funded, and Lichtblau is able to pay only one assistant, who also does some work on a volunteer basis.

JWF is available at a number of Jewish locations in Toronto, including bakeries. Copies will also be available at next month's Jewish Book Fair, to be held at Leah Posluns Theatre. A one-year subscription to JWF costs $18 plus GST.

Space science pioneer dies

By AMY SATTIN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Dr. Irvine Israel Glass, a pioneer of space science in Canada, died Oct. 3 of heart failure. He was 76.

Glass, who collected academic honors and bestowed scholarships in equally generous amounts, was one of the first scientists to understand what happens when a spacecraft re-enters the Earth's atmosphere.

His work with the American government in the 1950s and 1960s helped lay the groundwork for the Apollo space missions, said colleague Dr. Jean Sislian, who worked with Glass at the University of Toronto's Institute for Aerospace Studies.

After mastering re-entry shields, Glass turned his attention to shock waves. His expertise in this field was recognized by the University of Toronto, which named him a distinguished professor in 1982, and by the Israel Academy of Science, which made him a 1990 Einstein Fellow.

The Polish-born Glass was an ordained rabbi at 18.

His love of teaching often coincided with his commitment to Jewish causes, colleagues said. Glass bestowed a Yiddish scholarship at U of T in honor of his first wife, Anne, who died in 1982; a scholarship at Ben Gurion University, where he taught in 1991; and a Talmudic scholarship at Associated Hebrew Schools.

In an obituary he prepared in May 1992, Glass mentions his pride in teaching and his love for Talmud. He wanted readers to know that "all his life he tried to be a mensch."

Glass is survived by wife Freda, daughters Vivian Felsen, Ruth Moses and Susan Glass, and seven grandchildren.

Yiddish leaders honored

By BEN ROSE
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — When former pupils clustered around Yiddish teacher Manya Lipschitz the night she and her husband, Sam, were honored by the Yiddish Studies Program, it was old hat.

"Many former pupils of Manya who are themselves bubbies and zaidas come up to her at gatherings and say,'Don't you remember me?' " Sam Lipschitz said.

The evening also honored J.B. Salsberg and Ben and Hilda Katz.

Yiddish committee chair Bayla Chaikof spoke to about 90 guests at a reception at the Rosemary Lane home of Pearl and Jerry Banks. The late Ben Himel, father of the hostess, inspired the Yiddish program with a gift of $75,000.

Chaikof said $50,000 was raised this year at parlor meetings and through the staging of The Yiddish Mikado. The money will finance three university Yiddish classes until the 1994-95 academic year. Fundraising efforts for the 1995-96 year are underway, Chaikof said.

The committee believes that the growing interest in Yiddish by people of all ages can justify a $1-million fundraising goal for the appointment of a professor of Yiddish Studies at the university, Chaikof said.

A highlight of the evening was a brief talk by Ellen Kellman, the first Ray D. Wolfe Fellow in Jewish Studies at the university.

Rose Wolfe, just elected to a new three-year-term as chancellor of the university, and wife of the late Ray Wolfe, was introduced just before Kellman spoke.

"I'm bringing you a report from the trenches," said Kellman."I ask my students, 'Why are you taking a Jewish course?' More and more are saying they missed out on a piece of their cultural background. They come with open minds and an eagerness to learn."

Most American universities cannot respond to the renewed interest in Yiddish because of a shortage of qualified Yiddish techers, she said. "The situation has reached crisis proportions."

Even in her own PhD program at Columbia University, the only one to offer a PhD in Yiddish studies, Kellman said there is little emphasis on preparation for teaching. Her thesis was on novels appearing in the Yiddish press in America between 1900 and 1940.

Prof. Libby Garshowitz, director of Jewish Studies at the university, introduced two other Yiddish instructors, Sharon Green and Eleanor Moidel.

The Yiddish program is part of Jewish Studies at the university and in conjunction with the latter's 25th anniversary, the Yiddish commitee is bringing the famed Boston Klezmer orchestra to Convocation Hall on March 26, Chaikof announced.

"If we want young people involved and interested in Yiddish they must be able to learn Yiddish at university," said Gerry Kane, chair of the Yiddish Commitee of the Jewish Federation of Greater Toronto.

He decsribed Salsberg as "a living piece of Canadian history," and paid tribute to the work of Sam and Manya Lipschitz and Ben and Hilda Katz in furthering mamaloshen in Toronto.

"When I get into trouble I think the problem out in Yiddish," Kane said. "It's part of my existence. Those of us who attended Manya's classes developed a love of Yiddish."

Cellist Grigroy Goldberg and pianist Shaya Petroff played Yiddish melodies, encouraging spontaneous singing and dancing among guests like Gloria Valentine and Jenny Eisenstein.

Flu alert issued

TORONTO — The Lung Association has issued a flu alert.

Influenza is a dangerous viral respiratory illness which can be prevented through either immunization or luck. Neither are fail-safe, but immunization offers better odds.

The vaccine lasts for about one year and, because new strains of the virus are reported each flu season, The Lung Association advises you to get a new shot each fall.

"Influenza vaccine is the single most effective way of preventing or attenuating influenza," says the National Advisory Committee on Immunization.

The committee recommends immunization in October or November because the flu shot takes about two weeks to take effect. If flu season has already started, one can take amantadine, a prescription medicine, while waiting for the vaccine to become active.

The vaccine has a 70 to 90 per cent effectiveness rate. Studies have shown the influenza vaccine greatly reduces the impact of the virus. It goes away faster and with less misery.

The Lung Association strongly recommends immunization for seniors and for people with chronic medical conditions because of their vulnerability.

In 1991, an estimated 6,779 Canadians died of influenza and influenza-related illness, chiefly pneumonia. More than 85 per cent of the deaths were among people over 65.

Yom Ha'atzmaut focal point of smaller communities

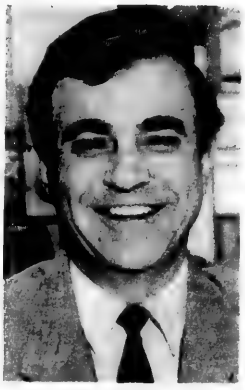
By MOURA WOLPERT
CJN Correspondent

HAMILTON — Yom Ha'atzmaut should be "the focal point of the Jewish calendar," suggests a Hamilton-based Israeli shaliach, who feels that the Jewish National Fund (JNF) can play a significant role in helping smaller Jewish communities maintain their link with Israel.

Now in his third year here as JNF Jerusalem emissary for smaller Jewish communities in south-west Ontario, Yoram Gordon recently recalled his dismay at discovering that Hamilton had no community-wide celebration marking Israel Independence Day.

When speakers at a Federation meeting on planning and priorities expressed their concern over Jewish continuity and the importance of maintaining the link with Israel, Gordon said he felt that a very important way to keep the Diaspora-Israel connection strong, is to bring the entire community together on Yom Ha'atzmaut.

He explained how his office had co-sponsored and helped organize last April's Yom Ha'atzmaut celebrations here. Held at the JCC and featuring renowned Israeli entertainer Yaffa Yarkoni and performances by children of Hamilton's three Jewish schools, and with the vice-consul of Israel and local politicians bringing greetings, the event was attended by an estimated 600 to 700 people of all ages, making it by far the largest and most successful Yom Ha'atzmaut celebration.



Yoram Gordan

"I felt there was something lacking in the community," Gordon later told The CJN. "There is not enough perception [of the importance] of Yom Ha'atzmaut"

There are other ways in which JNF can help smaller communities, Gordon said.

Referring to the resignation earlier this summer of JCC executive director, Neil Silvert, Gordon suggested that if, for instance, "you want to make the JCC the focal point of your community," a good idea might be to bring in a new director from Israel.

The JNF, he explained, has a special centre in Israel for training JCC directors, who are then sent out to run community centres all over the country, especially in communities with large new immigrant populations.

Their experience in bringing together all kinds of people from different backgrounds and helping them become Israelis, can also be useful in the Diaspora, suggests Gordon.

JNF is also willing, he said, to support and cooperate with local organizations in bringing educational and other programs to the community, and to assist Hillel and other Jewish student and youth groups.

Secular group mark 25 years with lectures

TORONTO — This year, the Secular Jewish Association (SJA) marks its silver anniversary.

Founded in 1969 by a small group of families who wanted both a relevant Jewish education for their children and a meaningful celebration of their Jewishness for themselves, both the school and the group have grown considerably over the years.

According to an SJA press release: "Secular Judaism is rooted in humanistic traditions and concepts that have been prevalent in Judaism, even from our earliest beginnings.

"The accomplishments of secular Jews through the ages, especially in the advancement of democracy and civil rights in the last two centuries in Europe and North America, in the Resistance during World War II, in the development of the State of Israel and in the peace process today are the experiences that have forged the secular humanistic Jewish culture and values. Today, the worldwide movement of Secular Humanistic Jews, based in Israel, with major federations in North America and Europe, continues to grow."

In celebration of its 25th anniversary, the SJA is sponsoring an eight-session adult education lecture series entitled Discovering Our Roots: Jewish Activists and Humanists. The lectures are open to the public and will be held at various times and locations. The first two are:

Seven Humanistic Principles in the Talmud — Eli Rubinstein, Jewish educator, leader, fundraiser and editor will speak on Sunday, Oct. 16, at 10 a.m., St. Andrews Jr. High School, Fenn Avenue (York Mils/Bayview).

Maimonides: A Guide for Today — Dr. David Bakan, professor emeritus of psychology at York University and a world-renowned authority on Maimonides, will speak on Sunday, Oct. 30, 8 p.m. at North York Central Library, 5210 Yonge St.

For further information, please call (905) 731-7066.

Youths targeted by hate groups: forum

By CAROLYN BLACKMAN
Special to The CJN

MARKHAM — A group of high school and university students recently agreed that young people are clearly the target of hate groups in Canada.

The group, facilitated by York University student Dionne Stephens, met at a workshop that was part of a community forum entitled Confronting Hate, Affirming Diversity sponsored by the Committee on Race and Ethnocultural Equity of Markham and the Ontario Anti-Race Secretariat, Ministry of Citizenship.

Other workshops included Hate Groups and the Workplace, Response to Hate Group Activities by the Education System, Public Awareness and Education Regarding Hate Group Activities, and Community Groups Organizing Against Hate.

In trying to establish why youth is a main target of hate groups such as Aryan Nations, Heritage Front, Church of the Creator, Ku Klux Klan, Northern Foundation and the Mountain Church, the workshop participants concluded that some may feel it it is "cool" to be part of a group, some may have problems at home and need people to turn to, and others need a cause to follow, whether that cause is good or bad.

A pamphlet handed out at the forum, prepared by the League for Human Rights of B'nai Brith Canada in co-operation with the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai Brith agreed that hate groups concentrate their recruiting efforts primarily in high schools and to some extent in colleges and universities.

According to the pamphlet: "Young people are more likely to accept at face value the racist ideology of the hatemonger. They are often naive and easily brainwashed by racist propaganda because they don't have the experience or facts at hand to refute the lies and myths being fed to them.

"Lonely, marginalized youth seeking a sense of identity and belonging are both the most attractive targets for racists and their most useful tools once recruited. Emotionally vulnerable or angry young people are easily indoctrinated by hatemongers and are often convinced to engage in violence and to commit criminal acts to prove themselves by following orders."

Jim Jones, a Markham city councillor said that particularly vulnerable are those young people who do not feel good about themselves.

"The recession seems to bring out the worst in people. Parents may be bitter because they lost their jobs and the kids start to feel down. When hate groups have parties that involve kids, they may feel eager to join. If youth are consulted with regards to community design and activities they will feel better about themselves."

In answer to how young people can recognize and be informed about the strategies and tactics used by hate groups, student Riklin Morzarial said that the education of youth and their parents should be mandatory.

"There should be compulsory courses in school and youth should be given a school credit to attend a forum such as this," he said. "High school students can teach younger kids about whom to be aware."

Racism not 'cool,' but some find camaraderie

Student David Fernandez said that once youth are faced with a hate group at school they should approach the authorities and counter-attack with literature and pamphlets. "Youth should organize rallies to show that they are taking a stand against these hate groups."

The League for Human Rights pamphlet advises the public to speak up, not ignore evidence of hate group activity and to report any overt incidents to the local police.

"Your municipal race relations committee, local school board, the League for Human Rights and other agencies have professionals trained in these areas and have experience in dealing with incidents of hate group activity and recruiting. If you or your child are victimized or targeted by racist hate groups, contact one of the agencies listed on this pamphlet."

These include the Ontario Anti-Racism Secretariat in the Ministry of Citizenship, the Provincial Human Rights Commission and The Canadian Human Rights Commission.

The workshop concluded with three recommendations: the education of youth, teachers and parents; direct community involvement in fighting racism; and youth coming together to work for a common cause and encourage a sense of well-being.

"With travel becoming so easy, the world is becoming a smaller place. We can no longer isolate ourselves. We must learn to get along," said Jones.

Bachelors up for bids again

TORONTO — The sisterhood of the Anshei Minsk Synagogue will hold their second annual Jewish bachelor auction on Nov. 10 at the Crowne Plaza Hotel, formerly L'Hotel, 225 Front St. West.

Featuring bachelors aged 25-65, the event is being billed as "the perfect Chanukah gift for your mother, sister or daughter." Visa and Mastercard will be accepted.

The program will include entertainment by comedian Michael Wex, a bachelor parade, the auction by professional auctioneer Ira Hopmeyer, door prizes, a wine and beer bar, hors-d'ouevre — the whole nine yards.

Tickets are $25 in advance and $36 at the door. Doors open at 6:45 p.m.

Those wishing to volunteer their services to help in securing donations of products and services or selling tickets are asked to call (416) 462-4299.

Bachelors over age 50 are also asked to participate in the auction.

The Certificate of Participation and Other Good Deeds

Every year, high school and college students by the hundreds are presented with a hand-lettered Certificate of Participation for completing an educational day—including a tour—at Benjamin's. Their comments positively affirm our belief in the importance of teaching this area of Jewish life. We also speak continuously to community groups, and lecture in schools on the religious, psychological and social context of our work.

Education, professional leadership and Tzedaka affirm Benjamin's role as a community resource. These are natural extensions of our everyday activities, fulfilling needs for Jewish dialogue, supporting innovations that better serve families, and providing support at the personal and professional level.

We are proud that today's students who come to learn about the mitzvot performed from the moment we are called, are the fifth generation to benefit from Benjamin's dedication to community service.

Mideast peace symposium planned for Winnipeg

By MYRON LOVE
CJN Prairie Correspondent

WINNIPEG — The Winnipeg Chapter of the Canadian Friends of the Hebrew University (CFHU) is holding a Mideast peace symposium Oct. 23 featuring perspectives from a Palestinian, a Christian, an Israeli official and an expert from the Hebrew University.

The keynote presentation of The Reality Behind Peace in the Middle East will be delivered by Hebrew U history professor Margalit Shilo. She will speak about the Israeli-Arab conflict from both Jewish and Arab perspectives.

The symposium also includes a panel discussion with Eli Yerushalmi, chief counsel to the Israeli Ambassador to Canada; Mennonite businessman Harold Dueck and Nabil Oudeh, a Palestinian from Haifa.

Oudeh is the director of the Centre for Winnipeg-based Conflict Resolution International Ltd. He has led seminars in Europe, the Middle East and North America and has trained hundreds of professionals and lay people in the techniques of mediation and conflict resolution.

The symposium co-chairs are Lola Baral, a travel consultant who co-chairs CFHU-Winnipeg chapter's program committee, Counc. Sandy Hyman and tax lawyer Joel Weinstein.

Otzma participants chosen

NEW YORK, NY — Following months of screening and interviewing, 87 college students and recent college graduates representing 27 Jewish Federations throughout North America have been selected to spend a year in Israel as participants in Project Otzma.

Otzma is an early leadership identification program supported in North America by the Council of Jewish Federations (CJF) and other participating Federations.

Toronto participants include Melissa Baron, Saul Cohen, Leila Lechcier-Kimel and Richard Price.

In Israel, Otzma is supported by the Israeli Forum, the Jewish Agency and the Youth and Hechalutz Department of the World Zionist Organization.

Now in its ninth year, Project Otzma is designed to heighten Jewish identity and commitment and strengthen the bonds between North American communities and Israel through volunteer service.

This year's participants will follow in the footsteps of some 600 Project Otzma alumni. The program involves a two-tiered approach: 10 months of service in Israel followed by a commitment to serve within the local Jewish community upon return. The Otzma program is continually changing to meet the current needs of Israeli society.

The Israel component is divided into four periods: three months on a kibbutz with an ulpan course to acquire the fundamentals of the Hebrew language; eight weeks working with immigrant children at Youth Aliya village or working in absorption centres with Ethiopian and Russian families; three weeks with the option of living on a religious kibbutz, pioneering in the Arava, experiencing life on an Israeli army base, or studying Jewish issues in Safed as part of the Livnot U'Lehibanot program; three months doing community service projects in Project Renewal neighborhoods supported by the Federations which sponsor Otzma participants.

All Otzma participants take part in an ongoing educational program and are adopted by Israeli families for the year.

Upon their return to North America, program participants serve their local Jewish communities.

"The Otzma program is an excellent way for Federations to identify gifted young adults with leadership potential at an early stage in their career development," said Bluma Stoler of Boston, chair of the CJF Otzma committee.

"The participants have a wonderful opportunity to create meaningful ties to their local Jewish communities and to Israel."

Two pre-departure orientations and training seminars were held on August 21 - 22 and August 23 - 24, in Whippany, N.J. Immediately following the seminars, the participants departed for Israel.

For information about the Otzma program for the coming year, contact Chaia Berkowitz, (416) 635-2883.

The Council of Jewish Federations is an association of 189 Jewish Federations which represent a Jewish population of more than 6.1 million in the United States and Canada.

ETROGIM DISPLAY

Beth Tikvah Synagogue is the current home of a unique display of etrogim loaned to the synagogue from the collection of Reuben and Toby Frankel. Each year since 1952 the Frankels have saved their etrog from Sukkot, placing it in an unusual container. The containers are most often egg cups made of silver, porcelain, marble, or wood but sometimes more unusual such as a tefillin case holder and a piece of a shofar. Unlike most other fruits, as etrog ages, it gets smaller, harder and stronger.

Tessler helps restore Jewish cemetery in Ukraine

By PAUL LUNGEN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — In 1989, when Manley Tessler returned to his Ukrainian hometown after 48 years, he was appalled by what he saw.

In a clearing in the forest about five kilometres from the tiny shtetl of Korec (pronounced Koretz) in the district of Wolyn was the killing field where the town's Jews met their end. But instead of a lovingly-tended cemetery with monuments to mark the place, cows and pigs wandered about, stopping to lick the parched bones that protruded from a thin layer of sandy soil.

Shaken by what he saw, Tessler said Kaddish for the shtetl's 5,000 Jewish victims. Leaving Ukraine, he resolved to do something about the cemetery.

Tessler got in touch with the town's surviving "landslite" (town natives) in Israel, Canada and Argentina, impressing on them the need to provide a proper cemetery for their families and friends. He raised $25,000 — a small fortune by Eastern European standards — and he hired a Jewish contractor named Kupershmit in the town of Rovno to construct a proper cemetery.

Last August, Tessler returned to the area to witness the fruits of that labor as a new cemetery and three tasteful granite monuments were unveiled.

The cemetery is now surrounded by a heavy iron fence decorated with menorahs and stars of David. Inside, the grounds have been landscaped.

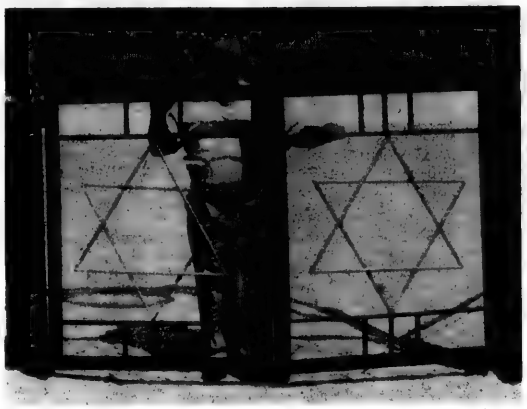
The unveiling ceremony was moving, Tessler recalled, as was his visit to his old hometown in the company of two his grandchildren, Ari and Sury Feinstein of Dallas.

Federal, regional and town officials were on hand, as was a group of Ukrainian schoolchildren who read brief biographies of some of the victims. About 50 survivors flew in from Israel, Canada and the United States.

Tessler said that just before the Holocaust, the town was home to a thriving Jewish community of about 5,500. Following the 1939 Soviet-Nazi pact that split Poland (Korec was then part of Poland), Soviet forces occupied the town. After the German invasion of June 1941, Tessler tried to convince his mother, brother and two sisters to escape with him. They refused but "an unknown power told me to go away," he said.

Grabbing a bicycle, he peddled to the rail station where he hopped on a train bound for Stalingrad. A bus driver by trade, Tessler worked as a truck driver in the Soviet city until the advance of German forces prompted him to escape to Cheryabinsk in Siberia.

There he found about 400 Korec natives, mostly men, who had been evacuated to work in a factory. He also learned that a school friend, Sonia Avret, had escapted along with a cousin to Tashkent where she worked on a farm. Tessler brought her to Cheryabinsk and the two eventually married.



Manley Tessler stands at the entrance to the cemetery near the shtetl of Korec where 5,000 Jews were rounded up and murdered by Nazis.

For five years they heard nothing from Korec. Later they learned the first murder of Jews took place in July 1941 when 350 people were rounded up and shot, including Tessler's brother, Shlomo, a tailor by profession. Tessler's mother died shortly afterwards.

The majority of the town's Jews were murdered just before Shavuot 1942 while the remainder were killed by the SS and their local collaborators, anxious to cash in on Jewish property just before Rosh Hashanah that same year. Among the victims was Tessler's sister, Feiga, and her two sons. A second sister, Selma Jelinek, escaped though her two children were killed.

The 3,000 Jews of the nearby town of Ludwipol (home of the writer's mother) suffered a similar fate. Tessler said on the dedication trip, he met gentile witnesses to the slaughter. They recounted how that town's Jews were taken across the River Sluch to a forest where they were shot. A matzevah marks the place, he said.

He found another neglected cemetery in Rovno. The ground has eroded and "you could see children's bones and hantelech (small hands) and even a skull with a bullet hole," he said.

Tessler said he has written to the German government, asking them to take responsibility for providing a proper cemetery for those killed by German forces. He was told it could respond only to a request from someone who lives in Ukraine. He then got in touch with Kiev Jews, who contacted the German government.

The German authorities have said they are prepared to pay for a memorial plaque in Korec, said Edward Reiter, Tessler's lawyer. That could apply to other Jewish cemeteries but they will not act unless they receive a request from people in Ukraine, he added.

Tessler said his involvement in the Korec cemetery was something he felt he had to do. "Since 1989 when I returned from Korec, there's not a single night that I don't think I should do something," he said.

"If we don't do it, who will? I think it's the obligation of every person who was from a little town to cover up their relatives and friends so they are buried like a human being, not like an animal."

Kadis running in Vaughan

Pledging "a fresh approach," Kadis, 41, says many voters are concerned about inadequate maintenance of parks and "a general decline in services," especially in garbage collection and snow removal.

Kadis, who says her own elected status since 1988 stands her in good stead for a council seat, would also like to see increased police patrols and scaled-back high density development.

She was "very opposed" to splitting the ward, partly because it was done without public consultation.

Kadis charges there's a "leadership vacuum" on council and decisions are made "without rhyme or reason." She would take a more "sensitive and thoughtful approach" to planning, while retaining the ward's residential character.

Kadis has long been active in B'nai Brith's League for Human Rights and has chaired the York Region Board of Education's race relations committee.

Others are an "inadequate" ambulance service, an understaffed police force, the shipping of toxic materials via rail through residential areas and the need to bridge cultural "gaps" in York Region. He would like to see the region immediately hire or reinstate an additional 100 police officers.

He says Vaughan needs a regional representative from Thornhill. Both current regional councillors are from Woodbridge.

Rosenberg says he was "totally against" splitting Ward 3. The outcome "has effectively created a Jewish ward."

He's been an executive member of Canadian Jewish Congress and vice-chair of Vaughan's race relations committee.

Next door in Ward 4, estimated to be roughly one-third Jewish, incumbent Mario Racco is seeking re-election. He's being challenged by Nick D'Urzo. Ted Berger dropped out of the race recently for personal reasons.

Seeking election in Wards 4 and 5 as public school trustees are incumbents Joe Jonsson and Harvey Nightingale. Also running is Carey Miller.

CFRB's Andy Barrie finds common ground with JVS

By RON CSILLAG
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Jobs guaranteeing lifelong security and a steady paycheck are quickly fading away, perhaps never to be seen again, CFRB Radio personality Andy Barrie told last week's annual meeting of Jewish Vocational Services of Metropolitan Toronto (JVS).

Although confessing to no professional expertise in work trends or society, Barrie said he's noticed that when there's a recession, the ratings for his popular daytime phone-in program soar.

"That's because people literally have nothing better to do," he said, half-jokingly. "JVS and CFRB are both never busier than in a recession. I hear from chief executive officers of corporations who are struggling the same way as JVS clients."

Today's "displaced persons" — those pushed out of jobs because of the economy — are just as likely to be eighth generations Ontarians as recently-arrived immigrants, said Barrie, the meeting's guest speaker.

There's a whole new meaning to the word job now, he said. Today's workplace is more likely to be inhabited by part-time employees who work whenever their employer wants them, without pensions or benefits.

While most smokestack industries have been replaced by high-tech companies, many professionals today must compete on a global scale, often against competent foreigners who work at a fraction of the cost of North Americans, Barrie said.

He cited a recent study showing that out of 2,000 employers in Metro, 40 per cent had part-time workers and 80 per cent said they planned to hire more part-time help.

"Most of those jobs used to be full time," Barrie noted.

A part-time arrangement may ultimately allow Canadians to live better but in the interim, "there will be pain," he warned.

Work is what JVS is all about, said retiring president Beverly Lyons before passing the mantle to in-coming president Peter Shenfield. The agency provides a variety of assessment, counselling and placement support services to people seeking new directions and to those with psychiatric, emotional and physical disabilities.

Between April 1993 and March of this year, JVS served over 6,600 clients, compared to just over 5,000 in the same period a year earlier.

But the recession took its toll. The agency registered a $15,000 deficit in 1994, compared to a $5,000 surplus last year.

Providing first-hand success stories of JVS's impact were Sonia Del Castillo, a registered nurse who graduated from the agency's seven-week Women in New Roles (WINR) program for women wishing to prepare for future employment; and Maurice Zakkak, a bookkeeper who took the Start Smart Program, which encourages self-employment.

Awards were presented to JVS volunteers Jacqueline Saunches and Samantha Dennis, and to staff Ruth Borchiver, Rosalie Shadlyn and Bettie Raibmon.

Employer awards went to Laila Saleh of the University of Toronto's school of social work and Gertud Adler of the Shopper's Drug Mart branch at Bathurst Street and Sheppard Avenue.

New York Jewish community producing conversion pamphlets

By AMY SATTIN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Canadians are being invited to learn more about discussing conversion to Judaism through a series of free pamphlets produced in New York State.

The Suffolk Jewish Communal Planning Council, the umbrella organization for the 130,000-strong Jewish community in the eastern half of Long Island, N.Y., has printed four pamphlets to help those thinking about converting, or those wanting to discuss conversion with their spouse or child's spouse.

The group has received more than 500 requests for the pamphlets, said executive director Susan Lustig, and has mailed out 1,200 copies to public libraries and Jewish community centres across America.

"There seems to be a real hunger out there for this kind of information," she said.

The four pamphlets — Making the Right Choice, How to Discuss Conversion to Judaism, Should I Convert to Judaism?, and Conversion: A Guide for Jewish Parents — were largely prepared by Dr. Lawrence Epstein, a humanities professor at a Long Island community college and a Conservative Jew.

Epstein has also published a 277-page book, Conversion to Judaism: A Guidebook ($35.95 Canadian, plus shipping and handling).

The pamphlets advise potential converts — and their spouses and in-laws — to examine why conversion is important to them.

"Don't be afraid to discuss the subject," Epstein writes. "Most non-Jews are never even asked if they would consider learning about Judaism. Many would do so if they were simply asked to explore the subject."

The book and the pamphlets can be ordered through Lustig at (516) 462-5826.

An Aldabra tortoise digs a hole in its new habitat at Busch Gardens Tampa Bay. The African-themed park now has 20 Aldabra tortoises, which can grow to be over one metre in length, weigh more than 227 kilograms and live longer than 100 years.

Unusual, endangered creatures are found at Busch Gardens

TAMPA, FL — Some things are out of the ordinary at Busch Gardens, Tampa Bay. The park decided to introduce some animals that, by the looks of it, guests won't soon forget.

Busch Gardens has added two endangered Bornean orang-utans to its current display and opened new habitats for Aldabra and African spurred tortoises and African warthogs.

Skinny, the park's 27-year-old endangered Bornean orang-utan, was quick to applaud the arrival of 10-year-old Dixie and 8-year-old Dyak, both female Bornean orang-utans. Guests have long seen Skinny catch snacks from his keeper and then applaud himself and blow kisses to the audience. And in little time, Dixie and Dayak joined in on the fun.

As for the unusual, that's where the Aldabra and African spurred tortoises and warthogs come in.

The 20 Aldabra tortoises at Busch Gardens are from the family of lone-surviving Indian Ocean tortoises and are probably most noted for their tremendous size. These slow-moving reptiles can weigh nearly 277 kilograms and can grow to be over one metre in length. The huge tortoises are also known for their ability to survive, as some have been found to live more than 100 years. Busch Gardens also has been fortunate enough to successfully breed the tortoises in five other zoological habitats in the United States.

Cohabiting with the Aldabra tortoises are eight African spurred tortoises which grow to be quite large, although not as enormous as the Aldabras. The African spurred tortoises, the largest mainland species, is distinguishable by its light bamboo color and pagoda-like shell.

But maybe the most unusual-looking animals on display in Busch Gardens are the African wart-hogs. "They're so ugly, they're cute" is a phrase that can often be overheard by guests admiring the three residing at the park.

Most recognizable by facial "warts" that guard against injury during fights, warthogs are often seen bucking heads together. These odd-looking mammals enjoy making burrows in their habitat, a behavior used in the wild for protection from predatory animals.

The warthogs also can be seen scraping along on their knees as they feed, a behavior which allows a view of the horizon while they eat. Their eyesight is not too keen though, as warthogs are more likely to detect other animals by smelling them or hearing them before seeing them.

All the animals and their habitats serve a valuable educational purpose.

"The addition of these new animals allows us to enhance our classes on biodiversity and its importance to the planet," said Maureen Royal, curator of conservation information at Busch Gardens.

Pearl cruises into many exotic ports

By PHYLIS KRASILOVSKY
Special to The CJN

Sometimes the passengers on Pearl cruises seem like a big reunion, recognizing each other with glad cries from other tours. Sixty per cent repeaters!

I recently went on a cruise to Japan, Korea and Russia alone, because my husband was tied up with an important law case. Even with a recent hip replacement and a hearing loss which gave me vertigo and sometimes made it difficult to maintain balance, I was determined to go.

This itinerary is only offered once a year, I had long wanted to see a northern Japanese island and I was curious about Vladivostok, the end of the line for the Trans-Siberian railroad.

The Pearl met the test with flying colors, in accommodating a woman travelling alone. The staff and crew were courteous and helpful. The restaurant manager sat me at tables with other people so I wouldn't feel alone at open seating breakfasts and lunches.

The tour director arranged for the seat next to me on tour buses to be empty whenever possible. It wasn't his fault that the woman he seated next to me on the Nikko tour bus insisted on turning her air-conditioning in my direction!

When I got a cold as a result, my room steward brought meals and cold remedies to help speed my recovery.

I even got invited to the captain's table!

Dining as a single woman proved to be less depressing than I'd imagined. Happily married couples, and everyone on the Pearl — even those not happily married certainly seemed to be so while enjoying the ambience of the cruise — shared their pleasure with those around them.

Sitting alone for shows and programs was no problem either, since all the seats were usually filled and I didn't stand out. Usually people on either side of me exchanged pleasantries.

Despite my hip replacement, I found it easy to traverse the ship. And there were at least a dozen others overcoming similar operations. As for waiting in line, I usually made it a point to be one of the first off the ship for the tours, and was always either first or last if I choose to dine buffet-style. The friendly sympathy I received helped me mend far more easily than if I'd stayed at home following my usual routine.

The quality of the tour guides varied, but one on an Osaka city tour was not only thought-provoking, he'd also prepared a scrapbook to educate us about the Japanese lifestyle. He even sang a Japanese song, and demonstrated how to make origami birds. The Tokyo tour guide was erudite and sophisticated.

TRAVEL TALK

By BILL GLADSTONE

Bird-Watching in Eilat: Every fall and spring, millions of birds pass through Eilat, Israel's resort and seaport on the Red Sea, on their way to and from Europe, Africa and Asia. For many years this ornithological event has attracted flocks of bird watchers.

Early next spring, Eilat is planning a six-day celebration in honor of the birds and those who follow in their flight paths. The Spring Migration Festival is set for March 19 to 25. During this time, numerous discounts are available from hotels, tourist attractions and car rental companies.

Eilat features constant sunshine and temperatures that rarely drop below 21 degrees. Since the recent opening of a new border crossing, Eilat is also the gateway to Jordan. Tourism industry officials are planning to make Eilat the hub of a Red Sea Riviera stretching across Egypt, Israel and Jordan.

For more information on the Spring Migration Festival, contact the Israel Government Tourist Office at (416) 964-3784 or 1-800-669-2369. Fax (416) 964-2420. 180 Bloor St. W., Suite 700, Toronto M5S 2V6.

People of the Book: Representatives from more than 1,000 publishing houses are expected for the 17th Jerusalem International Book Fair, March 12 to 17, 1995. Open to publishing executives, authors, agents and ordinary readers, the fair features books from close to 50 countries.

During the fair, the Jerusalem Prize is awarded to a writer whose works best express the freedom of an individual in society. Previous winners include Simone de Beauvoir and Bertrand Russell. For more information, contact the Israel Government Tourist Office.

British Airways Holidays: Focusing on travel in London and Europe, British Airways Holidays' fall and winter brochure features a broad range of travel components at affordable prices. For example, London hotel rooms start at $40 a night (per person double occupancy), while car rental rates in Britain cost as little as $22 a day. These rates already include Britain's 17.5 per cent Value Added Tax (VAT).

Theatre lovers may enjoy the Mini Show Tour, which provides a three-night hotel stay in central London and a night at the theatre beginning at only $79. From only $199, the London Show Tour offers six nights of accommodation and vouchers for two west-end shows.

"London Plus . . .," one of British Airways Holidays' most popular programs, features three nights' hotel accommodation in London, three nights in either Paris, Rome or Amsterdam, continental breakfast, service charges and taxes, as well as round-trip flights between London and the selected European city. For independent travellers, British Airways Holidays offers competitive hotel rates in more than a dozen European cities for as little as $37 a night.

Travellers may also take advantage of the airline's Europe Airpass, which permits travel on up to 12 flights within Europe at low prices. For further information, pick up the latest British Airways Holidays brochure from travel agents, local British Airways sales offices, or by calling 1- 800-AIRWAYS.

Hamilton Bonds breakfast set to honor two brothers

By MOURA WOLPERT
CJN Correspondent

Abe Szpirglas

Larry Szpirglas

HAMILTON — A very special breakfast honoring a very special pair of brothers will take place on Oct. 30, when Hamilton State of Israel Bonds joins with B'nai Brith of Hamilton in a community tribute to Abe and Larry Szpirglas.

This is the first time that two brothers have been named honorees in the 14-year history of this annual event.

The breakfast will be held at Temple Anshe Sholom, and the guest speaker will be Howard Stone, well known writer and poet and a former executive director of the Zionist Organization of America and of the Tel Aviv Foundation. Stone has also served with the United Jewish Appeal of America, and at the request of the government of Israel, helped create Operation Independence, a coalition of international businessmen committed to advancing private sector growth in Israel.

The Szpirglas brothers are the sons of Sam and Anna, Polish-born survivors who initially settled in Montreal but moved to Hamilton in 1956. They also have a daughter, Carol Berk of Toronto.

Since they were actively involved in Jewish Community Centre (JCC) youth and teen programs, the brothers are part of that generation of young people, now in their 40s and early 50s, who were inspired and guided by the late, remarkable JCC youth director, Max Rotman, to take their place as responsible citizens and committed members of the Jewish community.

Both have been prominent figures in the Jewish community for many years.

Abe, a lawyer by profession, is immediate past president of the Jewish Federation of Hamilton-Wentworth & Area. He is also a past president of the JCC.

He has long been actively involved with the Hamilton Holocaust Remembrance Committee, is currently serving as co-chair of United Jewish Appeal (UJA) lawyers' division and is a member of several Jewish organizations.

Abe and his wife, Gina, have two children, Jeffrey and Joanna.

Younger brother Larry originally went into communal work but is now in the home building business.

He held the position of program director at the Bloor YMHA (now JCC) in Toronto, and later was appointed executive director of the Ottawa JCC. He subsequently spent five years with the Jewish Welfare Board in New York; as a staff member of the JCC Association of North America, he also served as a consultant for other North American Jewish community facilities.

Larry is a member of the Hamilton Federation board and the JCC board. He is a former co-chair of the Hamilton UJA campaign and is actively involved with the Israel Bonds campaign.

Larry and his wife, Fern, have two sons, Matt and Jonathan.

U of T's Jewish Studies program marks 25 years with exhibition

By FRANCES KRAFT
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — A current exhibit on the first floor of Robarts Library, at the University of Toronto, marks the 25th anniversary of U of T's Jewish Studies program.

The two-week-long display, entitled Jewish Studies: The First 25 Years, runs until October 16.

An eclectic collection of publications relating to Jewish studies and authored by current and former U of T faculty members is the mainstay of the exhibit. While only the book covers are visible in the display cases, all the publications are available at the library, and many can be purchased at the university bookstore.

Among the featured staff members are philosopher Emil Fackenheim (now at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem), historian Michael Marrus, sociologist Robert Brym, and Ben Schlesinger of the Faculty of Social Work.

Although a formal Jewish Studies program was not established until 1969, Hebrew language and "the biblical tradition" have comprised part of the U of T curriculum for 150 years, according to information in one of the six display cases. The courses were originally taught under the designation "Oriental Literature."

The department of Near Eastern Studies, which offers the largest number of courses (18 this year) in the Jewish Studies program, was formed in 1956. Other academic departments affiliated with the program include History, Sociology, Philosophy and Religious Studies.

Libby Garshowitz, director of the program since 1992, is a former student of the program. She received her doctorate in 1974 and has been on staff at the university for over 20 years.

When Garshowitz was a graduate student, the program was under the directorship of the late Frank Talmage, the first director of Jewish Studies (1969 to 1974). Subsequent directors were Joseph Shatzmiller (1974-82 and 1983-85), Jacques Kornberg (1985-88 and, as acting director 1982-83 and 1991-92), and Arthur Kruger (1988-91 as acting director).

In the past two decades, the program has grown in both quality and scope, Garshowitz told The CJN. The related library collection and the number of public lecture series have also grown, she said, and the program offers about 50 courses this year.

The program's public lecture series include the Joseph and Gertie Schwartz Memorial Lecture, which is also celebrating its 25th anniversary, said Garshowitz. This year's Schwartz lecture, to be held Oct. 30 at the Medical Sciences Auditorium, will feature a four-speaker panel on The Legacy of Polish Jewry.

The display, which was catalogued by Jewish Studies librarian Barry Walfish with the assistance of museologist Karen Doidge, can be seen at Robarts Library, 130 St. George Street. Library hours are: Monday to Friday, 8:30 a.m. to midnight; Saturday, 9 a.m. to 10 p.m.; and Sunday, 1 p.m. to 10 p.m.

AMNESTY. REDEMPTION AND A TAX RECEIPT!

Marshak — a woman ahead of her time

By BARBARA SILVESTEIN
Special to The CJN

At a time when most women were married and raising children Jean Marshak set off for Hollywood — alone.

She had worked as a fashion model in Toronto for nine years. But at the age of 29 she decided to try her luck in film.

"A woman alone doing something like that — it was unheard of back then," her son, Paul Marshak told The CJN.

Marshak a resident of Forest Hill Place, a luxury retirement home, smiled as she talked to The CJN about her Hollywood days. She's a fine-featured, elegantly dressed woman who she looks far younger than her 89 years.

In 1934, she booked a cruise to California. Some reporters interviewed her while she was aboard the ship and when she arrived in Hollywood she made headlines.

"They wrote, 'Canadian cover girl invades Hollywood,' " she said with a laugh. "The next morning I had all the reporters at the hotel." Shortly after her arrival she signed on with an agent and she was soon reading scripts, she said.

Marshak had walk-on roles in three pictures, which included A Night at the Opera with the Marx brothers. They made her laugh, she said. "You couldn't help it. . . It was a lot of fun. . . They weren't just funny, they were clever."

She became friends with Lucille Ball — an unknown actress at the time. The two women had bit parts in the same movie. "She was a wonderful person," Marshak said. "She had very beautiful features. They [the cameras] didn't do justice to her."

Marshak socialized with many people in the film industry — and dated a director. But her film career never took off. She left Hollywood after six months.

She went back to Toronto to get married. Marshak said she never planned to marry any of her Hollywood escorts. "No way. They weren't the marrying kind."

Shortly before her departure she met a producer who wanted her to take a screen test, she said. "He wanted to make me a second Gloria Swanson. He thought I looked like her." That very night Robert Marshak, a Brooklyn-born business man proposed over the phone and she went "right back to Toronto."

The couple lived in Boston from 1940 to 1952 where Robert sold insurance. They returned to Toronto where he established a lucrative business — he had the Canadian rights to Warner Weather Master Construction — an aluminum siding, awning and window company.

She had the financial means to indulge her passion for horse racing and fashion. She and her husband spent winters in Florida racing their horses — they had six to eight horses at any given time. She also enjoyed shopping and made the Toronto Telegram's Best-Dressed Women List 10 years in a row.

Fashion became an integral part of her life after her husband's death in 1974. At an age when most people retire — Marshak was 69 — she went back to work.

She became a fashion consultant for Holt Renfrew. "I always liked working," she said. "I liked helping women pick out their clothes." For the next 19 years Marshak worked at a number of stores which included Creeds, Birks and L'Elengante, a Yorkville boutique."

She retired a year ago after breaking her arm and she moved into Forest Hill Place this past summer. Marshak looks back upon her life with satisfaction. "I have no regrets," she said. "I've been lucky. I've had it all."

Kosher kitchen opens in B.C.

By MAURICE LUCOW
CJN Western Correspondent

VICTORIA — It was only a few nights after the High Holy Days but the rabbi of Victoria's Congregation Emanu-El was asking the important Passover question: "Why is this night different from all other nights?"

The answer, said Rabbi Victor Reinstein, was that it was a night to celebrate the opening of the kosher kitchen at the Empress Hotel — a landmark here for the past 86 years. It's the first kosher kitchen on Vancouver Island and the opening was a fundraiser for the synagogue's school building fund.

As MLA Gretchen Brewin put it, the occasion marked "the joining of two strong Victoria traditions and cultures — the hotel and the 130-year-old Congregation Emanu-El."

Rabbi Reinstein said "this is a wonderful, auspicious night. It's different because never before has it been possible to obtain a kosher meal at the Empress." He called for a special Shehechianu for the local Jewish community for "reaching this stage in our history."

The rabbi said the nature of kashrut "teaches us about our relationship with G-d. Kashrut becomes a model for every area of our lives."

Noting the presence of non-Jews at the dinner, the rabbi said the event represented not only the "pulling together and unity" of the Jewish people but served also as "a respectful meeting with others, where we come together to celebrate our differences together."

Milestone

April Katz, immediate past president of the synagogue, expressing appreciation to the hotel management, called it "a milestone celebration." She said keeping the "kashrut contract in Jewish life" is difficult in Victoria. "The Empress will now be a heimish place for Jewish residents and visitors."

Ian Barbour, general manager of the Empress, paid tribute to the Orthodox rabbinical Council of British Columbia for negotiating and arranging for the kashering of the kosher kitchen. Marc Saunier, food and beverage director, said the mashgiach, Rabbi Levy Teitelbaum, worked for several days side by side with the chefs who prepared the meal, and he presented the rabbi with a chef's outfit bearing his name and the newly-bestowed title of "executive rabbi." The chefs were introduced to the 200 guests and got a big round of applause for their marinated salmon, matzah ball soup and cornish hen.

There was a bowl of water at each table for the ritual washing of hands before the meal.

Rabbi Reinstein led the kaddush and the Sheva Brachos and Rabbi A. Feigelstock, director of the rabbinical council, said the Hamotzi.

Mayor Bob Coss brought greetings from the city. Stephanie Gilbert, the synagogue campaign chair who organized the dinner, expressed appreciation to the hotel management and all involved in preparing the event.

The banquet hall was decorated with the flags of Canada, Israel and British Columbia.

A musical program followed the dinner.

By SHELDON KIRSHNER
CJN Staff Reporter

The Jerusalem Post, Israel's sole English daily, has chronicled the flow of events in Palestine/Israel, the Middle East and the rest of the world for 62 years.

Originally known as the Palestine Post, it began as a rudimentary bulletin and evolved into a full-fledged newspaper, with staff writers and foreign correspondents.

When Palestine was a British colony, the self-declared purpose of the Post was to serve "the needs and tastes of British residents, other Europeans and Palestinians."

But after the establishment of Israel, the paper's readership changed, and with it, its name.

Today, the Jerusalem Post is read by new immigrants, Israeli officials and foreign diplomats stationed in Israel. Its international edition, which has a wider circulation, is read by Jews in the Diaspora.

More than a local newspaper, the Jerusalem Post is worldly. You may not agree with its editorial opinions, which have swung to the right in recent years, but you can usually depend on its news judgment, topicality and reliability — integral components of respectable journalism.

These qualities shine through in Front Page Israel (The Jerusalem Post, $29.95 US), a 288-page volume featuring reproductions of its front page from its inaugural issue on Dec. 1, 1932 up to Nov. 7, 1993.

As you flip through the pages, you're transported back on a journey which recalls the British Mandate, Arab-Jewish disturbances, the Holocaust and the creation of Israel.

The highlights of the 1950s are Arab terrorism, Israeli retaliatory raids into neighboring countries and the Sinai war.

The 1960s bring the Eichmann trial, the resignation of David Ben-Gurion as prime minister, the execution of Israeli spy Eli Cohen in Damascus, the Six Day War and its aftermath and the War of Attrition.

During the 1970s, the headlines record the Yom Kippur War, the efforts by the United States to impose a political solution on the region, the re-emergence of terrorism, the electoral victory of the Likud, Anwar al-Sadat's historic visit to Jerusalem and the Camp David Accords.

Continuing terrorism

In the 1980s, the Post reports on the Lebanon War and its aftershocks, the changes within the PLO, the continuing terrorism and the immigration of Soviet Jews to Israel.

As the 1990s are ushered in, top billing is assigned to the crisis in the Persian Gulf and Operation Solomon (the Ethiopian Jewish airlift). The Rabin-Arafat handshake and Shimon Peres' so-called secret talks with King Hussein in Jordan round off the book.

Judging by the front pages of the past six decades, the Jerusalem Post has markedly improved. The layout is far better and the writing is infinitely more lucid.

The original goal of the paper was to provide "a window to the world." Reversing this dictum, Front Page Israel provides a window through which to observe Israel.

It's an intriguing view.

BOOKS

By BERNARD BASKIN

Farewell Espana: The World of the Sephardim Remembered, by Howard M. Sachar (Random House of Canada, $42 US).

On August 2 and 3, 1492, the last professing Jews on Spanish soil clambered aboard ships for a voyage to an unknown and uncertain future. At a nearby harbor three small caravels were waiting to hoist sail. Their commander, Christopher Columbus — perhaps himself of Jewish ancestry — wrote in his log that the departing vessels were "a fleet of misery and woe."

Eight hundred years of Jewish life in Spain came to an end that day, a span that included a golden age of unparalleled creativity, the work of statesmen, theologians, poets, physicians and philosophers.

It was not an unexpected end. In the 13th century, harsh antagonism had swelled against Jewish dominance in many areas of Spanish life. In 1391 riots broke out across the Iberian Peninsula. Howling mobs destroyed entire Jewish communities.

In the upheaval and in the Inquisition that followed, a third of Spain's Jews were slain, a third underwent forced conversion and a third were forced to flee. Grenada, the last Muslim stronghold, fell in January 1492 and Ferdinand of Aragon and Isabella of Castile united Spain as a Christian country.

Where did these desperate refugees go? They sought new lives in places that would accept them: the Balkans, Holland, Turkey, the Levant, the Americas and eventually modern Israel.

In 1654, 23 Jews from Brazil fleeing from the long arm of the Inquisition landed in New Amsterdam, the Dutch West Indies outpost in North America. Governor Peter Stuyvesant refused them entry as "members of a deceitful race who should not be allowed further to infect and trouble the new colony." Fortunately, the West India Company ruled otherwise and Jews were allowed to settle and trade in the New Netherlands.

Another memorable events in Sephardi history is the "madness" that seized the Jewish world in the 17th century with the coming of the false messiah Shabbati Zevi. "In 1665, Amsterdam Jewry adopted a new calendar, beginning with the Year of the Deliverance of Israel," Sachar writes. "Jews now began selling their homes and lands as they prepared for departure to the Holy Land. Some pietists anticipated literally being carried off on clouds, and they awaited the decisive moment on their rooftops."

Distinguished scholar

Sachar, a distinguished scholar and author of many books on modern Jewish history, has written an impressive overview of the world of the Sephardim rich in detail and incident.

He brings alive the dramatic personae of the Sephardim over their long history. These personalities include the royal counsellors Samuel ibn Negrela and Joseph Nasi, the poets ibn Gabriol and Yehuda Halevi, the philosophers Maimonides and Baruch Spinoza, the statesmen Benjamin Disraeli and Pierre Mendes France.

It is important to note that 600 years ago more than half the world's Jews were Sephardim and provided Jewry with the larger part of its leadership — secular, intellectual and religious. Today, the proportion of Sephardim in the Jewish world is about one in six. In Israel they form more than half the Jewish population (or did, before the recent Russian immigration).

This notable work is a splendid addition to the growing literature on the past and future of the Sephardim.

Show Boat Docks On Broadway: There was not a trace of unpleasantness or a single accusation of "Racism!" when the Livent production of Show Boat opened earlier this month to generally stunning reviews at the Gershwin Theatre in Manhattan. "This play is a revered piece of Americana, and no one in the States would dare say anything bad about it — they're too smart for that," Dennis Kucherawy, Livent's Toronto-based director of publicity, recently told Eye on Arts. Indeed, many U.S. critics wrote glowingly of the show when it first opened in North York, and characterized its few loud critics as highly misguided. Reporting nearly record-breaking ticket sales, Livent is optimistically predicting a run of several years for Show Boat in New York.

An Original Bookmaker: American artist Miriam Schaer, an illustrator and graphic designer, has been making books by hand since 1978, using watercolors, acrylic, gouache and other materials. The themes often deal with critical moments in women's lives. A collection of 20 of her books and covers made since 1989 is the substance of an exhibition that opens Oct. 27 at the Robert McLaughlin Gallery in Oshawa (905-576-3000). Meet the artist at a reception, Sunday Oct. 30, 2 p.m. to 4 p.m.

Post-painterly abstraction

Also opening at the gallery on Oct. 27 is the show The Optical Challenge: Post-Painterly Abstraction. Coined by the American art critic Clement Greenberg, the movement of "post-painterly abstraction" was a revolt against the abstract expressionism of the late 1950s, which a new generation of artists (represented in the show) felt was cliched: its drips and splashes seemed to be manufactured rather than an extension of any real drama or chaos.

Post-painterly abstraction favours an impersonal, detached mode of expression. Artists emphasize the power of pure colour through even, non-textured application of paint, flat non-illusionistic space and the relationship of adjacent colors. Categorized as "hard-edge," most works in this exhibition feature hard, razor-sharp contours as opposed to blurred or stained edges.

Butterfly Tours Six Western Cities: Aviva Ravel's play Dance Like A Butterfly is scheduled to tour six Western cities thanks to assistance from the Canada Council. The itinerary includes Calgary (Oct. 20 to 23), Vancouver (Oct. 24 to 26), Edmonton (Oct. 27 to 29), Saskatoon (Oct. 30 to Nov. 1), Regina (Nov. 2 to 4) and Winnipeg (Nov. 5 to 7).

Actor Miriam Samuels and director Rena Cohen expect to present the play at Jewish community centres, at hospitals for medical staff, and at universities for theatre and medical students. For details, write Cameo Productions, 5317 Lucy Place, Montreal H3X 1L1. Phone (514) 733-3211.

Media Watch: Woody Allen is featured on the cover of the latest Esquire magazine. The accompanying article, by Bill Zehme, is a lively profile filled with gossip and Allen's trademark schtick. Hearing that Fox is planning a miniseries about the life of Mia Farrow, he quips, "It's funny that someone will be playing me. I must call Tom Cruise and tell him that there's a job opening." The article discusses almost every facet of Allen's life except the one — filmmaking — that made him a celebrity in the first place.

An anthology of essays

By BILL GLADSTONE
Special to The CJN

TORONTO — The Holy Blossom Temple has just published On Being A Jew: A Reform Perspective, a new book of writings by Rabbi Dow Marmur to mark his 10th anniversary as spiritual leader of the largest Reform congregation in Canada.

"This book was the alternative to a dinner," said Rabbi Marmur at a synagogue book launch that drew about 150 people on a recent Sunday morning. "I don't know if the book is as nourishing as a dinner might have been, but I'm pretty sure it's less fattening."

The author's fourth book, On Being A Jew is an anthology of 25 essays, many of which have appeared in journals such as Manna and Viewpoints. Subjects include Should the Canadian Jewish Community Be Involved in Social Issues?, Is There A Future for Canadian Jewry? and How I Became a Rabbi.

"The book contains many of the things I've said and thought in the congregation in a variety of ways," Rabbi Marmur said. "The purpose is to offer some kind of summar of the kinds of concerns that have been mine in my first decade here."

At the book launch, Rabbi Marmur thanked Rabbi Emeritus Gunther Plaut for "many things, including putting me in the context of Reform Judaism.

"I see it, in my way, as being at the crossroads. Reform Judaism can either become the normative Judaism of tomorrow or it can become a sect. And I'd like to be among those who are going all out to make sure that it becomes the normative Judaism of tomorrow."

Rabbi Marmur said the Holy Blossom Temple is a "cathedral synagogue," prominent in the Reform movement with great influence over other congregations. "People look to it," he said. "If it can reflect what is true in Reform Judaism, without looking to the right or to the left, then there is hope for other congregations. That is, in fact, what is happening."

On Being A Jew is available for $14.95 from the Holy Blossom Temple.

Viewing 'history that hurts'

By SHELDON KIRSHNER
CJN Staff Reporter

It's "history that hurts."

People who visit the United States Holocaust Memorial Museum in Washington should steel themselves.

The museum, which opened last April on the 50th anniversary of the Warsaw Ghetto uprising, inspires strong feelings.

Connecting visitors with the victims, it is neither a dusty nor a lifeless depository. And most important of all, the museum is a warning to the present generation.

For the Living is a documentary which explains the origins, goals and construction of the museum. The film is now available on cassette from Atlas Video in Bethesda, Maryland.

The most striking exhibit is rail car number 31599G, which transported Jews to Treblinka. As For the Living opens, the drab cattle car is lowered by crane into the unfinished building, located near the White House.

Among the museum's other artifacts are bricks from the Warsaw Ghetto, bent spoons, a key to a house and mounds of shoes. We're told the museum has the world's largest collection of Holocaust artifacts.

The building itself is full of Holocaust imagery — red bricks from concentration camp barracks and arches to recapture the mood of vanished Jewish neighborhoods in Eastern Europe. An atrium symbolizes the sky, the only thing that was left after the Jews had been stripped of everything, while a boat is emblematic of the flight of Danish Jewry to Sweden.

Business Briefs

U.S.-Israel Treaty

JERUSALEM — The U.S. Senate recently ratified the U.S.-Israel treaty for the prevention of double taxation, following the receipt of formal written assurances from Israel on sharing bank account information, the Treasury reported.

The treaty, which becomes effective on Jan. 1, 1995 will enable individuals and corporations from both Israel and the United States to engage in business in the other country without being subject to double taxation on profits.

According to Treasury officials, the tax treaty will play a significant role in efforts to attract American investment, as U.S. firms prefer equal tax treatment for their foreign investments. The tax treaty will also enable Americans to invest in the Tel Aviv Stock Exchange (TASE) without paying the new 10 per cent tax on stock market profits.

The treaty was up for Senate ratification last November, when at the last minute it was pulled from consideration at the request of the U.S. tax authorities who were concerned that Americans with bank accounts here would escape U.S. scrutiny.

The U.S. officials suspected that since foreign residents with local accounts are not required to file an Israeli tax return, the Israeli tax authorities would be able to claim they have no information and thereby shield the local deposits of Americans from U.S. tax enforcement authorities.

Last month, Israel sent the United States an official response to a series of questions regarding the treaty's implementation and persuaded the American officials to give the Senate the green light to ratify the treaty.

According to income tax commissioner Doron Levy, the countries will share information based on the local tax authorities' practices for requesting such information from banks. In Israel, for example, the tax authorities only audit a limited number of bank accounts and the Americans would be allowed to have the same access.

Levy reiterated that the information would not be provided unless the U.S. authorities were able to justify their request for it. He made it clear that both sides had no plans to exchange computer lists of Americans living here and Israelis living in the United Staes.

The treaty has been in the works for 25 years, and one of the major obstacles has been the fear of scaring away billions of dollars deposited here by Americans.

Levy discounted such fears, saying that the treaty was signed nearly two years ago and during that time there has not been any sign of a major capital flight.

Treasury director-general Aharon Fogel said the treaty creates the conditions for freedom of action for U.S. investments in industry, tourism and other areas, as well as in the capital market.

A Rise In Interest Rates

JERUSALEM — The Bank of Israel surprised everyone with its decision to raise interest rates by 1.5 per cent, upping the ante in its battle against inflation.

The Tel Aviv Stock Exchange (TASE) fell sharply on the news, with the broad Two-Sided Index falling by 2.8 per cent, and the narrower Maof slipping by 2.7 per cent.

The Histadrut, Manufacturers Association, and Industry and Trade Minister Micha Harish all attacked the move, but Danny Gillerman, president of the Israeli Chambers of Commerce, said the Bank of Israel is the only institution trying to deal with the problem of accelerated inflation.

The move follows a similar hike last month, which was preceded by seven 0.5 per cent increases since November. The previous hikes failed to dampen inflation.

Mid-East Development Bank Proposed

JERUSALEM — Israel will propose the establishment of a Middle East development bank at the Casablanca economic conference next month, Foreign Minister Shimon Peres said.

The bank, based on the model of the European Bank of Reconstruction and Development which was created to rebuild the post-communist economies of Eastern Europe and the former Soviet Union, would be a major source of financing for joint projects in the region.

According to Peres, cooperative projects in the area provide the best antidote against Islamic fundamentalism.

"The best weapon against Hamas is economic," he said. "The more the standard of living rises in the region, the more violence will drop."

Peres, who met with economic correspondents in his office, talked about his vision of a Middle East transformed and rebuilt on economic cooperation.

Investing in and developing the region's economy is at least as worthwhile as spending money on defence, and improving the area's economy is the best means of dealing with the potential dangers to stability, he said.

The Casablanca conference, opening on Oct. 31, will be attended by hundreds of senior government officials worldwide. In addition, about 50 Israeli companies will take part.

One of the expected outcomes of the conference will be the establishment of several investment centres that will match investors to projects, Peres said.

Another McDonnell Douglas-Israel Deal

JERUSALEM —Israel Shipyards has a deal with McDonnell Douglas to build six civilian submarines for use in Finland if the company is privatized, Israel Shipyards managing director Ze'ev Almog said.

Almog said the contract, worth tens of millions of dollars, was only one of the projects which could be undertaken if the company could raise credit through commercial channels.

Details about the deal were revealed during a meeting between Finance Minister Avraham Shohat and Transport Minister Yisrael Kessar on the privatization of the company.

Site Eliminated As Free Export Zone

JERUSALEM — The Free Export Zones Council eliminated the Ramat Beka area as a prospective location for the Free Export Processing Zone (FEPZ), since it is not appropriate for clean industries, the Treasury announced.

Finance Minister Avraham Shohat asked at the council's meeting that the FEPZ be located as close as possible to Beersheva. Under the FEPZ law, the zone may be located in a development area either in the Negev or the Galilee.

The council is considering three possible sites near Beersheva — Lehavim, Likit and Tel Shoket. Under the law, the zone will be run as a concession, following a competitive bid. Businesses locating in the zone will be entitled to a complete tax exemption for 20 years.

In addition, all bureaucratic processes will be streamlined into a one-step, one-stop administrative centre.

Elron Forms Partnership

JERUSALEM — Elron has announced a strategic partnership with New York-based Advanced Network Systems (ANS) for development of ElroNet wide band international service network.

Abe Peled, vice-president for business development, said the agreement allows Elron to market ANS services to Israeli firms with offices in the United States.

ANS will market similar services to American firms wishing to do business in Israel. There are currently some 200 companies in this group, of which 60 are traded in New York.

A real estate guru

TORONTO — They came for wisdom from the guru of real estate, which Sam Zell obligingly dispensed to some 350 participants at a special event sponsored by UJA's Construction Cabinet and Investment Division.

Sam Zell

Chicago-based Zell, short, stocky, bearded, is a $6-billion big deal in the real estate world. His holdings make up one of North America's largest privately-held real estate portfolios.

Zell's business nickname is The Grave Dancer because of his flair for reviving companies on the brink of death. His latest acquisition was 90 per cent of Midway Airlines.

According to Toronto investment manager Ira Gluskin, who introduced Zell and deals with many of his companies, the legendary investor is chief executive officer of over 80 firms.

"He has been around the real estate business forever," Gluskin said. "He is very wealthy and very successful."

Zell is also an adventurer. He has a yellow motorcycle, a yellow Mustang, a soft spot for UJA and an aversion to ties, although he wore one for this occasion.

As for his views on real estate, Zell is optimistic about the industry's future after what he called a period of "voodoo economics."

"We saw the greatest orgy of overdevelopment and capital consumption that the real estate industry has ever seen in its history," he observed. He accused developers of feeding their own egos "by building real estate for which there was no demand." As a result, he pointed out, the total value of U.S. real estate dropped by $300 billion to $500 billion in 1986 alone.

Now that developers have taken stock of reality and "come out of the covers," Zell predicted an excellent financial future for real estate over the next few years.

Zell was preceded by Leo Levi, who fled from Sarajevo with his family and arrived in Toronto with help from the Jewish Immigrant Aid Service, a UJA supported agency. Levi called the reception from JIAS "amazing."

Seminar targets tax-free export zone

By RUTH SCHWEITZER
Special to The CJN

TORONTO — The recent birth of a 700-acre tax-free export zone in Israel was the agenda at a local seminar on doing business in Israel. ness in Israel.

The zone, located in the northern Negev, was approved last month by the Knesset after a two-year lobbying campaign by the Israel Export Development Co. Ltd. to allow foreign business to operate free of Israeli taxation and bureaucracy.

"It got pushed through the Knesset because there were some very powerful American and Israeli business people who committed to invest very significant sums of money into this project," Toronto lawyer Schuyler Sigel told the seminar, sponsored by the Canada-Israel Chamber of Commerce.

The Israel Export Development Co. is an American group made up of Jewish business executives, real estate developers and philanthropists. Shareholders include CBS chair Laurence Tisch and real estate magnate Larry Silverstein.

Sigel, of the firm Baker MacKenzie, was joined for a panel discussion by chartered accountant Leon Bleiwas, tax lawyer Brian Segal, Israeli corporate lawyer Yehuda Raveh, small business consultant Bryan Ceresine and Israeli trade commissioner Benjamin Noy.

"There are no quotas [in the zone], no licences, no government regulation of any kind," said Bleiwas, a tax partner with the accountancy firm Deloitte & Touche. "There are no foreign currency controls — transactions can be carried out in shekels, in Canadian dollars, in American dollars."

Until the year 2013, the zone is exempt from corporate income taxes, capital gains taxes, custom duties and the 17 per cent value-added tax, the Israeli equivalent of the GST and the PST.

However, any profits sent out of the country are subject to a 15 per cent withholding tax. Segal said profits repatriated to Canada may be subject to full Canadian tax.

Building in the zone is expected to begin in March 1995. Companies setting up outside the Negev are being courted by the Israel government with reduced taxes, grants, government guarantees and tax holidays if they qualify as "approved" enterprises.

Raveh, an Israeli lawyer who mainly represents foreigners doing business there, said most industrial companies in Israel are given approved enterprise status.

If a Canadian company put up a commercial building near the Jerusalem airport, the company is entitled to a grant for 38 per cent of their investment. Building in certain "development zones" — the airport neighborhood is a development A zone — brings higher grants than in others. "It's not loans as it used to be years ago, it's grants," he stressed.

The Canadian company would pay a reduced corporate income tax rate of 10 to 25 per cent, compared with rates well above 30 per cent. A reduction to 10 per cent is available for companies, Raveh says, "which are owned 90 per cent or more by foreign companies."

Since Israel has free trade agreements with the European Common Market and other European countries, he suggested Canadians importing products to Europe use Israel as a trade bridge to avoid custom duties. If a Canadian manufacturer found an Israeli counterpart to finish its products, the Israeli counterpart could sell the finished product in the European market.

"The fastest companies to move on this use of the free trade agreement are Far Eastern companies," he said, noting that Asians and are taking advantage of Israeli technology.

Consultant Ceresne, who specializes in Israel, recommended the book Technological Incubators in Israel for companies looking for products. "It's really worth going through," he said. "You may be in fact be doing something very similar, in which case you have the opportunity for cooperation and joint ventures."

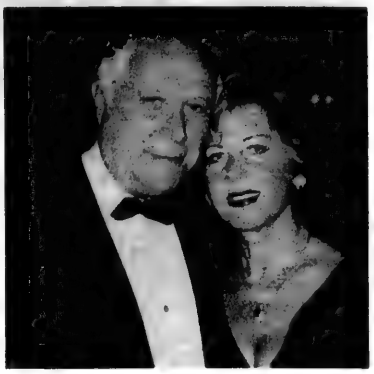
He stressed that a shortage of money is not necessarily an obstacle when setting up a business in Israel. "There is money over there that I think will be at your disposal."

Israeli chartered and merchant banks are aggressively pursuing investment opportunities, he said. Merchant banks will offer most of the equity required to get a company off the ground in exchange for a percentage of the ownership.

Pension funds, insurance companies and mutual funds are also looking for investment opportunities, Ceresne said, and some "are very venture-capital oriented."

The Tel Aviv Stock Exchange (TASE) has set up an exchange for fledgling enterprises in Jerusalem similar to New York Stock Exchange's NASDAQ, which allows companies to go public on a small scale.

In 1993 about 200 companies went public on the TASE, and Ceresne estimated that more than 1,200 stocks currently trade on the exchange. "They say that probably in excess of 25 per cent of the capital raised on the TASE really came from the real estate industry, so you can see that there is a lot of capital, not just venture capital but equity capital, chasing the development opportunities in the country."



Saul and Toby Feldberg

Teknion Industries owners to be feted

TORONTO — When Saul Feldberg, an upholstery plant apprentice, was 17 and filled with a teenager's all-consuming confidence, it was time, he thought, for a raise.

After carefully cataloguing the reasons why he deserved a five cent an hour increase, his boss denied his request.

"To be honest, I don't really need you," the boss blurted out.

After a week of feeling glum, Feldberg straightened himself out. "In a sense the man did me a favor. My heart wasn't at work. I started to think 'My G-d. I'm going to be an important person here.' "

Within four years, Feldberg was appointed production manager. Nine years later, he began Global Upholstery, Canada's largest office furniture manufacturer. Another of Feldberg's firms, Haifa-based Teknion Industries, is a significant exporter of furniture to Europe and employs nearly 200 new immigrants.

As direct participants in Israel's economic growth, the Feldbergs — Saul and his wife Toby — are being honored by State of Israel Bonds and Beth Emeth Bais Yehuda Synagogue Oct. 18.

Saul Feldberg fled a Polish ghetto with his parents and a brother during the war. They managed to survive the Holocaust by staying one step ahead of their persecutors.

When the war ened, the Feldbergs found themselves in a German DP camp. In 1949 they settled in Israel in Ashkelon, near the Gaza strip. Saul was assigned to a nearby kibbutz and grew tomatoes.

Life for the Feldberg family was tough. "Israel's army was small and weak," Feldberg recalled. "Arab infiltrators used to come every night to steal and kill. My father, having survived the Holocaust, couldn't take it anymore."

The next stop was Canada, but Saul was torn. He did not want to leave Israel or his parents. "In those days, there was a hunger in Israel," Feldberg said. "The spirit of dedication and nationalism was great."

In the end, Feldberg accompanied his family to Toronto in 1953 where landing a job was difficult, even for a strong teenager. There was temporary work packaging and pressing hats, followed by the upholstery apprentice position which he picked up with the help of Jewish Vocational Services.

When Feldberg founded Global in 1966, he had already been married to Toby for nine years. They worked, as Saul put it, "shoulder to shoulder," with only a handful of employees. The number of workers multiplied as sales catapulted Global to the top of Canada's office furniture manufacturers. Today, Global exports to the world, including the Persian Gulf.

The company's premier position in Canada allowed Feldberg to fulfil a dream — contributing directly to Israel's economic growth by setting up Teknion Industries.

"Teknion's products are world-class, comparable to the best systems in the world. They're well accepted in Europe," Feldberg said. "Teknion employs about 250 people, and 75 per cent of them are new immigrants from Russia. This gives me much more satisfaction than dollars and cents."

But Teknion is also doing well in the dollars and cents department. It's a profitable operation with high profile customers such as Jerusalem's new City Hall.

Toby and Saul Feldberg's volunteer concerns are as extensive as their business interests. In addition to Israel Bonds, they support the Jerusalem College of Technology, Ben Gurion University, the Yad Vashem Society, Beit Halochem, She'arim Hebrew Day School, the Reena Foundation and the Be'ersheva Foundation.

Advertiser's Corner

Advertiser's Corner highlights the news, views and backgrounds of companies whose advertisements appear regularly in The CJN.

This week The CJN features ...Annuity Accords Insurance Agency Inc.

TORONTO — Gordon Ross may have held practically every position possible in his 38-year career at London Life Insurance Co., including regional manager of the General Sales Division for 25 years, but none ever gave him the kind of satisfaction he now gets by being a broker for his own company, Annuity Accords Insurance Agency Inc.

"When I left London Life in 1987, I wanted to start my own annuity business so that I would no longer be married to single company representation," says Ross. "I felt that I could no longer do the best job with people's RRSPs. And I wanted the opportunity to broker for them and to help them make the best and most informed decisions on where to place their dollars."

That year Annuity Accords was born — with the goal to help clients realize their dreams through professional retirement counselling and customized planning.

"The major part of my business is helping the over-65 market make well-informed decisions on their RRSPs. I've found that the majority of people don't really think about where they place their dollars and how they can maximize their return," he explains.

Ross says his success has far exceeded his initial expectations. When asked to what he attributes this, he says it's because "I've never looked at anyone with dollar signs in my eyes. My advice is honest and objective, and it comes from years of experience in this business."

His clients — referred through lawyers, accountants, trust companies, actuaries and satisfied clients — remain loyal for another very good reason: he knows how to maximize their income.

One of Ross's most saleable products is an income maximizer known as a prescribed annuity. Purchased with non-registered funds, it pays an income of which a portion is considered capital and a portion is considered interest. Only the interest portion is taxable, compared to a GIC or a similar vehicle where 100 per cent is taxable.

In addition, with a prescribed annuity, the interest portion remains level for life (there is the option of no guarantee minimum period), so the purchaser knows exactly how much of the annual annuity payment will be subject to tax in each year. There is also a life insurance component which allows the beneficiary to receive the tax-free life insurance benefit and therefore preserve the original capital.

While the product may not be for everyone, Ross says it has helped a lot of people over the years. His advice to most is that just as you would go for a medical and dental checkup each year, so too should you seek a financial checkup on an annual basis.

"Just like our health, our financial picture changes with time due to changing lifestyle needs, changes in legislation and with inflation. Talk to friends and colleagues to find an advisor you trust and seek their opinion each year."

We Are Seeking A New Rabbi --Our esteemed leader, teacher and counselor for the past 26 years must retire due to poor health. Though presently not a member of the United Synagogue movement, our north shore--Chicago conservative congregation of 500+ families has a long history of rabbinic freedom--excellent religious school, adult education and regular service.
The Rabbi we seek must have a minimum of about 10 years congregational experience, have a strong commitment to the social welfare of the Jewish community as well as the secular community.
Warm, compassionate, intellectual, with administrative skills would be the general description of the individual we are seeking.

RECIPE OF THE WEEK

Grilled Pepper & Bean Salad

This delicious and easy recipe comes from my Mother's Kitchen!

Cut 1 broiled red pepper into long strips. Cook 1 1/2 lbs. of whole green beans until barely tender. While beans are still warm pour dressing over and toss gently. Marinate for 8 hours.

Dressing: 2 cloves of crushed garlic; 2 tbsp. red wine vinegar; 1 1/2 cups vegetable oil; salt and pepper to taste.

Sliced almonds can be added before serving.

The trials of finding The Dress

By DEBRA ROSENTHAL
Special to The CJN

I read somewhere that a prospective bride will very likely buy the first wedding dress she tries on because she is so overwhelmed by how she looks that she cannot get the image out of her mind.

I doubted this could happen to me because I do not get excited by shopping or trying on clothes. In fact, I had bought so few clothes in recent years that my fiancé said my wardrobe looked as if it needed major infrastructure repair — like a bridge that had not been maintained.

Also, I thought I had a good idea of what I would like as a bride since I once tried on my mother's wedding dress, even though it was wrinkled and flattened from years of storage.

For six months I found excuses for not shopping for The Dress — I didn't know where to look, I had no time, PhD exams were around the corner, I had to prepare to teach my undergraduate classes. Finally, my mother's warning — that any more delays would mean signing my ketubah in jeans — shifted me into shopping gear.

I felt pressured from reading and hearing that a wedding dress is the most important — and expensive — ritual object that a bride selects for herself. For the traditional Jewish woman, it is in this dress that she formally leaves her family to form a new one with her husband. The dress is the transition object: she wears it once only, to adorn her and carry her from one phase to another.

This aspect of the dress was demystified for me, though, since I had been living with my fiance for over a year. Between my lack of sartorial enthusiasm and the anxiety over ritual importance, finding the perfect wedding dress seemed a daunting and impossible quest.

Full of trepidation, I went with a girlfriend to a bridal store to look for The Dress. We were given a private consultant and dressing room.

I skimmed through bridal magazines and gathered a few ideas of what I was looking for: a white, rather than ivory dress; collarbone neckline; long lacy sleeves for a more formal look under the chupah; a big full skirt; and a train that went on forever.

The bridal consultant brought several oversized clear plastic garment bags into the dressing room. None of the dresses in them looked captivating enough to be The Dress.

The first dress she pulled out was an ivory gown. Over my protests that I wanted white, not ivory, she tried to convince me that this dress fit my description, but that the store only had an ivory model in stock. They could order it in white if I liked it. I was disappointed and dismayed that she was coercing me into trying on a dress I clearly did not want. However, I relented.

The consultant maneuvered me into the cavernous, flowing dress, arranged it on me, and I looked in the mirror.

I was shocked.

I was not me — I was a shimmering, otherworldly woman. I was beautiful, I was regal, I radiated. I was a bride.

My girlfriend looked at me and laughed, half out of joy, half out of seeing my stunned face. I wondered if I should buy this dress, the first dress, or look at more.

Just to be sure, the bridal consultant whooshed in dress after dress, and I spent the next couple of hours trying them on.

When I was a little girl, I fantasized about playing the ultimate dress-up game of wearing an outrageous long full dress. I imagined that it would billow out dramatically as I danced the horah or the cha-cha. Knowing I was going to buy such a dress, I needed to learn the proper way to dance in it.

Neither my fiance nor I knew how to ballroom dance or twirl dramatically, so we took private lessons. We chose a waltz ballad for the band to play as our first dance. But after a series of waltz lessons, I was unsatisfied. We hadn't learned any steps that would make a dress poof out. I wanted some drama.

We went back for one more lesson — to learn the Viennese waltz turn. I had not bargained on it being such a difficult move that needs a lot of practice. Because our apartment was too small, we had to dance out on the driveway. We practised only at night because we were embarrassed the neighbors would see us.

One evening, a storm approached. We danced when the street was quiet, the sky was rich with stars, and the streetlights were out. It was too dark to see each other. We moved by touch alone. Sheet lighting flashed intermittently, illuminating my fiance's face for a brief second as we twirled in darkness.

Back in the bridal store, as I continued to try on dresses, I watched other giddy brides trying on gowns. They preened in front of the mirror, swirling the white trains about them, admiring every detail of their dress. They, too, glowed in disbelief at how different the gowns made them feel.

In the dressing rooms, the mothers were sterner judges than the mirrors. They quickly and decidedly rejected gowns that did not flatter their daughters, or veils that were not right for a bedecken. They never seemed uncertain — it was either The Dress, or not even a close contender.

I imagined that the mothers were investing a lot of emotion in their daughters' decisions and reliving their own weddings vicariously, leaving me to wonder what a mother's experience of her daughter's wedding is. My marriage is as much a rite of passage for my mother as it is for me. In fact, she said that my wedding was a bigger event in her life than her own wedding was.

My girlfriend and I narrowed the field of dresses down to three. After several hours of trying on gowns, I was numb and weary, ready for anyone, even someone else's mother, to make a decision for me.

But one of the dresses had a special feeling to it. It tugged at me and nudged me to choose it. I tried it on one more time, and felt that surge of excitement again. I bought it.

It was the first dress I had tried on.

Confronting the question of KICKBACKS

By STEPHANIE CHAPMAN
Supplement Editor

Ladies and gentlemen step right up and join in the fun. The name of this party game is KICKBACKS and the reported going rate is 10 per cent!

Is Toronto's party industry losing its innocence in its quest to grow up?

I am asking this not to question the types of services available or the level of professionalism and care with which they are delivered; rather, I am challenging the professional integrity of the few who are quickly gaining a negative reputation for themselves.

Several months ago I was approached by people in the industry and told that the unethical game kickbacks had entered the arena.

Sour grapes? perhaps. Are some using allegation of Kickbacks as a scapegoat to explain why their business continues to flounder in these post recessionary times?

My attempts to write an investigative report addressing these questions was stymied because many party professionals who could comment on the situation were afraid to speak on the record – perhaps for fear of being blackballed.

However, the number of complaints and the depth of concern expressed in them has convinced me that the issue must be aired.

According to my sources, the few – and let me stress, only a few – bridal consultants who participate in the Kickback system start the process by recommending only those party services run by people who agree to give them at least 10 per cent of the profit made from that booking.

Party professionals who don't play, don't work.

This practice is affecting the careers of those who refuse to bow to dishonorable influences. One source reports a loss of 15 to 20 per cent in business.

However, money is not the only issue.

The real victims are the consumers. What it comes down to is that some hired bridal consultants, who paid no small fee — are not recommending a service on merit or talent alone.

To those involved in kickbacks, be warned that this kind of customer betrayal is being noticed. Word of mouth is a powerful tool that tends to spread negative news faster than positive.

During my research, a related complaint that came to light was that regarding some inexperienced newcomers who are tarnishing the reputation of the consulting industry with their half-hearted efforts to do the job for which they were hired.

The influx of new faces in the consulting business is not surprising considering the number of people who are out of work. Perhaps it is too easy to stick the title consultant after your name and go into business for yourself. This phenomenon is affecting all fields – engineering, human resources, computers, and yes, the bridal and party industry.

In most professional industries, consultants must have proof of their expertise (i.e. a degree or a professional designation). For the bridal consulting industry, there are no qualifying standards, no formal code of ethics and no self-monitoring association.

Again, the real victims are the consumers. People who have never required a bridal or party consultant before don't know what to expect from the service. More often than not the client ends up doing much of an inexperienced or inefficient consultant's work and paying to do so.

Consumers beware is the message of this piece.

Remember to investigate the professionals you hire. A couple of hints – the length of time a person has been in the business does not eliminate them from the kickback game. Newcomers and old timers alike may be involved.

If this game is one you are trying to avoid, a sure sign that kickbacks are taking place is to listen to the consultant. If he or she continues to push only one service – the same band, caterer, florist – and does not offer alternatives,even when asked, it may be an indication that pockets are being padded at your expense.

As well, talk to at least three of the consultant's past clients to ascertain not only their degree of satisfaction but also to determine what firms were recommended to them. The more research you do the better.

I must echo the sentiment of the professionals who spoke to me: the practice of kickbacks is sickening.

The bridal industry is one that is based upon happiness, love and friendship. Frankly, it disgusts me to discover that a few people would defile such an industry with their dishonesty.

Is Toronto's party industry growing up?

I hope not.

Cookbooks for all seasons and all occasions

By SHELDON KIRSHNER
CJN Staff Reporter

Cookbooks for all seasons and occasions...

A fast quiz.

When is malt vinegar used instead of rice vinegar? Should you use corn oil for making souffles? What is the most prized caviar? What is whey butter? Name France's oldest cheese. What rice is best for paella? What is ajowan and when it is used?

If you're stumped, I suggest you read — and savor — Frances Bissell's great compendium, The Book of Food (Fitzhenry & Whiteside, $55), an ideal wedding or anniversary gift.

A lavishly illustrated and sensibly written cook's guide, it describes more than 1,000 ingredients and tells you how to buy and store them.

The 36 chapters run the gamut from vegetables and oils to smoked fish and meat. The author is the cookery columnist for the London Times. She certainly knows her stuff.

Once you've familiarized yourself with Bissell's pearls of wisdom, you'll be ready for Rose Friedman's Jewish Vegetarian Cooking (HarperCollins, $13.95), the official volume of the International Jewish Vegetarian Society.

Friedman, whose recipes are easy to follow, has eclectic tastes. Try her baked gefilte fish or her eggplant dip. Her Persian rice dish sounds delicious, as does her apple farfel tart.

This is food that schmecks.

Simply Kosher (Gefen, $19.95 US) proves yet again that good old-fashioned Jewish food at its best is simply superb.

Ramona Bachmann — an Indian Jew who immigrated to Denmark via Israel — tempts a reader with Ashkenazi dishes like kneidlach and chopped liver and Sephardi treats like Bombay chicken curry and Moroccan carrot salad. A culinary tour d'horizon.

I don't know about you, but I adore soups, an affinity I owe to my mother, who's a wizard in the kitchen. Judging by New Vegetarian Classics: Soup (The Crossing Press, $18.95 US), so is its author, Mary Taylor.

As Taylor writes, soups are soothing, restorative and generally inexpensive to prepare. Try her fresh garlic soup. Or her Thai mushroom and coconut soup with lemongrass. Or, better still, her ginger brocoli soup with cashews. Mmmm good!

South Indian fare takes you from pakoras and payasmas to kootus and bondas. If I've piqued your curiosity, Dakshin: Vegetarian Cuisine From South India (HarperCollins, $35) is meant for you.

Dakshin, in case you wondered, is an ancient Sanskrit word for "south." And this is what Chandra Padmanabhan's lovely book is all about — classic southern Indian cooking.

It requires fairly exotic spices, and more than a little patience. If this poses no problem, get on with it. The food looks absolutely ravishing.

I'm incurably addicted to Middle Eastern food. If you are too, buy The Arabian Delights (Fitzhenry & Whiteside, $36.95) by Anne Marie Weiss-Armush.

She covers all the bases, starting with appetizers and salads and moving on to soups, meat and poultry, and sweets and pastries.

Her most intriguing recipe is for Yahoodi Mnsaafir, or Travelling Jew, a Syrian and Iraqi concoction of onion, olive oil, garlic, beef sirloin, eggplant, coarse burghol wheat, water, salt and pepper. She claims that, with fresh bread, it's a meal in itself.

On to Italian cuisine. Pasta Gusto (Fitzhenry & Whiteside, $12.95) by Norman Kolpas is a layman's guide to mouth-watering sauces and flavored pastas. Lasagne (Fitzhenry & Whiteside, $13) by Jack Bishop is a celebration of irresistible flavors.

I have never known anyone who didn't like Chinese food. So if you're like me and millions of others, 365 Ways To Cook Chinese (HarperCollins, $19.95) is just the thing.

Besides listing traditional favorites such as cold sesame noodles, lemon chicken and won ton soup, Rose Lo San Ross lists recipes for lesser known dishes like bean curd and spinach dumplings and spicy halibut steaks on rice.

Thanks to its special binding, the book lies perfectly flat. And it has a washable cover.

Chicken is all the rage now that red meat is a supposed no-no. Two books give you the lowdown on chicken — The All Occasion Chicken Cookbook (HarperCollins, $9.95) and Chicken Salads (HarperCollins, $13.50)

The former, by Anne Marshall, will amaze you with its thoroughness. The latter, by Carole Lalli, contains 60 scrumptious recipes.

With these volumes at hand, you can cook up a storm.

Smile...you're on video!

By BARBARA SILVERSTEIN
Special to The CJN

It's the last dance of the wedding. The band starts playing Heveinu Shalom Aleichem and within moments the guests are forming circles and dancing around the room together. It's horah time.

In the centre of the circles five young men — one of them is the groom — dance together with their arms on each others' shoulders. They twirl round and round, speeding up with the music.

"Soon you're going to see them spinning. Their legs are going to fly up in the air," Richard Saunders, tells The CJN. He's the videographer at this event. He explains what he looks for when he films a horah, as Dan Abramsky, his assistant, shoots it.

"A horah is the epitome of a wedding. A family dance. There's a way to capture it. We try to go for close-ups — the smile on the bride's face and those of other family members. A kiss between the bride and the groom," Saunders says.

The horah is still going strong. Someone has fashioned a large skipping rope out of the cloth napkins and two people start turning it. The bride skips rope to the tune of Artza Alinu, holding the bottom of her gown as she jumps. Other people take turns.

Saunders points to the groom as he skips, faster and faster in time with the music and says, "What luck! He's facing the camera." And of course his assistant is behind the camera to preserve the memory.

Preserving the memory of a simchah is what videography is all about, Saunders says. "The video will pale in comparison to their memory, but the video triggers the memory and brings back the feeling." He stresses the importance of capturing grandparents and youngsters. "They're very important to freeze in time because you lose grandparents and the children grow up."

Saunders owns Redstone Pictures (416-256-4666), a business he took over from a photography studio a year and a half ago. He had studied film in university, but worked as a still photographer at a studio. In 1988 he revived the studio's videography business and bought that portion of the company.

Saunders says when he does simchahs he's available to the family for the entire day, as long as the family needs him. He charges from $1,000 to $1,400 for a two-hour edited version of the affair.

He prides himself on both the camera work and the editing. "When I'm filming I'm always looking for the cut away. We have the audio of the groom's speech so I'll film the way she [the bride] reacts. That's what adds life to the speech," he says.

He uses "state of the art" digital editing equipment — he says he's the only videographer in the city to use this technology — giving him more control over the image so he can "build in more dramatic moments. This gives the video more emotional impact."

Special effects

The emotional impact of a video is crucial, agrees videographer Darren Sager of DMS Video Productions (905-881-7677). "It's something they'll [the clients] laugh or cry with."

He says he tries to capture the simchah by being as unintrusive as possible. "They'll [clients] say 'where were you, Darren?' and then when I show them the video they're amazed that their entire day has been captured without intrusion."

He says he puts a lot of care into all his work. "I don't treat any affair as if it's another job." He stresses that every video is unique. "Every affair is different even if you have all the same people."

He tries to get people's reaction, he says. "I like to go into the middle of the dance floor and walk around with the camera so they're [the guests] are looking into the camera as they're dancing.

Sager has a science background and taught himself to become a videographer. He started doing video about eight years ago as a hobby for family and friends, and it grew into a business. His prices range from $895 for an unedited video to $1,395 for an edited one with more additional special effects.

Sager uses special effects, like split screens and page turns, in the editing process, but he says he doesn't let them take over. "It has to hold up on its own. I shouldn't have to rely on manipulation to make the video creative."

Special effects can be used as a transition from one segment to the next; they must complement the footage, he says. "The best video is one shot professionally and creatively." Ultimately the special effects are secondary, he says. "Twenty years from now all you're going to see is yourself, your family and your friends."

The focus on family is very important to videographer, Lisa Feinstein (905-764-1033). "I really place an emphasis on family. They don't want a huge production they want an intimate family affair," she says. "I'm always aware of where family members are."

She recently sat down with a family, she says. "What they want in a video they're going to get." She also makes sure to find out who the important people are, she says. "I focus on the relationships. Capturing a bar mitzvah boy dancing with the grandmother . . . is a precious moment . . . Grandparents pass on."

Feinstein, a mother of five, trained in advertising and broadcasting at college. She worked in advertising and then in television, working as an assistant director at CBC. She left because the long hours were not compatible with raising a family.

Feinstein worked for a video company and then she decided to open her own. The hours are good, she says, because most of her work is on weekends when her husband is home to look after the children.

She works alone, doing all her own shooting and editing. The finished product is edited, and is usually an hour and a half long. She charges $850, but a wedding with multiple locations will cost extra.

Most of Feinstein's business is bar mitzvahs. Many of her clients have three or four children so she gets a lot of repeat business, she says. "I do all the children and then they tell me 'see you at the wedding.' "

She screens the videos with all her clients to make sure they're satisfied with the finished product, she says. "My clients usually cry when they see it. It's very emotional."

Party rentals are the answer

By RUTH SCHWEITZER
Special to The CJN

Whether you're looking for buffet station decor, extraordinary table linens or even a Hollywood movie set for your next party, there is a rental company nearby that has what you need. what you need.

The Prop House (416-588-7725), with 35,000 square feet of movie props, is the size of a department store and a decorator's dream.

There is something for every budget. "We have had people do enormous extravaganzas or rent some decor for their buffet stations," said owner Phil Greenspoon.

As the Prop House builds sets for movies and television, there are carpentry, floral and fabric shops on the premises. For a party, said Greenspoon, "we can literally customize anything."

At a recent bar mitzvah for a baseball enthusiast, his staff painted a baseball diamond on the dance floor, using mannequins to represent the fans.

The boy's mother wanted a special sign-in area, so a carpenter built a booth that was stocked with baseball souvenirs. Guests signed a photograph of the boy, which was later framed.

Greenspoon's staff made candleholders out of four-foot high baseball bats for candlelighting. The candles fit in a space at the tops of the thirteen bats, which came with a bat rack.

For simpler baseball theme parties, the Prop House rents out single items, such as the bat rack and bats, Greenspoon noted.

Hollywood parties featuring authentic Hollywood-style sets with a backstage area are one of his specialities. Themes, of which there are more than 50, include Tex Mex, medieval, a 1950s dance and a 1920s speakeasy.

On the speakeasy set, guests approach a door in a warehouse section of a city. A bouncer behind a sliding peephole asks for a password before he can let guests into the club, where entertainment is provided by a torch singer accompanied by a pianist seated at a grand piano.

The Prop House offers a full decorating service too, but it does not limit itself to decor. A one-stop party centre, the company will plan an entire event. That includes making arrangements for caterers, photographers, entertainment, DJs, invitations and everything else.

"I save you a lot of work," said Greenspoon. "I don't have to shop around and get a lot of different prices. I know who to call and if I'm getting a good deal or not."

Greenspoon and his team work with lightning speed if need be, although he stressed that the more time they get "the more attention we can give to details and the more complete and thorough the packages."

Recently when a wedding date was moved up, the Prop House made all the wedding preparations in four days. Invitations were handed out at the door, Greenspoon recalled, as there wasn't enough time to mail them.

Eva Mayer and Susan Silverman founded Linens N' Lace (416-512-8332) five years ago because they recognized that people wanted to rent better linens for their parties.

"We saw the need for special types of linens — above the ordinary that was usually provided," said Mayer.

Linens N' Lace offers lace, damask, taffeta, moire, cotton and polyester tablecloths, available in white, solid colors and prints, with matching serviettes.

Their lovely floor-length table coverings enhance any hall and help to create an elegant party atmosphere. Even plain chairs can be transformed with the aid of chair covers Linens N' Lace supplies.

Clients often rent basic tablecloths and cover them with overlays of netting, mesh, floral prints or beautiful lace. Some prefer to use basic cloths for the meal and have overlays added at dessert time, along with fresh serviettes.

As the linens are of high quality, colors are particularly vibrant, Mayer noted. The tablecloths come in a veritable rainbow of colors, among them unusual shades such as emerald green, teal blue, magenta and fuchsia. There is a color at Linens N' Lace that is sure to match any party scheme.

Mayer and Silverman are available to help clients with color schemes; they assist their clients in choosing party linens and work closely with consultants, caterers and florists.

Bridal attire...

By RUTH SCHWEITZER
Special to The CJN

Although the traditional heavily-beaded white bridal gown with puffy sleeves is still popular, many brides these days want a simpler, elegant look.

A bridal consultant with Joy Cherry (416-489-8809) says many of today's brides have rejected the traditional gown, because they are sophisticated and a little older than the brides of the past.

"Gone are the days of the big puffy-shouldered dress, heavy beading and heavy fabrication," said consultant Carol Gold.

Many contemporary brides find the traditional gown overstated and Gold agrees. "I like to see the bride first and the dress second. In some of the heavy dresses, you see the beading first and the bride second."

Instead of heavy fabrics such as satin, Joy Cherry's selection of beautiful off-white and ivory designer gowns — they carry Christos, Priscilla, Vera Wang and Jim Helm exclusively in Canada — are made with lighter silk-satins, silk organzas and pure silk shantungs.

Vera Wang's collection includes dresses made of silk illusion, a new body-molding fabric she used to create the dazzling outfit skater Nancy Kerrigan wore at the recent winter Olympics.

Gowns are adorned with exquisite embroidered, venetian and alencon laces. Soft cotton venetian lace replaces the traditional, heavily beaded type as does alencon, which is thicker and wider than the traditional variety and decorated with tiny pearls and clear sequins.

Design-wise, some of the gowns are not as full as they were. Some feature A-line skirts while others have a graceful straight cut. Waists have either dropped slightly or moved up — the Empire waist is popular. Lengths are just off the ground.

Fitted bodices incorporate both zippers and old-fashioned buttons, so the look is traditional; yet the bride has the extra security of having a zipper.

Necklines, V-shaped and rounded, are soft, and off-the-shoulder styles are prevalent. "Not low on the shoulder but just sitting on the edge of the shoulder," said Gold.

For practical reasons, trains are getting shorter or disappearing altogether. The mystical look of the see-through cathedral veil that falls past the shoulder to form a train in the back is big. "Brides like it [the veil] because it comes off," she says, "and you don't have a train that you have to lug around all night."

Many brides are rejecting the tiara for soft-looking silk or lace headpieces, with pearls or tiny procelain flowers and a lot of detailing in the back. Designers have paid attention to back detailing as guests view the bride from the back during the ceremony.

The newly refurbished bridal salon where Carol Gold see brides for hour-and-a-half long appointments has a relaxed atmosphere. Once she has established what kind of gown a bride wants, she brings four or five for the bride to try on. After Gold has answered all the bride's questions, she might look at headpieces and veils.

"It's a very difficult process," said Gold, "and it's done in a non-pressured setting, so they feel comfortable and relaxed."

The latest gowns designed by Thomas Koichopolos of the Tomé Dress Salon (416-256-5852) are simple, romantic and feminine — and definitely untraditional.

You won't see a wedged bodice, a heart-shaped "sweetheart" neckline or heavy beading on his recently designed off-white or ivory dresses.

Rather than a full skirt, some brides choose an A-line skirt or a "trumpet" skirt, which is fitted through the torso and hip line and flares out about 10 inches below the waist.

His full-skirted gowns are made of light, see-through fabrics such as silk chiffon instead of heavier material like taffeta, and recently he has designed a few striking strapless gowns with capes for some of his brides.

Some dresses are ankle length in front and floor length in the back, making it easier to walk in than the traditional floor-length gown.

In keeping with the trend toward comfort, Koichopolos said few brides ask for trains. "If they decide to have a train, they decide to have it completely detachable."

He is getting fewer requests for veils and headpieces too. Many brides, he says, would rather put fresh flowers in their hair to go with the soft, romantic look of their gown.

During consultations (appointment suggested) Koichopolos finds out what kind of gown the bride has in mind, what sort of wedding she is having — formal, semi-formal or informal — and how much she has budgeted for a dress.

He goes over a list of fabrics with her, he said, all the while "sketching as they're talking."

Half the brides who shop at Ritche Couture (416-789-4378) still buy the heavier traditional gown,.but the rest are attracted to the simpler, contemporary dress.

Many of today's brides want a comfortable gown, one without heavy beading or a train, said Vivian Prussky, Jack Ritche's daughter. But "she still wants to look like a bride."

If she has a train, it can be looped through hooks at the back of the waist. Even with trains, the new gowns have a simpler, sleeker look than the traditional gown.

Ritche's offers a giant selection of beautiful gowns, an astonishing 600 altogether. All the gowns are featured in current bridal magazines, says Prussky. Included are the newer dresses featuring slimmer shoulders, fitted bodices, and full skirts made of light, airy fabrics such as organza and tulle.

They carry some lovely new lace-trimmed silk gowns with delicate pearl detailing on bodices and skirts. "The price of silk gowns has really come down," she said. "They are much more affordable, which is important in today's economy."

Their downtown location (416-362-2349) has gowns discounted by 30 to 50 per cent, which means dresses regularly selling for $600 to $800 can be found there for $300.

When a bride comes into Ritche's she either selects her favorite styles from bridal magazines there or tells the consultant what she has in mind. The consultant chooses a few gowns for her to try. "With over 600 dresses, there is something for everyone," said Prussky.

After the bride has selected a gown, she often returns with someone else for a second opinion. If she decides she wants the dress, the consultant then accessorizes it with a veil and headpiece.

Ritche's has a custom-design service too, so if a bride sees a dress on the rack that she likes — except for, say, the sleeves and the fabric — they can whip up a dress to her specifications. Or else they could design a dress for her from a picture.

"Even if they want a dress made, we have them try on something similar," said Prussky. "We want them to see approximately what it's going to look like."

All custom-design work is done by Jack Ritche, whose enchanting dresses have been delighting Toronto's brides for more than 20 years.

Outdoor family fun

By CAROLYN BLACKMAN
Special to The CJN

Looking for a great afternoon outdoors for your family or group?

Metropolitan Toronto and Region Conservation Authority (MTRC) (661-6600) has something for everyone.

Covering such places as Black Creek Pioneer Village, Kortright Centre for Conservation, Tommy Thompson Park and various conservation areas, the MTRC offers such things as space for get-togethers with a focus on nature, some banquet facilities, guided tours including maple syrup tours, reserved picnic and camping sites and private fishing ponds for rent to groups.

At Black Creek Pioneer Village, a restored village depicting life in southern Ontario in the 1860s, visitors can watch artisans practise their trades and tour authentic buildings full of displays. On Oct. 22-23 and 29-30 kids will enjoy a pumpkin party.

Tommy Thompson Park, on the Toronto waterfront is known to be a stopover for migratory birds and a spot for visitors to enjoy cycling, jogging, fishing, walking and photography. The park, located on a manmade peninsula known as the Leslie Street Spit is open on weekends and holidays only until further notice.

The Kortright Centre for Conservation, Canada's largest environment centre has 18 kilometres of trails for hiking on your own or with a Kortright naturalist. Guided walks take place daily and weekend programs are of particular interest to children. Fall self-guided trails include the fall color trail and the enchanted forest trail, both until the end of October.

Conservation areas such as Heart Lake Conservation Area in Brampton, offer a variety of outdoor fall activities until Oct. 23, such as hiking, bird-watching, fishing and picnicing.

Get a group together, bring some food and equipment and you've got the makings for a great time.

Musical entertainment...

By BARBARA SILVERSTEIN
Special to The CJN

If you want to add some Yiddishkeit to your simchah you'll need Chutzpah!. But you won't have to become brash and obnoxious.

Chutzpah! is the name of Toronto's newest Klezmer band. Klezmer is a style of music that originated with Yiddish-speaking Eastern European Jews. Some tunes are several hundred years old. All the members of Chutzpah! (416-925-8716) are or have been affiliated with the Flying Bulgar Klezmer Band — the group credited with the revival of Klezmer music in Toronto.

Three members of Chutzpah! — Laura Cesar (bass), Alex Luminsky (accordion), and Alan Merovitz (vocalist) — are also in the Flying Bulgar Klezmer Band, while Anne Lederman (vocalist and violinist) is a past member.

The repertoire of Klezmer music played by Chutzpah! differs from that of the Flying Bulgar Klezmer Band in that the music is geared to accordion, strings and vocals, rather than the brass and woodwind instruments, said Lederman.

Her involvement in Klezmer music was a natural extension of her interest in the traditional folk music of Eastern Europe, she said. "It always moved me. It's passionate music."

Cesar's background was in jazz, but she was also moved by Klezmer music, when she first heard it, she said. "I said, 'This is the music I have to play.' "

Luminsky, who was immersed in Yiddish, Moldavian and Russian music most of his life, immigrated to Canada from Moldova in 1992.

Merovitz, an actor and writer, was steeped in Yiddish tradition since childhood — he was raised by his grandparents — and spoke Yiddish as a first language.

Many people planning simchahs want to go back to their roots, Merovitz said. "They're looking for something that's personal and authentic and connects to the Ashkenazi culture."

This could be seen in Chutzpah's! performance at a recent bar mitzvah. The band played during the luncheon and gave a concert after the meal.

The repertoire for the bar mitzvah was prepared in close consultation with a family member who was well versed in Yiddish music. She also provided the guests with song sheets.

"The family came up to us at the end and said 'thank you for bringing Yiddish to our simcha,' " Lederman said.

Many people were moved by the music, Luminsky said. "I saw the wonder in the eyes of the middle aged and older people. They were surprised to hear this kind of music."

Lederman and Cesar are transcribing and arranging Klezmer music moth-balled in music archives and Lederman is even composing her own.

Chutzpah! also does special holiday programs. They'll be performing at a Chanukah concert at Harbourfront on Dec. 4. The members of the band have a mission, Lederman said. "We want to work with families and kids to teach them the traditional music — to pass it on."

For many people, traditional music at a simchah is a live band playing everything from horahs to today's hits and Shelley Miller is well-versed in this tradition. He's been playing at weddings and bar mitzvahs since the late '60s. The Shelley Miller Band (416-484-1044) is a family affair. Miller's wife, Sharon Smith, is one of the featured vocalists.

Miller, the leader of a four-to-eight-member band, does all the musical arrangements, some of which include live music supplemented with computerized instrumentation.

"You could swear there's a band of 35," he said. "Computers have changed the way music is played; many of the recordings you hear on the radio are computerized."

Miller uses the computer to recreate original orchestrations, he said. "We go for authenticity."

Many guests at parties, especially the younger ones, say the band sounds just like the record, he said. "It's the ultimate compliment."

Miller has been playing music for more than 30 years. He studied music throughout high school and university. He was in a number of bands before teaming up with Saul Helman in 1978.

Miller and Smith met that year — she joined the Saul Helman Band — and they've been singing together ever since. Smith has a music degree from York University. She's been singing professionally in bands since the '70s and she also teaches music — she's an accredited Orff music teacher.

Miller and Helman continued their partnership in the band and as booking agents for other bands until 1993, when Helman left the music industry. All the members of the band stayed on and it was renamed the Shelley Miller Band.

Musicians did well during the boom years of the '80s, but they were hard-hit by the '90s recession, Miller said. "The '80s were big years [for bands]. We used to get 20 and 30 calls for every available slot we had." He was getting bookings two years in advance, he said. "People were panicking about getting the best of everything — caterer, band, decorator."

But it's much harder for live bands in the '90s, he said. And like many people in the entertainment business Miller charges less now than he did in the '80s. It costs $850 an hour for Miller's eight-piece band, but he can also provide a four- or five-piece band at a lower rate, he said.

Miller always meets with clients before their affair, he said. "We plan the event meticulously with them."

Delicious Desserts!!

By CAROLYN BLACKMAN
Special to The CJN

Most guests have room for the desserts that can provide a delicious ending to an already delectable meal.

"People often watch their diets, but when it comes to desserts, they want the very best with the most delicious ingredients," says Perla Azulay who, along with her husband Ely, owns Ely's Fine Foods (782-3231).

Ely's specializes in cakes brought in from Montreal's Le Petit Theatre. The giant kosher, internationally acclaimed cakes such as the Perigord, which has a chocolate cookie-crumb base infused with almond musseline and a chocolate mousse filling with pralines and almond crunch is enough to put a smile on the face of the strictest dieter.

Sharon Firestone, who owns Sweet York Desserts (783-4293) with Bill Baptista, says that despite strict eating habits, most people still want the taste of a delicious cake after a simchah meal. Sweet York cakes, which are all custom made, not only taste good, they look great, and can be made to match the decor of the party.

"Cake designer, Linda Thomas, works with fondant and royal icing and can match the cake to the room's color scheme or even to the fabric of the hosts' dresses. Our Tiffany wedding box cake is a square, tiered cake, shaped like a Tiffany's jewellery box. Its quite a romantic-looking cake."

Theme parties are very popular these days, and both Ely's and Sweet York Desserts are able to custom-make cakes to match themes ranging from the Star Ship Enterprise to sports and games to cartoon characters and numbers for birthdays and anniversaries.

"If a customer brings in a picture, we are happy to try and duplicate it on a cake," says Firestone.

Guests still look forward to an elegant sweet table after a meal, and the bigger the variety, the more pleased people are. Sweet York's sweet table may include chocolate raspberry or lemon fruit cake and a variety of pastries and tortes, as well as chocolate dipped fruit.

Fruit is always a sought-after dessert, and Lou Scamolla, owner of Dessertcraft (213-0544), is at the food terminal every day by 4 p.m. to buy the freshest fruit possible. He can add the finishing touches to a sweet table by using a number of different fresh fruits.

"Fruit is very popular now, especially since people do not want to fill the entire sweet table with rich desserts. Garnishings such as orange and grapefruit cartwheels and pineapple spears and a variety of melon balls really add color to a sweet table," says Scamolla.

He says that there is no such thing as an out-of-season fruit anymore, because with delivery from such places as Florida, California, Israel and South America, he can get almost any fruit requested.

"With 48 hours notice we can usually get fruits such as papaya or starfruit which look so good on a sweet table. If we can't preserve the fruit for our fruit salads however, or handle the fruit that is to be served fresh, we won't buy it. People are aware of quality and to get the very best fruit, they are willing to pay a little more."

Humorous book fails to make the grade

By BARBARA SILVERSTEIN
Special to The CJN

Before and After Your New Baby is one of those small compact books that's supposed to be humorous. It's the type of book displayed near the cash register, one of those gifty things that's high on form and low on content.

Before and After Your New Baby, is not overly funny, but it may make some people smile . . . a tiny bit. The idea behind this book was good, but authors Victoria Brown and Allan Chochinov cannot pull it off because they treat the subject matter too simply.

The book is supposed to show the changes in people's thoughts and values once they become parents. The left side of the book gives a thought or an idea before parenthood, and the right side is the transformed version after the baby is born. For example, "disposable diapers are killing the planet" mutates into "Pampers saved my life." Before "Mike never goes anywhere without his cellular phone," but after his child is born, "Mike never goes anywhere without the camcorder."

There are also many word associations like night life and night light, or high heels and high chair. It's quite apparent the book is geared to young yuppies. For example, "the right firm" soon becomes less important than "the right play group;" Wall Street to Sesame Street.

But even yuppies may wince after reading this superficial book. It doesn't really capture the emotional chaos people experience as first-time parents: their world is turned up-side-down and life as they've known it is never the same.

There are many different and awkward moments — like soothing a colicky baby that cries for hours at a stretch, or trying to discreetly hide the wet patches on a shirt when breasts leak — that could lend themselves to humor.

And the humor could even be adapted to the before and after concept of Brown and Chochinov's book. I'd like to see the pre-birth "mmm ... smells good, what are you cooking?" turn into "how come I'm the only one who ever smells his diapers!?"

Before and After Your New Baby is a missed opportunity. It was a good idea that fizzled. The authors' approach to the subject — the focus on superficial symbols of change like cellular-phones and camcorders rather than the wet, messy, nerve-wracking situations new parents experience — misses the mark.

But the authors don't have that first-hand experience. They're not parents, but some of their best friends are. And that's why Before and After Your New Baby doesn't work. Brown and Chochinov should have waited to have children before they wrote this book.

If a couple has a special song for the bridal dance and they get him the music a month in advance — all he needs is a recording — he'll arrange it and rehearse it with the band to be performed for the wedding.

Smith and Miller — the parents of two boys aged 6 and 10 — do special features — like games and contests — with the younger guests at bar mitzvahs.

"It keeps everybody at the party together in one room," said Smith.

She said when the band performs "people often say, 'You look like you're having so much fun.' It's because it comes from the heart."

She emphasized that the members of the band love what they do. "People want to be there, and it's not just because we're getting paid . . . We love playing together."

Karen Silver — she leads the Karen Silver Band (416-275-5149) — is another musician who looks like she loves what she's doing. She's an energetic and versatile singer who interacts easily with the audience.

"We're big on audience participation," she told The CJN during a short break between sets at a gig at the Chelsea Hotel. "We like to make people feel like they're part of the show. Everybody gets involved," she said.

At a bar mitzvah or corporate party having a limbo contest may fit the spirit of the affairs, but weddings are generally more traditional, she said.

Becoming a part of the wedding business was a natural step for Silver. She said she was born into this business. Her mother Dorothy Silverberg-Little was one of the first bridal consultants in Toronto. Her sister, Lynn Cohen, has followed in her mother's footsteps while her other sister Rhonda Silver is also in a band.

"I lived and breathed it [weddings] every time I walked out of my bedroom," Silver said. "There was always a new client sitting in the living room."

When she was a teenager she loved to sing and her mother encouraged her to entertain at weddings, Silver said. "It's a great way of making money. There are good audiences and you're treated well."

She said she "learned the ropes" from her mother and sisters — they taught her how to organize the music — when to play low key music and when to start the horahs.

Silver meets the families so she can get to know a little bit about everybody and their musical tastes. She said she tries to match music to the theme of the bar or bat mitzvah whenever possible and she plays a special theme for everyone involved in the candle lighting ceremony.

Audiences generally find her band very entertaining, Silver said. "We do a lot of overtime because we go over so well with audiences."

The Karen Silver Band charges $600-$700 an hour for a seven-piece band, but the price is flexible depending on the night. And for simchas on a smaller budget, it is possible to have a smaller-sized band.

The band has to be very up to date on the top 40 because of all their club commitments, Silver said. In 1991 the band was selected to be the opening act for Bob Hope at Roy Thompson Hall. Silver even had the opportunity to perform some jokes with Hope, which up until this summer was the high point of her career.

In July, Silver and her musical conductor, David Glud, were performing on a cruise ship when they were offered a recording contract. "The whole thing happened so quickly," she said. Norman Whitelaw, Eric Clapton's bass player, heard them and flew them to Atlanta to record a country pop album.

The band will be going on a promotional tour for the album in October. "This record deal is hopefully the high point of my career," Silver said.

Rena Gaile — leader of the Rena Gaile Band (905-420-8625) — is another band leader with a recording contract in the works. Declan O'Doherty, the producer for Rita MacNeil's albums is producing Gaile's album. She has had seven releases and last January she was nominated for outstanding new artist at the Big Country Awards.

However, Gaile's career in country music is secondary to doing the simchah circuit with her band. She has a versatile repertoire — it includes traditional Jewish music, R & B, Motown and the top hits — to suit any affair, be it a wedding, bat mitzvah, corporate party or gala, she said. "There's no event too large or too small."

Gaile has been singing professionally for 12 years. She studied music at Humber College in 1981 where she also established connections to get started in the music business. Her first gig was in 1979 — she sang O Canada at a soccer game. "They gave me $10. I was a nervous wreck. Can you imagine?"

Gaile has had her own band for 10 years. She's very good at reading a crowd and knowing what kind of music will suit them, she said. "I can almost look at a group of people and know what's going to work."

She said for a mixed age group she plays a little bit of everything. She strives to have a rapport with the audience, but she "keeps the chat to a minimum," she said. "People are there to talk to each other."

The band usually takes short breaks, but sometimes they don't take any at all, she said. "It's one of the first questions people ask."

The seven members of Gaile's band are studio musicians. "We all enjoy getting out and playing to people," she said. "It's a wonderful group of singers and musicians."

Her husband, Jim Morgan, a bass player, takes care of the sound. He was the chief sound engineer at RCA; he's able to adjust the sound for each room, she said. "I'd be pretty lost without him."

In the '80s the Rena Gaile Band was one of higher priced bands, but Gaile said she has had to lower her prices.

"As a business person I either had to take less work or be more flexible. Most people say, 'I have this much money do you want it?' " She charges between $650 and $850 an hour.

Gaile meets with clients to go over "their perception of the evening," she said. "It's up to me to interpret it, to make the evening special and memorable for them."

It's an individual thing, but simchahs tend to most successful when "people are partying and having a great time on the dance floor," she said. "When the band connects with the guests it creates a buzz and it makes the evening very memorable."

From virtual reality to creative crafts

By MARLA KAY
Special to The CJN

Why not transport yourselves and your party guests into the 21st century? Israel Ellis has created Canada's first virtual reality centre, called Cybermind, now at the CN Tower.

"Virtual reality," states Ellis, "is a computer generated, interactive 3D environment in which the computer serves as a window to an alternate reality. Once immersed in this environment, the players interact with each other, as well as the computer. Each virtual reality system includes a head mount which provides a 3D graphical image along with full stereo sound. By placing the display over your eyes, you are virtually transported to a computer-generated world that you control.

"Wherever you move," he explains, "the computer tracks the movement of your body and displays the appropriate image to your eyes. (If you looked up, you would see the sky, if you looked down, you would see your 'feet.') The unlimited choices you can make in these virtual worlds make the experience one-of-a-kind."

Cybermind is Toronto's first dedicated virtual reality entertainment centre. The Cybermind centre features interactive virtual reality machines that allow the general public to experience and learn about 3D virtual reality technology by playing imaginative, action-packed games such as Dactyl Nightmare and Flying Aces. Users can experience worlds with deadly pterodactyls, drive robot war machines or pilot World War I fighter planes.

"I see virtual reality as a technology in its infancy . . . a technology with tremendous growth potential," says Ellis. "Cybermind is totally 'anti-arcade.' The design of the centre provides a very relaxed environment. Large pieces of artwork adorn the walls and couches and sofas complete a very comfortable setting."

There are three different types of virtual reality technologies available at Cybermind; the first two are totally immersive stand up and sit down units. Each requires the participant to wear a head-mounted display piece and goggles, giving you the feeling of being totally immersed in the environment you have chosen.

The third is a non-immersive virtual reality called Cyberjam. This is a third-party video. The participant's image is projected into a basketball game on a screen and however you move will advance the game.

At Cybermind, there are seven different experiences which will accommodate interaction of up to four persons at a time in each environment. They can handle up to 40 people per hour. The staff provides a specialized individual orientation for your guests and informs them about the virtual reality technology.

The sales department (416-362-8787) handles all reservations for large groups. Hours of operation are 10 a.m. to 12 p.m., seven days a week. The price for a five-minute experience is $5.

For more creative less high tech entertainment, Nancy Marcus has the answer at her Kidz Creartive Playhouse (416-691-5437) in the beaches area of Toronto.

"I found the area lacking in a source for parents to learn how to promote creativity with their children," says Marcus. "My Creartive Playhouse is a centre that promotes children's imagination and artistic freedom."

The Kidz Creartive Playhouse has three large areas. One area consists of 1,000 plaster molds which children can use to form shapes from Frankenstein to the Little Mermaid to jewelry boxes, using a variety of materials. They are then encouraged to utilize the painting and glitter centre to decorate their finished pieces.

There are also T-shirts, placemats, fanny-packs or visors available, which can be individually decorated with paint and glitter.

Another area is used for seasonal workshops which are usually geared to the holidays (e.g. Mother's Day, Father's Day and Chanukah). They offer fabric painting, puppetry and stamping and are always available at under $20 per session. The second area is also used for group birthday parties and summer and winter art camps.

"For a birthday party," says Marcus, "we provide invitations and decorations. The hostess provides the food. Our staff (artists and art students) direct the children in a variety of art activities, as well as entertaining the children with face painting and tattooing. Their finished art activity becomes their loot bag. What could be simpler?

"We welcome a large variety of children with special needs... Our art activities are designed to promote a child's self-esteem. Each and every child that leaves Kidz Creartive Playhouse comes away with a feeling of accomplishment and pride and that makes us feel good too."

Wendy Brown and Lisa Feinstein have found an inexpensive entertainment product that is ideal for a children's party or as a family activity.

This product is constructed of 100 per cent recycled corrugated cardboard. It is ideal for ages 12 months and up and assembles and stores away in minutes. The playhouse has large cut out windows, create-your-own puppet theatre, and fold-out front and back doors.

The Color Me Playhouse is an ideal birthday gift and a fabulous party activity. It encourages imaginary play while educating children in creativity, construction and social interaction.

The 40-inch-tall, 30 by 41-inch house costs $20. To order call Wendy Brown (905-886-5536 or Lisa Feinstein 905-764-1033).

Super entertainment

By CYNTHIA GASNER
Special to The CJN

Music can make or break a party, says Rick Levine of the Rick Levine Band and the newly-formed Times Square Entertainment Group (905-881-6400) which Levine describes as "an innovative concept that combines DJ music with sensational entertainment."

Levine, who has been entertaining audiences since 1970, has an honors degree in fine arts from York University and has been involved with graphic arts, sign writing and desktop publishing.

In 1982, he established the Rick Levine Band which caters to a contemporary audience. Levine says encouragement from friends and clients led him to try and make parties extra special. He combines his musical talent with his creative and entrepreneurial spirit in creating the new entertainment concept.

After working with a company in New York City, Levine established Times Square Entertainment Group to serve the Toronto area. "Times are changing and there are new trends," he says. "In the past, people traditionally preferred live music to recorded music but times and technology have created a whole new marketplace which we are responding to."

He says he makes the guest of honor the star of the show. He guarantees that a party "is not only captivating and fun, but one that truly makes the guest or guests of honor feel special. This creates a one-of-a-kind spectacular that will be etched into everyone's mind for years to come."

It is word-of-mouth that brings Levine success. "We are building towards being one of the largest full-service DJ entertainment companies in Canada." By combining "incredibly talented dancers, singers, DJs and MCs, we get the party off to a great start and keep it going — we want every simchah and party to be the most amazing day of your life."

Levine uses dramatic lighting effects, fog and bubbles and great music. He can even "blast" the guest of honor on the scene, wearing a special costume, backed by his Times Square dancers.

"It is important," says Levine, "to get everyone to join the fun. We provide lots of fun-filled games for the kids, great dancing and fabulous music — all the elements for the most outrageous, most memorable bar or bat mitzvah celebration ever to be experienced."

To cater to the many tastes in music and entertainment, The Rick Levine Band has developed a versatile repertoire including traditional, Top 40 and international music.

For weddings and other simchas, Levine says non-stop music is important. Special arrangements can be made to keep the momentum going throughout the party.

Canadian artist reveals his latest creations

By CYNTHIA GASNER
Special to The CJN

Canadian artist Howard Fox, who has been living in Tele Aviv for the past two years, continues to build on his creative and artistic talent.

Over the past two decades, he has worked with pen and ink, water colors and oils. Fox developed an international reputation for his melding of the old and the new. His illuminated ketubot (Jewish marriage contracts) are in demand and are available at Jewish book stores including, Israel's, the Judaica Centre, Matana Judaica and Miriam's Gift Gallery.

"I continue to meld Eastern and Western thought and ancient civilizations with contemporary images," says Fox. "Judaism has presented me with a deep sense of living history that persists and blends itself into everyday modern life."

His mother, Ida Fox, who handles her son's art works and ketubot says that when her son was 3 years old, his nursery teachers recognized that he was a very talented child. Throughout his school years, teachers would ask his parents what they were doing about his exceptional talent in art and music. He began taking lessons.

While Fox was at William Lyon McKenzie Collegiate in Downsview, his parents tried to direct him to another profession or a business, recognizing that art is a very precarious field. He spent a year in Israel at Kibbutz Alonim and decided to follow his love and make art his full-time career. He returned to Toronto and completed a fine arts degree at York University.

His mother notes that Fox has never applied for a grant to subsidize his art. "He has always been self-supporting and successful on his own." She adds that the love of art is a passion for her son.

In the early years, Fox, who is engaged to an Israeli, Dorit Guy, whom he met while on vacation in Thailand, was fascinated with drawings with sharp lines and angles. Although he temporarily turned away from this dramatic style and moved into painting soft lines and pastel tones, his recent works reflect a return to his earlier sharp images.

Fox's works reflect his fascination with the Moorish period. He combines ancient architecture and brings to it the world of today — porticos, people, arches, trains — all blended into a complementary whole.

He synthesizes styles and cultural variations, and he has had a number of one-man exhibitions of his paintings. His contemporary paintings are based on a mystical bond between people and ideas, which stem from his travels to the Far East, Europe, North America and throughout Israel.

Fox told The CJN, "I love to paint. It is not some abstract intellectual questioning but the continuation, a meandering, exploding sensation of love and passion, questions and joy."

On a recent trip to Toronto, he had a very successful exhibition. For more information on his ketubot and paintings, call Ida Fox at (416) 633-5535 or write to Howard Fox, Rechov Mohiliver 28/6, Tel Aviv, Israel, telephone 011-972-3-517-0892.

On a personal note...

BY HOWARD FOX
Special to The CJN

For the last two years I have been living and painting in Israel. This in many ways is the fulfillment of a long-held personal belief that someday I would end up making this land my home. And, so it is.

Howard Fox

I am corresponding to you from my porch which overlooks a stretch of the Mediterranean Sea. The lights of Yaffo are visible in the southern distance. Whereas Jerusalem turns gold at sunset, Tel Aviv turns an orangish-purple — it is quite beautiful. I write this as the heat of the day concedes to a light, cooling breeze.

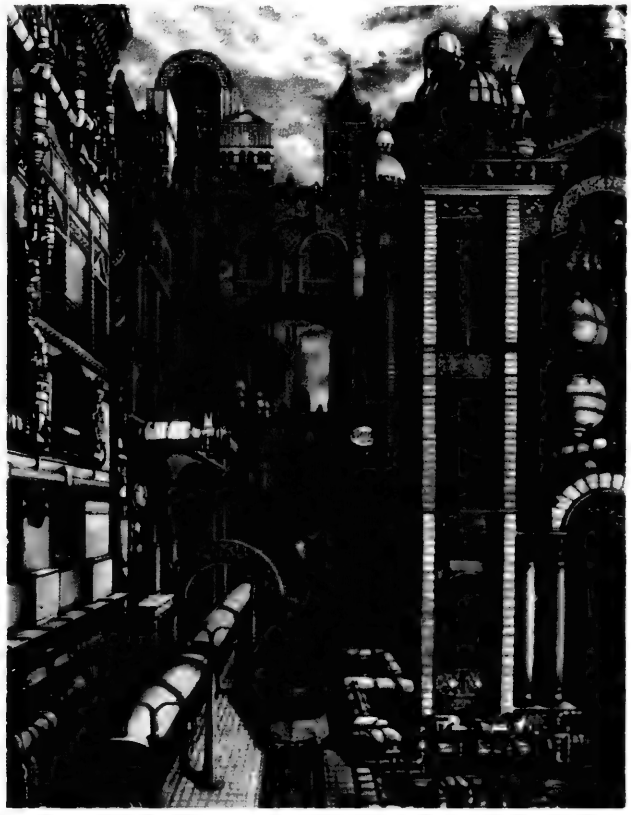
A peculiar thing has happened to my art — it has gone through yet another change. Actually, the fact that it has changed is not all that odd. It seems that whenever I have travelled, whether it be to Israel, the Far East or on my return to Canada, my imagination commands my brush.

For instance, when I am in Canada, I have a tendency to paint subjects, motifs and colors more traditionally associated with Thailand or India, rather than what could be deemed Canadian in style and setting.

Here in Israel, in a city as well as a country caught limboing between the third and the first world, my art stetches its fingers towards the industrial images of the west — huge pipes, turbines and generators — where steel concoctions support, surround and intermesh with elements of Far Eastern, European and North American displays of architecture. The scene is realistic in application but sustains a feeling of the fantastic.

Baroque towers, Turkish domes and Chicago school warehouses and skyscrapers house humans. They are the one constant, the one element that does not stand as a representation of the idylic. Great architecture and its skeleton of supporting pipes, ladders and connecting rods act as monuments to man's technological prowess, yet the human being reacts and acts as he always has — only the settings change.

In another direction, I have been affected by my surroundings. Living in Tel Aviv, two blocks from the Carmel Market, I forget the growth of skyscrapers and find myself searching through balconied back alleyways and yards, watching the city's first generation of buildings crumbling, cracked layer upon layer of painted walls. Dadaesque balconies, rooftop gardens and high-ceilinged stairwells and tiled floors — and as always, there are people.



Every thirteen years or so, something truly spectacular, rejuvenating and alive, stimulat

Party Fun For Kids!

By RUTH SCHWEITZER

As today's sophisticated youngsters find old-fashioned party games like pin the tail on the donkey b-o-r-i-n-g, planning activities for a child's birthday party is a challenge.

So instead of having the party at home, many parents are holding birthday celebrations at play centres, which offer computer games, arts and crafts areas, and indoor playgrounds.

At the Fun 'N More Party Centre (905-764-8955), there are three fun-filled party rooms — featuring computer games, arts and crafts, and video and audio equipment — along with an indoor playground.

The computer games room, for children between 5 and 10, includes Super Nintendo and Sega Genesis and a variety of educational software.

The arts and crafts centre, for younger and older children, focuses on such creative activities as T-shirt, shoe and clay painting as well as jewelry and puppet making.

In the video and audio room, which is geared to kids between 5 and 10, they get to watch movies, listen to music and hear stories on cassette.

The indoor playground for children up to 7 has a box filled with foam balls for children to play in, three slides, a "little tyke" house and kitchen, cars, trucks and a merry-go-round. There are lots of puzzles and books too.

Pnina Guendelman, co-owner of the Fun 'N More Party Centre, stresses that the playground has been designed with the children's safety in mind. Any sharp corners have been covered with foam and there are mats on the floor. If children fall, she said, "they don't hurt themselves."

Each of the party rooms accommodates up to 30 children, while the entire centre has room for 60. If parents are giving a party for a 2-year-old and inviting many older children, Guendelman said, they may rent the entire facility so the older kids can play in the computer games and video and audio rooms. If there are only four or five older children in a smaller group, they can use the computer games in the arts and crafts centre at no extra charge.

Party packages for the two-hour parties include invitations, loot bag, party supplies (plates, cutlery, serviettes) as well as cake, food and juice, either kosher or non-kosher. Pizza, said Guendelman, is the most popular item on the menu. Parents are welcome to supply their own food if they wish. Magicians, clowns and bunnies are available.

She asks parents to invite an adequate number of adults to help supervise the children, recommending a ratio of four or five adults for 30 children.

Guendelman and her partner Irit Dor hail from Israel, where they were both early childhood educators. Two years ago, they opened Fun 'N More. They thought an indoor playground would be very popular here because of the weather and they were right on the mark.

Kidsports (905-826-5437) is a giant indoor playground featuring a two-mile adventure challenge for older children and a "wee" challenge for toddlers.

The adventure challenge is the largest one of its kind in North America, according to sales and marketing director Jacquie Sullivan.

The entire facility, filled with all kinds of amenities, is an enormous 30,000 square feet.

Fitness is the focus of Kidsport, and parties are customized to a child's interest. "If a child is interested in a special sport, we would have our party coordinator create 45 minutes of games or activities associated with that sport," Sullivan said.

After the games end, the children spend 45 minutes climbing, sliding, jumping and running. There are tunnels, rope paths and a maze. Slides go right down into the four ball baths made with a whopping 42,000 balls. Toddlers get a workout on the wee challenge, which includes a ball bath of 10,000 balls and a roadway with small cars.

"One of the things parents enjoy about Kidsports so much is the activity level — that children are active and promoting health and fitness," Sullivan said.

The remaining half hour of the party takes place in birthday rooms, which are miniature houses. Small rooms are for 10 to 15 kids, and a large one accommodates up to 40.

Food — vegetable platters, popcorn, juice, fresh-from-the-oven pizza and birthday cake — is provided by the on-site vegetarian Mango Tango Cafe. Kosher can be ordered.

Kidsports offers a choice of three party packages, which include food, party supplies, hats, balloons and a group photo. Loot bags are available separately.

Parents have the option of participating in the party or watching from the cafe while early childhood educators take charge. Most parents do take part though, said Sullivan. In fact, some trail behind with video cameras to capture the fun and excitement of the party.

The newly opened Eglinton Playhouse (416-481-0487) offers a delightful play area specially for children under 6 along with a computer centre for children and young teens.

In the play area, there are miniature cars and trucks and an imagination centre with kitchen, beauty salon and doll houses.

A 300-sq.ft. ball bath includes slides and climbing apparatus. Toddlers can ride soft, padded ponies, while rocking horses are available for older children.

In the darkest days of winter, it is always summer in this bright play area designed to look like a park. A few puffy white clouds and birds dot the blue ceiling, and replicas of birds dangle down. There are even trees — foam-padded pillars transformed into tree trunks with branches and leaves reaching the ceiling.

Young Einsteins, a children's computer school, runs The Playhouses' computer centre. Children as young as 3 can learn how to use a computer and a mouse. The game and educational software at the centre is appropriate for kids up to 15.

Kids get exclusive use of the play area and/or the computer centre for 45 minutes and another 45 minutes in one of two party rooms: one that accommodates 20 and another for 28. Children play games and do arts and crafts there.

The various party packages include invitations, pizza, cake, juice, balloons, party supplies and loot bags. Parents of children with special dietary needs are welcome to bring their own food or order through The Playhouse. The adult-to-child ratio is one adult for every four kids, and parents are asked to assist. Parents can enjoy coffee and muffins at the snack bar while they watch the children play.

The Playhouse, managed by childhood educators and other accredited professionals, stresses safety.

Happening Hairstyles

By RUTH SCHWEITZER
Special to The CJN

We're going to be brushing our hair the proverbial hundred times a day — curly, frizzy mops are out and smooth, healthy, shiny tresses are back in style.

Evening hairstyles, reflecting the current trend, are soft and wavy, according to Renée Siben of The Total Look Beauty Salon (416-225-2380).

Roller waves, for either long or short hair, are one of the biggest new hair looks, perfect to go with this season's romantic, feminine evening wear. The actress Sharon Stone popularized the look this past spring at the Academy Awards.

Rollers waves are created, Siben said, by leaving the hair pretty well as is, except for a quick hand comb-through, after the rollers have been removed.

The classic French roll with a soft wave in front, "a soft version of the Bridget Bardot look," is stronger than ever for long hair, she says.

Other evening hairstyles for long hair include a simple, sophisticated braided look and an elegant ponytail worn high on the head and curled at the end.

But long hair is not a prerequisite for a stunning evening hairdo these days as short hair stylings are versatile today.

Siben adds form to short hair in different ways, slicking it back or creating slightly assymetrical styles with a wave at the front.

The shag is still strong, and with the aid of the miraculous new hair creams and gels on the market this hairstyle can be pushed up and back for evening.

Many models on the runways and in this season's fashion magazines have their hair put up onto their heads in twists that resemble French curls. Anywhere from four to eights twists can be created for those with long hair, Siben said, while the twists will cover the heads of short-haired women.

Pigtails, which have been seen on a few Hollywood actresses recently, have taken centre stage in the world of hair design. An avant-garde look for the evening, it need not be restricted to the very young. Being able to wear pigtails is not determined by one's age, she says, but rather by one's personality and style.

Fashion dictates the type of hair-styling done at her salon. The first thing she asks a client is what they are wearing? "Hair must complement the outfit," she said.

Discreet hair accessories are the finishing touch in an evening hairdo. Siben carries a wide selection of them, including tiny bows and bobby pins with pearls or silver beads.

Silver hair accessories of all kinds — head bands, moon and star-shaped ornaments — are popular this fall and will add a little magic to an evening.

The sophisticated clientele of Anna K. (416-482-6280) prefer classic hairstyles that set the tone for elegant evenings.

If a client has long hair Anna Kandiotis suggests a French twist, an updated version of the French roll, with wisps of hair around the face. Or perhaps a simple chignon, pulled back into a low figure eight at the back of the head.

The timeless page boy, she said is a lovely evening style for shorter hair.

Generally short hairstyles are more feminine than they used to be, she says. "Short hair is no longer the boyish type of look. It's a little longer and softer around the face."

Now that short hair is a bit longer, hairstylists can create a greater variety of short evening hairdos. Kandiotis' repertoire includes a sleek assymetrical look, in which one side is pushed behind the ear.

The curly, scrunched look is definitely passe, she said, adding that "hair is a little more finished, smoother."

Her clients like to add some gold glitter or an elegant comb to their hair for a ball or party, but "nothing loud."

Tony Russo of Il Taglio Hair Design (416-224-1154) creates evening hairstyles that are romantic, sexy and sophisticated.

Long, loose hair falling past the shoulders is the epitome of the romantic and feminine look, one that Russo suggests for evening.

If his clients have some natural curl in their long hair, he knows how to bring out the best in it. He'll scrunch the hair but promises that "it doesn't make it frizzy, it smooths it out." He twists long straight hair from the inside out to give it body and lifts it up with hairspray.

For sophisticated looks, Russo puts long hair up into French twists or designs hairstyles that highlight elegant French braids.

Short hair, too, can be sexy when it is slicked back, he said, and "if it's straight you can wear the bangs a bit wispy and the top a bit spiked."

Bridal gift registries can supply no-guess shopping

By MARLA KAY
Special to The CJN

Bridal gift registry is a service that was created especially for engaged couples. It can be a wonderful aid to the bride and groom and their family and friends.

"It's a nice way to tell everyone what you really want and a wonderful way for you to receive exactly the gifts you've chosen," says Shanitha Muratori, sales and registry co-ordinator for William Ashley. "Registering is part of the fun of getting married and your friends will appreciate this no-guess way of gift shopping."

"At William Ashley," says Muratori, "our registry consultants are specially trained to assist a couple in designing tasteful table settings that will reflect their combined individuality and lifestyle. We are constantly working with England's and Europe's table top design centres in the development of dinnerware and crystal designs to suit the tastes of our customers of today.

"Some of the trends we're seeing from our couples this year is that they are seeking out dinner services that can be extended," says Muratori. "They want to create different looks by adding different accent pieces to their dinner service. Mixing and matching patterns adds flexibility. If they register for a simple pattern in the beginning, they can add finer designed pieces at a later date to create a more sophisticated look."

When you register at William Ashley's your selections are recorded in their computerized Bridal Registry. They advise your family and friends of your personal preferences. This will reduce the number of duplications by ensuring everything you receive is one of your personal choices. The selection of a gift can be made by telephone (964-2900) or by mail to either of their two locations, 55 Bloor St. W. or Square One Shopping Centre.

At Bronson's (905-881-9930), located at 2 Steeles Ave. West in North York, they boast of having a bridal registry that will list all of their soon-to-be-married couple's wants and desires for their future lives together when it comes to china, crystal and silver.

"We tend to specialize more in the contemporary, less formal looks of china, crystal and silver," says Ilene Bronsteter, Bronson's owner. "We find that today, our brides-to-be have more transitional tastes. They want china and glassware and silverware patterns that can be used not only in the kitchen but in the dining room as well. In many cases, we have to come up with pieces that will complement two sets of china for two households that are combining after marriage."

"We're very flexible with our registry," says Bronsteter. "We will work with our brides-to-be to ensure that they receive the patterns they want in the number of pieces they request."

Newlyweds now have a simple solution to a sometimes costly problem — their honeymoon. Too often the new bride and groom have had to strain their personal budget to finance their honeymoon or settle for something less than they had hoped for. As well, they faced the prospect of receiving gifts that were duplicates or destined for an attic and ultimately a garage sale.

Now there is an answer to these problems, thanks to a travel program instituted this year by CAA Travel. Under CAA's bridal registry program, couples planning a wedding simply register their dream honeymoon with CAA Travel much the same way they would register with a department store or a giftware shop.

Friends and relatives are notified of the honeymoon registry and offered the chance to pay for a portion of the cost of the honeymoon instead of buying a traditional wedding gift.

As an incentive, all contributors receive a discount on any trips they themselves may book through CAA Travel. After the wedding, CAA Travel presents the bride and groom with a confidential list of contributors so that each may be properly thanked.

"It's a winning solution for everyone," says Sheilagh MacDonald, vice-president of marketing for CAA Toronto. "The newlyweds are spared a hefty cost at the beginning of their marriage and their guests are offered discounts on any travel they may be planning.

"We see this as something that will soon become as traditional at weddings as flowers, the first dance and the cutting of the cake," adds MacDonald.

A paramount party service

By BARBARA SILVERSTEIN
Special to The CJN

It's a Friday afternoon and the staff at Paramount Entertainment have already organized the party gear for the weekend ahead. It has all been moved to the garage of the company's headquarters from a warehouse at another location.

On this particular weekend in August, Paramount is providing a variety of entertainment services for eight different events. The summers are a quieter time, William Kozma, the owner of Paramount, tells The CJN. "This is nothing to what we go through in other months."

Allison Kemper, director of the private events department is also on hand. She says anyone planning a party or a special event can find everything he or she will need at Paramount Entertainment.

The company provides a full range of party services which encompasses party planning and coordination; DJ packages with video, laser, and/or a variety of light shows and special effects; and party decor with balloons, theme party sets, props and centre-pieces.

Paramount also owns equipment such as karaoke machines, carnival games, and concession stands, which can supplement the entertainment or complement the theme of any party.

The company subcontracts work to comedians, clowns, impersonators and other live entertainers whenever necessary.

Paramount operates in an orderly fashion. Just check out the garage on a Friday afternoon. The gear for each of the eight parties has been separated into piles. The sound equipment — amplifiers, speakers, tape cases and red tool boxes with mikes and electric tape — is stacked neatly against a wall ready to be loaded onto a truck the next day.

There are several larger pieces propped against another wall for a corporate party with a carnival theme. These include snow cone and cotton candy machines, a soundproof karaoke studio, 20-foot truss lights, and 15-foot video screens. Paramount does the set-up and provides operators for all the equipment.

Kemper says the company prides itself on "being efficient, organized and professional." This is certainly reflected in their headquarters. The place is immaculate — even the garage.

To really get a feeling for the kind of integrated services the company offers, it's best to attend one of their parties. But if you don't have an invitation, watching one of the company's promotional videos in the board room is a pretty good alternative.

Click the button and there's a bar mitzvah reception on the television screen. The dance floor is crowded with elegantly dressed adults and teenagers dancing and laughing and basically having a great time. They appear to be in a night club, but the party is actually taking place at an upscale restaurant that has been transformed by Paramount to look like a night club.

Click. Another party. This time all the people are dressed casually and everyone is wearing Club Med T-shirts. It's a bat mitzvah. "She [the bat-mitzvah girl] loved Club Med. So we designed a party around that theme," Kozma says. Paramount even sent out the T-shirts — they were mailed with the invitations — to all the guests.

Originality is very important, Kemper says, because people want their party to be different. "It would diminish the significance of the event if all the parties were the same. Every party is individualized and personal."

It's her job to work with clients to plan their parties. She's also available to work as an on-sight party coordinator. One of the bat-mitzvahs she's planning is a rock and roll party complete with a '50s style dinner. There may even be an Elvis Presley impersonator.

Kemper says she can plan parties for any budget.

"Some people have champagne tastes on a Mountain Dew budget," Kozma adds. "And we try to help people achieve this as best we can."

Two years ago he and Mike Baskin, the general manager of Paramount, did most of the party coordinating. He says their most memorable party was a bar mitzvah with a Blue Jay theme held the night the team won their second World Series.

Kozma says the synagogue reception hall was transformed into a baseball diamond and the game was broadcast on 15-foot video screens so people could watch and dance. He says he turned up the volume in the ninth inning — everybody at the party saw Joe Carter hit the winning run.

Although Kozma works behind the scenes of many parties he is also one of the company's most popular DJs. He says he already has bookings for 1996. The DJ services are the backbone of Paramount Entertainment. The company, which was originally called Paramount Sound, started as a DJ company 13 years ago.

Kemper calls the DJs "the headliner act." The DJs are supposed to help the guests get involved in the party, Kozma says. "They (DJs) want to make sure ties are loosened, shoes are off and everybody's having a good time."

Clients usually contact Paramount about DJ packages and avail themselves of the other entertainment services closer to the event. Expanding the company's role reduces stress for the people making the party, Kozma says. "We give our customers peace of mind . . . their event is in capable hands. You can't put a dollar value on piece of mind."

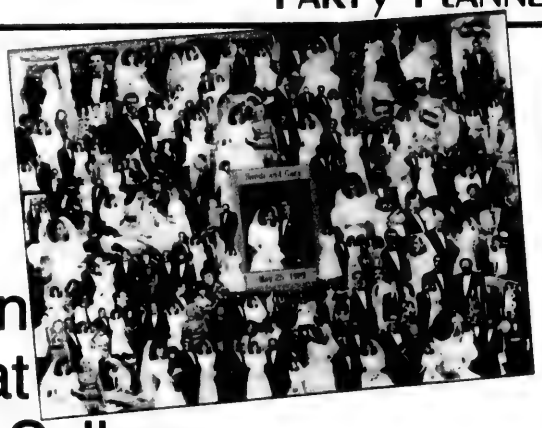
A picture is worth a million words at Custom Collage



If a picture's worth a thousand words, then a Custom Collage by Sandi Pelly (654-5178) must be worth a million.

"There is really no value that one can attach to their personal collection of family pictures, those special treasures that get passed down from generation to generation," explains Pelly.

Which is exactly how she felt three years ago, when her grandmother passed away, and she and her uncle spent hours looking at old family photos — pictures dating as far back as the 1890s. They shared stories, details and family history and, together, tried to figure out who the subjects of each photograph were. That experience became the impetus for Pelly to create something special out of these personal photographic memories.

It was then that she decided such family treasures belonged not in an old shoe box or in an upstairs attic but hanging on a prominent wall for everyone to appreciate. With hundreds of pictures to frame, the idea of a collage seemed like a perfect solution, inspired by her husband Gary, an Ontario College of Art graduate.

Everyone who saw Pelly's collage — which ended up being an overwhelming 3' x 5' — were so intrigued by it that her own pet project quickly turned into a viable business and she began to create collages for others.

According to Pelly, her custom collages, which can range from 11" x 14" for $89 up to 20' x 30' for $225, make wonderful gifts for special occasions — birthdays, bar and bat mitzvahs, graduations, weddings, retirement and other milestones.

"What I create is a visual family tree — a piece of family history that everyone can share and enjoy. My collages tell a story, and become a conversation piece wherever they are hung — in the home, at a function, in an office," she explains. "My collages provide families with a chance to revisit their past and to ensure that the next generation is familiar with who and where they came from."

For those who are interested in having a collage made, all they need to do is gather up a lot of pictures — anywhere from 100 to 200 depending on the size they want. Pelly recommends using a mix of old and new, black and white and color, large and small photographs because a "smorgasbord" looks best.

"The end result is not just a bunch of pictures thrown together. I mount them carefully and artistically on a mount board, laminate the collage with a protective coating and put it on a pine frame. It's designed to be hands-on so even kids with sticky fingers can touch the pictures as they often love to do," she says.

Pelly, whose professional background lies in research for social and health care related projects, says she's enjoying this new business because it allows her to explore her creative side. Coming from a creative family — her mother Kayla Armel was also an Ontario College of Art graduate — she looks forward to spending more time on this business as demand continues to grow.

Her greatest joy is hearing the reactions of her collage recipients — particularly one client who received a custom collage at his 40th wedding anniversary, stared at it for several minutes and cried. The collages encourage people to take a trip down memory lane — an emotional and joyous ride for most.

Consultants soothe the way

By RUTH SCHWEITZER
Special to The CJN

The bride panicked and her mother got hysterical when fuchsia lipstick was smudged on the bridal gown with the wedding ceremony only an hour away.

Then consultant Heidi Gruenspan (905-738-5030) calmly stepped in and quickly removed the offending stain.

"Everything gets very hectic about 45 minutes before the ceremony," Gruenspan said. "If something goes wrong — if somebody gets sick — and it does happen, there has to be someone hands-on to take care of it."

Gruenspan has helped take care of sick children and sewed up bridal gowns at the last minute. "There hasn't been a wedding yet that I haven't sewed at," she said.

Gruenspan's role at a party — birthday, bar or bat mitzvah or wedding — is to ensure the event goes according to plan and to take care of any problems so the family is free to enjoy themselves.

She became a consultant after helping many of her friends with their weddings and discovering that she loved being part of someone else's simchah. "You're seeing people at their happiest point. It's a nice time to be involved with people."

Once clients engage Gruenspan's services she is available by phone "24 hours a day" for advice, counselling or to give them telephone numbers of tradespeople — florists, caterers, rental companies, or even clergy for those who are not marrying in a synagogue. But "sometimes they want just an uinbiased ear to listen to," she said.

Clients can leave all of their party and wedding planning to her. Recently a bride and groom from New York decided to hold their wedding in Toronto, and Gruenspan "did everything from flowers, catering, the rehearsal — the works."

She assists with speech writing, attends the rehearsal and, on the wedding day, arrives first thing in the morning to dress the bride. She comes well-prepared, bringing along a kit that contains everything from panty hose, shoe polish and deodorant to a steamer and curling iron. "Anything that is in your house," she joked, "is in my kit."

Bridal and party consultant Florence Wilder (416-222-2977) is a people person and the calm-in-the-storm at a wedding.

"There is a lot of stress in planning a wedding," she said, "and I'm there to keep everyone calm, relaxed, and enjoying their special day."

At the initial meeting with the family she recommends party professionals along with places for the bridal party to go for bridal accessories. Wilder and the family also discuss the schedule of the wedding day. After that, she is available by telephone as many times as they require. "I'm as close as the phone," she says.

At the rehearsal hall, which she books for the family, Wilder takes the bridal party through their steps. They walk down the aisle while she offers suggestions on pacing and positioning, and she fills them in on the wedding-day schedule, as well as details of the ceremony.

On the wedding day, Wilder comes equipped with her "Mary Poppins" bag that contains everything from needles and thread, a steam iron and candy and toys for children. She arrives an hour before the photographer to help the bride dress, coordinates the day's event, and stays until the bride throws her bouquet.

Wilder has acted as a consultant at many bar and bat mitzvahs and at parties of every kind, including a Toronto surprise party for a family who lives in Winnipeg. What a surprise it was!

Wilder's consultant services are available for parties of all sizes. "Nothing is too big or too small for me to handle," she said. "I enjoy seeing people happy and planning a beautiful wedding, and that's what you'll get from me."

Floral displays co-ordinate a room

By CAROLYN BLACKMAN
Special to The CJN

How do you change the mood of a room in one easy step? Add some flowers, of course.

"One flower arrangement can totally change a room. It can brighten it up, complement it and tie everything together," says Frances Di Sibio, owner of FD Florists (638-1690).

She stresses that a florist can do up a room beautifully on the smallest budget. "Come in, tell us how much you can spend and we can put something together. We can use from one to a series of arrangements using, for example, the lower-priced mini-carnations. That way, we stick to a budget and the room still looks great."

Angela Surdi, owner of The Toronto Florist Shop Inc. ((905) 764-6332), says budget is a top priority when planning the flowers for a party and concurs that something beautiful can be done on any budget. "We've done a wedding with a floral budget of $225. For that amount they received the bride's bouquet, four attendants' bouquets, the flower girl's bouquet, nine boutonneres and seven coursages.

"A lot of people have a phobia about carnations because they think they are a budget flower," Surdi continues, "but the right color carnation, such as burgundy, can look fabulous. At one shower we used burgundy carnations and people thought they were roses."

Cheryl Bernknopf of Flowers with Flair (498-8205) advises people to comparison shop before they pick a florist. "Get recommendations and go out and look at another job. It helps to have some idea of what you want before you go in, so you won't be talked into something you don't want or can't afford."

Surdi says that she always does sample centrepieces so nothing comes as a surprise. "It is difficult to visualize a centre-piece, even from a photograph. I want my customers to know exactly what they're getting.

"It also helps to come in at least six months in advance before the function, especially for a large wedding so you can digest all the information and really see what you're getting before you make a choice. You do not want to have to go into a florist and choose immediately because you are pressed for time," Surdi says.

The party's color scheme can play a large role in deciding what flowers to use. At a recent gold and white wedding, Surdi used white flowers exclusively. "We used lilies and orchids and the look was spectacular. For a burgundy color scheme we could use rubrum lilies and for deep orange or deep yellow we could use orange lilies or yellow roses. The flowers bring out the other colors in the room magnificently."

As for deciding between silk and fresh flowers, Di Sibio says that some people prefer silk if they are afraid the weather is too hot or cold for the fresh flowers to stand up well.

"For an indoor party, however, unless there are allergies, fresh flowers work well. Silk flowers are more expensive, but they do last forever and for those on a budget, the silk flowers can be taken down and returned to the store."

Di Sibio says that those who want a lasting memory of their party can preserve some flowers by drying them. "Hang the flowers upside down in a dark room until all the water has dripped out, then dip them in glycerine and even add some fragrance if desired. You've got flowers forever."

Bernknopf says that florists never stop learning. "There are always design and continuing education courses to take to make sure we are up-to-date on everything. Customers want a florist that is current on all the latest information."

When making a simchah or party, "Choosing your photographer is one of the most important decisions you have to make as you will be recording the most special occasions in your life," says Howard Levitt of Howard Levitt Photography (636-8999).

Levitt says "photography has not only been my career for 28 years but my passion," and emphasizes that experience is important when choosing a photographer.

"There are no special chances, no opportunity to re-stage the event or re-enact the feelings," he says.

Levitt's portrait studio specializes in weddings and bar and bat mitzvah parties. He believes that even in these difficult economic times "there are no short cuts to quality" but like most professional photographers, he continues to create high quality photographs at the most competitive prices.

George Evashuk of A La Carte Photography (961-1048) has been a newspaper, commercial and advertising photographer for three decades. In 1979 he began his own business. Along with portraits, which he says are his love, he began to specialize in wedding photography.

He recently introduced a new package called the "simchah special" which is aimed at bar and bat mitzvah and anniversary parties. His specialty is to cover the celebration in a newspaper style. Using a small camera, he takes candid action shots. "I believe that this more accurately covers an event."

Evashuk has taken black-and-white portraits of photographer Yousuf Karsh, Nobel Prize winner Dr. John Polanyi, and writer Mordechai Richler. They will soon be published in a coffee table book.

Mark Stern of Mark Stern Photography (771-0081) believes personality is a deciding factor in choosing a photographer. Stern, who also specializes in bar and bat mitzvah, wedding pictures and portraits of children and families, opened a studio three and a half years ago, but has been a professional photographer for more than 14 years.

Stern says it is important to take time to get to know the client and their tastes: "Then it is a mix between my professional style and the client's expectations." When photographing children, you must be able to communicate at their level.

It is obvious, when interviewing these three professional phtographers, that they enjoy their work. As Stern says, "I enjoy watching my clients enjoying the final product and the realization that they are ecstatic about the results.

Levitt says photographs are "freeze frames" of memorable moments in a lifetime. "They are a tangible record of the passages of a family, to be shared over and over, evoking poignant memories and favorite stories."

Inviting PARTY Invitations

Invitation by Muroff Impressions Ltd.

By SYLVIA PAPERNICK
Special to The CJN

The invitation is the guest's first impression of a party, setting the tone for the event.

Muroff Impressions Ltd., Stationery Plus, and A & D Invitations all offer custom stationery that helps make that first impression the one you choose.

Bea and Barry Muroff of Muroff Impressions Ltd. (416-633-4491) can take care of all stationery needs for your simchah, from the invitation envelopes to the response cards. They print invitations, seating cards, thank you notes, and just about anything else needed for a simchah.

Barry explains that their business thrives with a combination of good price, service and knowledge.

"People know that if they want something different, they can come to me, I've got it. If we make a promise, it's going to be kept," he says.

They have a large selection of catalogues and imported stocks to choose from. Shower cards are specifically designed for different types of bridal showers. (Whether the theme of the shower is ABC, time, room, Jack and Jill or traditional, there's something for everyone.)

The Muroffs typeset seating cards and envelopes in a calligraphy font. Using a plotter, the customer chooses from 51 different colors to match a color scheme. The plotter automatically centres the type, which is good for balance. This is a skill that only a seasoned calligrapher can do freehand.

Some invitations are designed to accompany windowed envelopes, which indicate to the guest immediately what the card is for. The Muroffs brought this stationery feature to Toronto.

Their repertoire of Judaica in print is excellent. They can provide different Jewish symbols or Hebrew script for invitations, as well as personalized kippot for a wedding or bar mitzvah. Kippot are available in a wide range of materials such as embossed suede and leather, satin, cotton, velvet or corduroy, and come in a complete palette of colors.

In addition to the traditional invitations, black or grey type on a white background, they offer something a little different. Bar and bat mitzvah seating cards come cut in shapes to reflect the child's interests. Baseballs, basketballs, spaceships, boats are a few from a large selection. If a youngster always dreamed of being a singer, mock CD jackets bearing his or her photo can be made up as invitations. Seating cards are disguised as sports cards for a bar mitzvah, complete with the bar mitzvah boy's photo on it, and even his "stats."

The same sports card can also be used as a business card for someone who works closely with the sports industry or is a die-hard sports fan. Gilda Lefton of Stationery Plus has produced just such business cards. Lefton (905-881-5588) has done a lot of innovative things in her 15 years working in the stationery industry. Stationery Plus really is stationery, plus a whole lot more. In addition to social stationery, she provides for the commercial and promotional markets. She has printed letterheads, envelopes and business cards. Accessory items for businesses are one of her specialties, items like embossed calculators, matches or decks of cards are some which companies will give out to clients.

Lefton knows the importance of a smart invitation. "It's one of the few, if not the only, tangible thing from a party," she remarks. Party favors and accessories are another of her fortes; she produces T-shirts with unique designs, incorporating the theme of the function. Personalized containers or mugs double as centrepieces and party favors. She will even arrange to have each guest take home a photo gift book, containing snaps taken at the event

Stationery Plus carries an exclusive line of seating cards and can arrange for a sign-in card as a memento of an affair, one that is mounted in such a way that it doesn't get damaged throughout the party.

The wording of an invitation is an aspect that Lefton spends a lot of time on, ensuring that the tone and language used are appropriate.

"That's something that shouldn't be underestimated," she says.

Some of the more unusual and beautiful invitations that Stationery Plus has produced have had film overlays done in gold moiree, custom-painted ribbon or custom-made Japanese boxes to encase the invitations. Something a little different is often what is desired. Lefton is quick to note though, "We don't have to sacrifice quality for price: we come in under budget often too."

It was something different that originally got Mark of A & D Invitations (905-731-5864) interested in the stationery business. When looking for invitations for his own wedding, he found it difficult to find someone who could provide an invitation that was both in English and Yiddish. Printing in a second language is not so uncommon today. A & D Invitations offers a full selection of bar and bat mitzvah, wedding and anniversary invitations, and cards for any occasion, with the emphasis on customer service.

Invitation by Stationery Plus.

Clients have the choice of meeting with Mark at his home or he will make a housecall, bringing samples with him. Similarly, he will deliver the printed invitations to your home. Each invitation is first inspected before being handed over to the client.

"I prefer to give proper service," explains Mark. Clients are provided with spreadsheets so they can keep track of the status of their invitations and respond cards throughout the course of party planning. He will even mail out the invitations if asked.

When addressing envelopes, he carefully matches the ink on the back (return address) to the front of the envelope. His selection of envelopes and cards varies from exotic mirror paper or rice paper to a novel sheet of plastic.

All of the above stationery companies offer their custom stationery needs at discounted prices, contributing their knowledge and personal service to make you look good — and not just on paper.

Caterers follow the latest trends

Food for thought

By CAROLYN BLACKMAN
Special to The CJN

Guests at a wedding, bar mitzvah or large party do not often realize how much caterers actually do beyond preparing and serving the food.

"We can help plan the whole affair, from booking the venue to finding florists, musicians and photographers. The caterer can be involved as much or as little as the customer wants. If desired, they can serve as a one-stop shop," says Lisa Wagman of Peter Graben Caterers (510-1818), who cater to house parties as well as at such places as Beth David B'nai Israel Beth Am, Beth Tzedec, Estates of Sunnybrook, Casa Loma, Art Gallery of Ontario and the Royal Ontario Museum and Planetarium.

Joe Elmaleh of Tri-Elm Caterers (631-7322) concurs that caterers can design the entire function. As caterer to the B'nai Brith Building and the newly renovated Borochov Centre, Elmaleh says that helping to arrange for the necessary professionals such as florists and musicians is a great time saver for the customer.

"We know who is on the market — who is good, reliable and good value for the money so our customers do not have to waste valuable time shopping around. At the party itself a representative is present from beginning to end to make sure everything is running smoothly. We can organize the entire evening — coordinate the speeches, guide the musicians and take care of any problems that may pop up. Our job is to make everything flow so the hosts have no worries.

"As for house parties, we bring everything to the customer's home including serving staff, tables and chairs, linens, cutlery and decorations. All the food is warmed in our own warmers so we do not have to use their kitchen. The only thing the host has to worry about is who to invite to the party."

When planning the menu it is important to sit down with the caterer and discuss the budget as well as what they think the guests would enjoy eating. Leslie Firestone, catering manager for Sam Firestone Caterers (782-8022) who cater at Shaarei Shomayim Synagogue, has begun to plan simplified menus, offering customers the latest food trends and a broader range of price options.

"Most families have moved from traditional Jewish menus to a more upscale modern kosher. Children's menus once dominated by hot dogs and fries have graduated to fajitas and Chinese food. Creating original menus does not necessarily mean fancy names or spectacular presentations — just a fresh twist to preparing favorite foods."

Wagman says that it is essential for caterers to keep up with the trend towards low fat, high fibre diets.

"Side dishes such as three types of rice with leeks; sauteed snowpeas, water chestnuts and beansprouts; wild rice and potato croquettes or sauteed sugar snap peas and peppers are light yet innovative dishes. Those that want chicken can order lemon chicken, orange chicken in phyllo or chicken breast stuffed with spinach and elephant garlic. Fish dishes include halibut wontons as an hors-d'oeuvre or grilled sesame salmon as a main course."

Vegetarian wedding

At a vegetarian wedding, Tri-Elm Caterers included such items as mushroom-vegetable turnovers, hummos and creamy eggplant salads and stir fried vegetables and rice. "Individual guests have to be catered to as well, so if one guest is vegetarian or needs a low salt diet, we are prepared for that as well. Customers have to remember to convey all special requests."

Most important of all, says Firestone, is for caterers to please their customers. "Making people happy is our biggest reward. If we can put smiles on our customers' faces, we've done our job."

PARTY PLANNER

Some friends, some beer and the mighty Q

By JOSEPH SERGE
Special to The CJN

Sometimes throwing a party doesn't mean hiring an expensive band, renting a hall, consulting with a party consultant and using the services of an underwear coordinator. Sometimes, a phonecall to some close friends, a trip to the beerstore and a cacophonous dose for the Mighty Q is all it takes.

Rocking hard for almost 20 years, Q107 FM is the Number 1 rock station for 18- to 49-year-olds. Its success lies in a versatile mixture of classic rock and so-called alternative rock.

"Basically it's anything from Alice in Chains to Led Zeppelin," says Q107 assistant program director and afternoon host Joey Vendetta, 29, an eight-year veteran of the radio station. "You'll hear The Who, The Beatles, Nirvana and the Smashing Pumpkins."

Q107 has a number of programs to appeal to its diverse audience. Psychedelic Sundays, heard every Sunday afternoon, is one of its most popular. Using the term "psychedelic" rather loosely, this format allows for anything from the late '60s to the mid-70s. Anything from Buffalo Springfield and King Crimson to Pink Floyd and the recently reunited Traffic.

Blues fans always thrill to the station's weekly Blues Show, heard every Sunday evening from 9 p.m. to 11 p.m. Metalheads can slam their heads to the Metal show hosted by Vendetta himself Saturday nights from 10 p.m. to midnight. And the more current fans can listen to the countdown every Saturday morning and evening. They can also vote for their favorite contemporary tunes on The Top Ten at Ten heard every weekday at 10 p.m.

Joey Vendetta

Even unheard-of bands get their time on Q107 every Tuesday from 11 p.m. to midnight on Discovery, a show dedicated to independent acts. And every day at 6 p.m., Vendetta and John Derringer co-host the Six O'Clock Report, a loose, news-style information hour where anything can and will happen.

As assistant program director, Vendetta is one of the people who decide just what songs and what bands get on the air. "We have a music meeting every Tuesday and listen to all the current music," Vendetta says of the decision-making process. "It's a combination of sales, chart position and the formatic appropriateness of the song; whether it sounds great on the radio."

Vendetta insists personal tastes don't influence their decisions. "We still play it whether we like it or not. We play what we think our audience will like." But he agrees his tastes are similar to those of his audience. "I'm 29. I am our audience."

Critics have sometimes accused the station of being a bandwagon station, picking up acts only after they've achieved some popularity. The normally sedate, wrongly-named Vendetta gets animated when his beloved station comes under attack.

"I disagree completely," he says, his bass voice quivering in anger. "The Metal Show played them (alternative bands like Nirvana and Soundgarden) before they were popular." The Six O'clock Report, he says, always debuts new bands. "If it's good we'll play it. We were the first station to play Guns 'N' Roses and the Black Crowes.

"Critics can say what they like, but in the end we're a commercial radio station and we're in the business to make money."

Q107's homegrown contest is a testimony to the station's search for new talent. Held annually, the contest invites unsigned bands to send tapes; the best bands, in addition to winning prizes, get a song released on the homegrown album. Bands like Honeymoon Suite, Harum Scarum, Rick Santers, Wild T & The Spirit have been among those featured in the past 15 years.

New bands like Stone Temple Pilots are also heard regularly on Q107. They and countless others can be seen at nightclubs mushrooming across the city. "The Toronto nightclub scene is one of the best in North America," Vendetta says. "It seems like there's a club opening up every five minutes."

Q107 DJs are at these nightclubs regularly, hosting fun-filled nights of pounding music, big hair, leather and sweat. Some of these Q107-hosted events include Saturdays at RPM, Mondays at the Phoenix and Tuesdays at Casablanca. "They're nights of fun; we play music, people dance and party, and we give out tons of prizes," says Vendetta.

Vendetta uses these events to gauge the popularity of current tunes on the Q107 playlist. "We try stuff out and see what reaction we get, whether or not they get up and dance."

Vendetta has interviewed many rock 'n' roll legends throughout his career at Q107, and lists Robbie Robertson, the erstwhile Band member, as one of his favorite interviews. "He's just a really nice guy, real easy to talk to." He also cites Aerosmith ("Really entertaining"), Black Crowes ("They speak their mind"); and Van Halen ("They're just plain kooky!") as some of his other favorites.

"Basically the bigger the stars are, the nicer they are," he says.

Like anyone else, he's had a few embarrasing moments on the job, like the time when Slash, the hatted guitar player of Guns 'N' Roses, swore during an interview. "There's nothing you can do about that apart from trying to beep the swear words out. Even CBC has people swear sometimes."

Occasionally, he says, you get dead air when commercials don't play, or the annoying squeal of a skipping CD but, "nothing has ever happened to me on the air that's made me want to quit my job."

Vendetta began his career as a volunteer when he was 20, helping out and occasionally reviewing concerts live from the site. He climbed up the ladder quickly, becoming assistant music director, music director and interm program director when Q107 icon Bob Mackowicz left to pursue other interests.

Being assistant program director suits him fine as it allows him to host the afternoon show (daily at 2 p.m.). "I prefer hosting [to administrative tasks], it's a lot more fun."

To future DJs he has this warning: Be ready to work for nothing. "It's not all glamor," he says. "There's not much money at the start and it's a long ride to the top."

He believes the future bodes well for the Q. Its format continues to appeal to a growing generation of teenagers. He cites, for example, Pink Floyd's recent three-night gig at Exhibition Stadium with 180,000 concert goers, mostly teens, as proof that classic rock is here to stay.

"We will continue to be reflective of what rock listeners want to listen to. As long as there's rock, there'll be Q107."

Accommodating party venues

When it comes to throwing a party, there is no place more majestic than Toronto's own Casa Loma.

For any type of reception or dinner — bar or bat mitzvah, wedding, graduation or other special occasion — Casa Loma offers you the exclusive use of three charming main floor rooms for anywhere from 125 to 1,200 guests.

"When you have a party here, you really get the 'royal treatment.' We book only one function at a time so that all our attention is focused on you and your guests, ensuring that your party runs smoothly beyond your expectations," says Casa Loma sales and promotions manager Karen O'Grady (923-1171).

"Aside from the exclusivity of our rooms, the physical structure of the castle makes Casa Loma a very unusual place to have a party. The 60-foot oak beam ceilings, large fireplace, gargoyles, and dark mahogany trim make it a very grand atmosphere to celebrate in."

Built between 1911 and 1914 by Canadian industrialist and financier Sir Henry Pellatt, the building captures many architectural elements of the Norman, Gothic and Romanesque styles. "The furnishings, fabrics and artwork are among the best that money could buy," says O'Grady.

At Casa Loma, there is one in-house caterer and five other approved caterers to choose from, depending on your function, style and tastes.

In addition, kosher catering under the supervision of the Kashruth Council of Toronto is available upon request.

"In a castle setting, people let their imagination go. We've had some pretty interesting themes, including a couple who got married as Maid Marion and the knight. At Casa Loma, anything goes . . . within reason," explains O'Grady.

Another interesting party venue is The Montecassino Place Suites Hotel, located on Chesswood Drive at Sheppard. In addition to the original banquet hall run by the Varone family, the five-floor, four star hotel has given a whole new dimension to special functions such as weddings and bar mitzvahs.

"Now, everything you need is located under one roof — three fabulous ballrooms — with retractable walls — that hold up to 1,500 people, beautiful table settings, comfortable accommodations for your out-of-town guests and exquisite international cuisine prepared in the hotel's permanent kosher kitchen [under the supervision of the Kashruth Council]," says the hotel's exclusive kosher caterer, Joanne Katz of Regal Kosher Caterers (630-8100).

"Montecassino offers a very affordable alternative to synagogue functions. Because we have a permanent kosher kitchen, there are no premiums paid here. We even supply all the liquor, wines and soft drinks. And we approach kosher food with a certain style, offering creations that include Oriental, Middle East and Continental dishes."

Interaction is the name of the DJ game

By BARBARA SILVERSTEIN
Special to The CJN

On a warm summer evening in August employees from a multinational advertising company — some dressed in elaborate costumes — are dancing to reggae and calypso music in the ballroom of the swank Boulevard Club. The ballroom, has been transformed into a Caribbean island, complete with palm trees, and tropical flowers.

Mike Heindl, owner of A Spectrum of Sound (416-754-3600), is the DJ for the evening. But he's providing more than the music. He's organizing the evening's entertainment, most of which will be in keeping with the Caribbean theme.

When people line up for the buffet, Heindl starts asking them trivia questions to stagger the line-up. Later, he has groups of people up on stage playing Name that Caribbean Tune. And once the dancing starts, he tries to get as many people involved as he can: there's a conga line, a limbo dance, and costume and dance contests.

DJs should be interactive; they should be involved with the guests, Heindl says. "My philosophy is you don't want the DJ to be up there as the star. We want the guests to be the stars." He says his goal is to make people relax and enjoy themselves.

At bar and bat mitzvahs or other parties with a lot of younger people Heindl says he organizes contests — he can even set up a karoake machine — to keep the children interested and involved, and to break the ice between the boys and the girls so they'll dance with each other.

He says he can tell if a party is going well by the number of people left at the end of the evening. "If you start with 120 people and 100 people are still at the party at 10 to 1 a.m., you know you've done your job — people have stayed."

Heindl, 44, has been a DJ since 1967. His experience is an advantage, he says, because he's familiar with a wider range of music, and he can read a crowd and make adjustments if the dance floor is empty.

He has 14 DJs working for him, all of whom have been trained to be interactive. The price he charges for the DJs will vary with their experience: $450 for DJs who have worked one or two years, and $650 for DJs with over 10 years of experience. But he doesn't hire teenagers, he says, because he doesn't think they have the maturity to run an adult party.

At the Caribbean party some of the guests take a breather in the lobby. Sam Welch, a guest, says he likes the way the DJ interacts with the crowd. "It's almost like watching a live show with the level of interaction."

Shane Cross praises Heindl. "It's a fabulous time. He (the DJ) really reads the crowd well. He seems to know what an audience wants."

Ed McMurtry, the owner of Mister Disc Jockey (905-886-4488) and Edwin Allen Productions, like Heindl, requires his DJs to have a certain level of maturity and experience. He says the age of his DJs is important to the clients he serves. "We do a lot of private parties in Forest Hill and Post Road, where they don't want a kid showing up."

The ages of the six DJs in his company range from 27 to 40. McMurtry, 34, has been in this business for 15 years as have many of his DJs. Prices at Mister Disc Jockey start at $849.

He says his DJs are performers, but they're accessible to the guests. They use state-of-the-art equipment and they can do light and laser shows, he says. The company also does major productions for big corporate parties and conventions, which take weeks of preparation and a team of extra staff to carry out.

McMurtry says his DJs have a reputation as entertainers. Large corporations operating on smaller budgets are cutting back on live music and booking DJs from his company to fill that gap, he says. "They don't have the budget for a live band, but they don't want your garden variety DJ either. We fall between."

McMurtry's DJs have a reputation for being very interactive, but being interactive does not just pertain to microphone work; it's having the guests perform for the crowd, he says.

"Our idea of interactive is bringing people up on stage. . . . We choreograph a routine for them (the guests) to perform. Often the people who are most apprehensive about going up on stage are the one who don't want to get off."

McMurtry says he was recently booked at a very traditional Jewish wedding at a synagogue — the bride wanted him, but her mother wanted a live band.

"She [the mother] turned out to be one of the most active participants on stage. At the end of the evening she shook my hand and said, 'My daughter was right. A band would not have done what you did. You were involved with everybody.' "

Entertainment...

By BARBARA SILVERSTEIN
Special to The CJN

Family and friends recently gathered to celebrate Louisa Hostick's birthday. In the middle of the party a stranger in a top hat and tails, was ushered into the room.

It was Arnie the ham, the singing telegram man.

He kibitzed with Hostick, presenting her with balloons and a red silk rose. And then he serenaded her in a rich tenor voice, with the birthday telegram he had written especially for her. To the tune of New York, New York he sang about Hostick's grandchildren, her shopping sprees, her trips to Vegas, and her love of Black Jack.

"He knows everything about me," she said laughing.

"He was a lot of fun," Hostick later told The CJN.

Her husband Milton agreed. "He's very funny and very unusual," he said, displaying a handful of Arnie's business cards. "I'm going to hand these out to my friends."

Arny Wiskin said he loves doing singing telegrams. "It's a raw form of entertainment. It really appeals to me. You go into an office or a party and do a show with nothing but yourself." He also prides himself on the visual esthetics of the telegram.

Wiskin writes the lyrics for the telegram from information given to him by family or friends. Then he hand-prints the telegram and decorates it with colored markers.

"That's what makes mine extra personal," he said. "I like to say that my telegrams are more than just a telegram. They're a work of art."

Wiskin has been singing in the Toronto area for more than 30 years. When he was in high school, the National Council of Jewish Women gave him a grant to study music. He played in some local theatre productions and then began singing at weddings and bar mitzvahs with a number of different local bands. He does a solo act now at smaller parties.

Wiskin has also done some songwriting and he recorded a record album and several singles in the 1970s. He wrote Kineina Hora, one of the songs he recorded with the Stan Hiltz Orchestra, on their Kosher Style album. The Kineina Hora is still played by many DJs at bar mitzvahs, he said.

Wiskin answered an ad for a singing telegram performer 14 years ago while he was still singing in a band. Eventually he gave up the band to do telegrams full-time and he's been doing them ever since.

Arnie the Ham, the Singing Telegram Man.

Last year he opened his own company, calling it, Arnie the Ham the Singing Telegram Man (635-6925). He charges $60 for delivering telegrams in a top hat and tails and an additional $10 to come as a gorilla in a tux costume.

Wiskin said singing telegrams — most people video them — are popular for birthdays and anniversaries as well as weddings. He is asked to do the wedding telegram when everybody sits down for the meal, usually after the first blessing.

"It's very romantic for a groom to send a singing telegram to his bride," he said.

He has also delivered telegrams at bar mitzvahs, and for newborns in hospitals. He has even done wedding proposals.

Wiskin said one man asked him to deliver the proposal at the corner of Bloor and Yonge, the place he first met his girl friend.

"As I'm singing, he gets down on his knee and puts a ring on her finger. She's crying," he said.

Another man who hired him to do the proposal in the gorilla costume had him do a repeat performance at the wedding reception. "He told the guests, 'I want you to see the unusual way I proposed to my bride,' " Wiskin said. "The audience loved it. They really laughed."

And humor is what makes singing telegrams entertaining, he said. "A singing telegram is 80 per cent comedy-kibitzing and 20 per cent voice."

He said making people laugh is very rewarding. "I love making people laugh. Singing telegrams are a great way to make them laugh. I sparkle-up and I brighten their day, and it makes my day."

MIND MAGIC!

By BARBARA SILVERSTEIN
Special to The CJN

Tessa, a psychic entertainer, was not quite ready to give up her day job 10 years ago. She was a legal secretary during the day and she was part of a magic act in the evenings.

When she and her partner Jeff Evanson were offered a lucrative contract with the Ministry of Energy — three weeks of full-time work performing magic at the CNE — Tessa had to choose between her jobs.

"I was scared," she said. "I had three days to make up my mind."

She decided to quit the secretarial job. The CNE contract was too good an opportunity to pass up, she said. "I felt I had to take the chance to see where it would lead me." It led her to a career as an entertainer.

Tessa became interested in magic after meeting Evanson and they have been performing together since they met in 1983.

Evanson started doing magic when he was a teenager. He got his first job performing magic 21 years ago when he was

...shows and thrills

When Evanson and Tessa first started working together, they were illusionists with a magic act. But they switched to psychic entertainment in 1987.

Today they refer to themselves as mentalists, a term which applies to any performer using the mind as a medium for entertainment. Evanson and Tessa do a mind-reading act as well as one-on-one psychic readings.

The mind reading is a vaudeville act which they have revived. It was originally developed by Tommy and Liz Tucker, who performed the act towards the end of vaudeville. "They're the inspiration for what we are doing today," Tessa said.

She and Evanson discovered the act in 1987. They were working on a cruise ship when they first heard the Tucker performance on an audio cassette.

"We could picture in our minds what they were doing," Evanson said. "We thought it was unbelievable."

He and Tessa contacted the Tuckers who had retired and were living north of Boston. They had wanted to pass the act on by teaching it to somebody, but "no one could pick it up," Evanson said.

The Tuckers became Tessa and Evanson's mentors, giving them instruction by correspondence. They spoke on the phone, they wrote letters, and they sent videos back and forth. "Without them we would not have been able to figure it out," Tessa said.

Tommy Tucker died suddenly in 1991 — he was in his late 80s — several months before Tessa and Evanson were scheduled to visit him. They did meet Liz Tucker who was 20 years Tommy's junior, and they continue to be close friends.

Tessa and Evanson said their act was an instant success on the cruise ships because it's very interactive. "It was just incredible. People talked about nothing else," Evanson said. "People get involved. They're part of the show. Magic is strictly visual."

They have appeared on several local television shows like the Dini Petty Show and Eye on Toronto. Petty has invited them to her show four times.

"She wants to keep having us until she figures out how we do it," Evanson said. "Before Christmas we asked her [Petty] to think about what she wanted for Christmas. Tessa guessed what Dini wanted — a telescope. She couldn't believe it."

"I was able to tell her what it was by concentrating on it and it worked," Tessa said.

A lot of people book them because the act is very different, Evanson said. "They're not going to see it anywhere else." To supplement the mind-reading act, he and Tessa also do psychic readings — she does palmistry and Taro cards and he does numerology. "It's always the most popular thing of the evening no matter where we perform," she said.

The couple said their act lends itself to any venue and a wide age range. They have performed at many corporate and personal parties, conventions, weddings and bar mitzvahs.

"When you think of the party, we provide a great evening of entertainment," Evanson said.

Life-like caricatures

By BARBARA SILVERSTEIN
Special to The CJN

Going to visit Rae Goldman (250-8672), the popular portrait and caricature artist, is like taking a trip to an art gallery. Her home is filled with art.

Oil and acrylic paintings, pastel and charcoal drawings hang on all the available wall space, while dozens of pictures are propped up against the wall on the floor.

There is also a lot of hand-painted clothing: the ties are displayed on the coffee table, and the T-shirts and sweatshirts hang on a rack in the sun room. And then there are the greeting cards . . .

Goldman, a mother of three, and grandmother of seven, has been painting and drawing since she was three years old. "I do it morning to night," she told The CJN. She sells her paintings to local galleries, and the O'Keefe Centre.

But she is best known for her portraits. She is often hired to do portraits and caricatures — she is paid by the hour — at corporate functions, birthday and anniversary parties, and simchahs.

People sometimes give portraits as gifts. She pointed to a caricature of a man, done in pastels, which will be presented to him at his 80th birthday party. She said she is often asked to do caricatures of the bar or bat mitzvah boy or girl, or of wedding couples; these are later signed by all the guests.

Goldman said she has always been fascinated by faces and she loves drawing them. "When I'm away on holidays somewhere and I don't do it I miss it," she said. "So I do the waiters. Not for the money. I just want to do it."

Goldman did her art as a hobby — she did portraits on weekends — until 25 years ago when she left her job as a stenographer to become a full-time artist. The company she had been working for paid her to do portraits at a store opening. She loved the work so much she quit her job shortly after, she said.

Goldman started knocking on doors to find work doing portraits. She had to muster up the courage to approach people, she said. "You want it so bad you do it." She has done portraits in many places, which include Simpsons, Ontario Place and the Inn on the Park.

Montreal Jews mourn slain Israeli soldiers

By DAVID LAZARUS
CJN Staff Reporter

MONTREAL — With only a few hours notice, more than 1,000 Montreal Jews crowded into the Beth Israel Beth Aaron Synagogue last Saturday night to memorialize Nachshon Waxman and Nir Poraz.

Poraz was the Israeli commando who led the failed raid intended to free Waxman, who had been kidnapped by Hamas.

Among the seven speakers was Rabbi Chananya Berzon of the Young Israel Synagogue of Chomedey, whose family were former neighbors of the Waxmans in the Jerusalem suburb of Ramot.

"How much longer can Jewish blood, innocent blood, be spilt?," asked Rabbi Berzon. "All we want is the peace of a Shabbos and the world will not let us have it."

Rabbi Berzon remembered the family as having had its fair share of tribulations.

Waxman's father, Yehuda, suffers from chronic kidney disease, and had his previous prayers for his son answered, Rabbi Berzon said. But not this time, and Yehuda does not know why.

"They are a soft-spoken family. All they ever wanted was to lead their own lives," he told The CJN last week before the raid.

Other speakers delivered messages expressing anger, sadness, and forbearance during the 45-minute service.

Thomas Hecht, chair of the Canada-Israel Committee-Quebec (CIC-Q), charged that Nachshon was killed because he shouldered the "guilt of being a Jew."

Arafat's dilemma page 7

He said the killing of Nachshon was more evidence of the "longest uninterrupted hatred since the beginning of mankind." He said PLO chief Yasser Arafat "must choose between peace with Israel and peace with Hamas."

Federation CJA president Lester Lazarus, for his part, said that while Jews "mourn for the civilized world and for ourselves who felt Israel was secure . . . the striving for peace must go on, or [it will] give victory to Hamas."

Beth Israel Rabbi Reuben Poupko spearheaded the organization of both the memorial service and the two vigils for Waxman held earlier in the week at Hillel House and Federation CJA.

Although Jewish communities outside Israel bask in the Jewish state's glories and achievements, they must forever remain in awe of Israel because it is Israel which actually sacrifices its children, Rabbi Poupko said.

When Islamic extremists believe shedding Jewish blood to be a "ticket to heaven," where can one find a "common moral vocabulary?" he asked.

Despite the tragedy, Israeli consul Aviva Raz vowed Israel will "never yield to terroism. That is our promise to our fallen soldiers."

It was the Hamas kidnappers, she said, who chose to kill Waxman "in cold blood" a few minutes into the commando raid.

Other speakers at the memorial service included Rabbis Mordecai Zeitz, of Congregation Beth Tikvah, and Gavriel Newman, of Chevra Kadisha-B'nai Jacob Synagogue.

The service was sponsored by the CIC-Q under the auspices of the Israeli consulate.

Nobel Prize announcement gets mixed reviews

TORONTO — Jewish organizations had mixed reactions to last week's awarding of the Nobel Peace Prize to Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin, Foreign Minister Shimon Peres and PLO leader Yasser Arafat.

In a statement, B'nai Brith Canada said it was "heartened" that the Nobel Prize committee has recognized the importance of peace in the Middle East.

"However, we see the prize as an award for risks taken rather than for peace achieved ... It is hard to praise Yasser Arafat as a 'peace maker' when he has not yet eliminiated the commitment to destroy Israel from the PLO covenant, and we can still recall the horror of terrorism targeted against civilians."

Canadian Jewish Congress extended congratulations to both Rabin and Arafat.

Arafat "should demonstrate his commitment to the principles embodied in the Nobel Peace Prize by vigorously denouncing and combatting" those responsible for the kidnapping and murder of Israeli soldier Nachson Waxman.

The Nobel's committee decision "is tragic and flawed," said the Simon Wiesenthal Centre. The award to Arafat "also demeans those world leaders who have spent their entire careers" promoting peace. The PLO chairman "without a doubt is a greater expert on terrorism than world peace," the centre said.

Prime Minister Jean Chretien is scheduled this week to send letters of congratulations to Rabin, Peres and Arafat.

Israel and Jordan initial peace pact

By LEORA FRUCHT
CJN Israel Correspondent

JERUSALEM — Israel and Jordan initialed a peace treaty Monday and announced that a full signing ceremony will take place next week after both governments approve the agreement.

The treaty, hammered out during an all-night negotiating session, was initialed by Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin and Jordanian Prime Minister Faiz Tarwana at King Hussein's palace in Amman.

Afterwards, Rabin repeatedly praised King Hussein for his courage. The prime minister said the two sides had achieved "a peace with dignity.

"The agreement will serve as a cornerstone for a new Middle East in which peace, development and cooperation replace animosity, hatred, violence and war," Rabin said. "[It is] a source of inspiration, an example that peace is attainable."

The agreement is the first full peace treaty signed since the 1991 Madrid peace conference was convened.

King Hussein said he felt a great "sense of relief" about reaching the agreement with Israel after so many years of war. "This is a new beginning for a comprehensive peace in the Middle East," he said.

"The agreement is a gift I send to the people of Jordan. If we safeguard it, we will be able to enjoy the fruits of peace for generations to come."

King Hussein

Yitzhak Rabin

The two main stumbling blocks to an accord — demarcating the border and dividing water resources — were resolved during a marathon session between Rabin and King Hussein that ran till 3 a.m. Monday. This capped off months of negotiations following the Washington Declaration in July, at which both states agreed to end the state of war between them.

Rabin said the Jordanian-Israeli border would be based on the international boundary that divided Jordan from Mandatory Palestine, with some small adjustments. "Neither side wins or loses," Rabin said. He had earlier assured Israeli farmers in the Jordan Valley and Arava that they would not have to abandon their land as a result of the agreement.

Regarding the sensitive issue of water, Rabin said Israel had agreed to provide Jordan with 50 million cubic litres of water a year from the Yarmuk River, the Sea of Galilee and the National Water Carrier to answer Jordan's immediate water shortage. The agreement also outlines a long-term regional water solution which calls for the construction of an internationally financed, $150-million facility to increase water resources, likely through desalination.

Monday's treaty must still be approved by the Israeli and Jordanian parliaments. A full signing ceremony is to be held at the end of next week along the Israeli-Jordanian border. U.S. President Bill Clinton is expected to attend.

Yiddish conference delegates take unique tour

By BEN ROSE
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — "Hang a left here, driver, and be careful going around the traffic circle."

So said guide Phil Givens, the former mayor of Toronto, as he led delegates to the Second International Conference of Yiddish Clubs on a bus tour of the Toronto Jewish community.

"I won't say there is no anti-Semitism in Toronto," Givens said as the bus wound its way north on Bathurst Street. "But thank G-d it's not the way it was when I was a kid, and other kids held up three fingers and said 'You killed Jesus.' We don't have the tzuris we had years ago."

In the space of his lifetime, Givens said, the Toronto community has grown to 160,000; almost half of Canada's Jews live in this area. When the bus rolled by the area where the Reichmann family lives, the ex-mayor, who is fluent in Yiddish, said: "My house is like their garage."

The delegates came from as far away as Buenos Aires, Halle (Germany) and Israel, and from dozens of cities in Canada and the United States. They revelled in the unvarnished account Givens gave.

As the tour drew near the building where most of the Jewish agencies are located, Givens said: "This building is a memorial to Lipa Green, a man who started life as a carpenter and chimney cleaner. He was a Yiddisher Yid, steeped in Yiddish. He couldn't believe that his sons would put up a building on stilts."

When the bus neared St. Clair Avenue, the ex-mayor said, "When I was a boy, from here on north was all fields. Even when I was old enough to date, the street car only ran this far and so I didn't date many girls in Forest Hill — it was too long a walk."

When the bus passed Beth Tzedec Synagogue, he commented, "There are 300 millionaires in its membership. It's so big you need a spy glass to see the rabbi."

As the bus toured the five acres on which Baycrest Geriatric Centre stands, Givens praised the diversity of the community and its concern for less affluent members. Many delegates on the bus asked how much it cost to be a patient or resident there. "It's a sliding scale, depending on the means of the family," he replied. "The FBI isn't any better on determining how much income is available."

The Beth Tzedec Museum exhibit, One Hundred Years of Yiddish, was thrown open so delegates could get a peek before its official opening in November. One poster attracting attention was from YIVO, in New York, showing a mother breast feeding her baby, with the Yiddish caption: "For a Long Life, Drink Mother's Milk."

When the bus passed Honest Ed's emporium, Givens praised Ed Mirvish's contibutions to the cultural life of Toronto and noted that his wife Anne, a conference delegate, at times still makes cabbage rolls for Ed's restaurants.

Academic speakers

At the conference itself, the assertion by one speaker that the Yiddish language is known as mameloshen because mothers rocked their babies while singing, "I shall be a sacrifice for your bones," took some delegates by surprise.

"It's not true that it was called mameloshen because if the mother opened her mouth the father had nothing to say," said Dr. Moshe Wolfe, once head of a psychiatric clinic in Moscow, amid laughter. "It was the mothers who taught the children Torah," he said.

At the Bloor Street JCC where part of the four-day conference was held, a Yiddish sign over the closing luncheon buffet advised "Chicken flickers, the feathers have already been singed."

The 200 delegates, in pursuit of the conference's motto, Undzer Yidish Hemshekh (Our Yiddish Continuity) heard a blue-ribbon list of academic speakers. They included Prof. Eugene Orenstein, chair of Yiddish Studies at McGill University, Chava Rosenfarb of Montreal, giving the keynote address on the renowned Canadian Jewish author J.I. Segal, and Montrealer Liba Augenfeld speaking on the life of her friend, the late poet Peretz Miransky of Toronto.

The Beth Tikvah choir, conducted by Srul Glick, and David Newman, Cantor Louis Danto, Nathan Garnick and Vivian Reis also took part in the tribute to Miransky.

A gala concert, funded by Metro Toronto, represented by Controller Howard Moscoe, attracted 450 to the Ontario Institute for Studies in Education. The Flying Bulgar Klezmer Band, conducted by David Buchbinder, performed, as did Claire Klein Osipov, accompanied by Wendy Stuart, Allen Farkas, Michael Lebovic, Gloria Valentine, Murray Ellis and Nina Shapelsky. Will the OISE auditorium ever recover from the rousing, swingy Klezmer rendition of Der Rebbe Elimelech led by Alan Merovitz, with the delegates joining in?

The symbolism inherent in the famous Yiddish folk song Roszhinkes Mid Mandlen was a lively topic in the workshop led by Naomi Bell. While some contended it was intended as a signal to the Jewish people to go to Israel, others said it was simply a mother's lullaby for her child.

Oyfn Pripetshik, another folk song, was criticized by one woman who said it depicted a rabbi as a gentle teacher, while in her experience the rabbis were anything but. Bell explained that later stanzas of the original poem, seldom read, corrected the picture.

Many of the workshops were lively and well attended, including one on creating Yiddish theatre led by Nathan Garnick in which David Abramowitz, Blema Steinman and Sarah Brickner of Toronto, Thelma Feller of Phoenix, Hilda Rubin of Washington, Sunny Landsman of Tamarac and Bonnie Sohn of New York took part.

Delegates heaped praise on coordinator Bess Shockett and Eda Zimler-Schiff, president of Toronto's Friends of Yiddish, and their committee, for the high calibre of the program, and at the close, the out-of-town delegates were sent on their way with a rousing Yiddish send-off: A Zay Gezunt Un Fur Gezunt (Stay healthy and travel safely).

Women urged to work with 'feminist' men

By MAURICE LUCOW
CJN Western Correspondent

VANCOUVER — Women wanting to break into the male-dominated Canadian power structure must work through "feminist" males, according to a local MP.

Vancouver Liberal MP Dr. Hedy Fry, a former president of the British Columbia Medical Association, told a recent Hadasah-WIZO brunch here that feminist men are those who agree with feminist aims and encourage women to achieve their goals.

She said Prime Minister Jean Chretien and Solicitor-General Herb Gray fit into this category. "They encourage the women members of Parliament and have invited them to the table."

She said Chretien has appointed a number of strong, capable women to important posts, several as parliamentary secretaries. (Fry is parliamentary secretary to the minister of health.)

In caucus, she added, women MPs are encouraged to speak up. "The PM has given his women MPs the opportunity to show they're capable."

Even though the gates to the power structure may be locked, with the men inside, "women can get through those gates," Fry declared. "It's essential they make the breakthrough to give young girls the confidence they need to face the future."

Fry said she developed her confidence from her feminist father who told her "you can do and be anything you want to."

The MP said earlier in the century, when women were considered chattel, the women's movement staged protest rallies, marches and was loudly aggressive. But "from revolution has come evolution — and we've come a long way. We now show gently, by example, what we are capable of doing and that we have an important role to play."

Fry said Canadian women set an example for women in developing countries. "We must show them how to open the door in their own way to get into positions of power."

Fry's speech marked the opening in Vancouver of Canadian Hadassah-WIZO's Women For Women campaign to raise funds to help abused women in Israel. The Vancouver meeting honored three communal leaders: Lois Appelbaum, Bea Libby and Regina Feldman.

'Window' for peace seen as a limited opportunity

By BEN ROSE
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — The peace process must go on and will go on despite terrorist killings and kidnappings, one of Israel's leading experts on Jordan, King Hussein and Israeli-Jordanian relations, said here recently.

A "moral imperative" of Israeli leadership is to pursue peace, even if it fails, in order to try to save the lives of those who would be killed in future wars, Professor Asher Susser said.

He warned that the "window of opportunity" for peace negotiations with some Arab states will be open for only a limited time.

Susser, who accompanied Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin to Washington for talks with Jordan's leaders, spoke at Holy Blossom Temple at a meeting attended by 300, co-sponsored by the temple and Canadian Friends of Tel Aviv University.

Most Israelis want the peace talks to continue despite the shocking attacks by terrorists recently, said Susser, head of the Moshe Dayan Centre for Middle Eastern and African Studies at Tel Aviv University, who has two sons serving with the Israel Defence Force.

Though there has been a shift in Israel's favor in the political balance of power in the Middle East, in the long run Israel must beware of a serious threat from Iraq, which, he predicted, will have a revival in five to 10 years.

Israel can defeat any military threat from its Arab neighbors, Susser said, but the policy of the Israeli government must be to avoid such wars.

A "ferocious debate"has developed in Israel over the peace process but most Israelis are willing to accept territorial compromise to bring peace, he asserted.

Predicting that a "Palestinian state of sorts" will emerge, Susser said it is in the interests of both Israel and the Palestinians to reach that goal as soon as possible.

"A lot of Israelis do not like it, but they can live with it."

Israel has no solution for Palestinians, beyond Gaza and the West Bank, and in "no way" can Israel accept the millions of Palestinians outside its borders, he said.

"Perhaps the solution is a confederation of Jordan and the Palestinians," he said. "The confederation idea is a useful one because nobody knows what it means."

There is progress in negotiations with Syria. "The equation with Israel is clear, full peace for full withdrawal. But the Syrians have not done enough to convince Israel what full peace means." The army has put forward a proposal for nearly a complete withdrawal from the Golan Heights, he disclosed, in the absence of a viable alternative.

On the Jerusalem situation, he said, "we will not surrender one inch of what is crucial to us."

Regarding the settlers issue, Susser said "it is not right that less than two per cent of our population should hijack Israel's foreign policy." Settlers can't stay in Gaza and the West Bank "at a cost of billions of dollars."

The tenor of questions asked in the discussion period revealed that most in the audience were in agreement with the speaker's views.

Chair David DeWitt, York University, said it is hoped to establish a Visiting Professorship between York University and Tel Aviv University. Marty Goldberg, president, Canadian Friends of Tel Aviv University, thanked the speaker.

Chair of Jewish Studies to be launched at U of T

By BEN ROSE
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — As a result of a dream of the late community leader Ray D. Wolfe that began 15 years ago, a Chair of Jewish Studies is to be established at the University of Toronto in 1995 or 1996.

A major gift from Richard Shiff, chair of Penta Capital Corp., and his wife Dorothy, brought the total raised for the purpose to $2 million, only $500,000 short of the goal.

"I couldn't be more pleased; this will change the whole face of Jewish education," said Rose Wolfe, chancellor of the University.

The process of finding a suitable candidate to fill the chair is expected to take a year or two.

"Everyone is excited about this development; it gives an extra impetus to everything in Jewish and Yiddish education," Wolfe said.

The $2 million was raised in a well-run campaign by members of the Chair of Jewish Studies campaign headed by volunteers Marty Goldberg and Lionel Schipper. It brought to fruition the efforts made by Ray D. Wolfe to establish the chair, beginning in 1980.

Rose Wolfe

In addition to making a major donation, Richard Shiff was very helpful to the committee in i fundraising, Wolfe said.

Professor Michael Marrus, head of the university's Academic Board, said the chair will allow the existing Jewish Studies Program to attract a leading scholar in the field and greatly raise both the program's and the University's international profile.

The Shiff contribution was announced at a reception held at the residence of University of Toronto President Robert Prichard on Sept. 25.

There are currently chairs of Jewish Studies at McGill University in Montreal and Queen's University in Kingston.

The Jewish Studies Program at the University of Toronto offers 60 courses in religion, languages, literature, history and philosophy, said Professor Libby Garshowitz, director. The program has 20 professors and three lecturers. Last year 847 students took courses in the program.

In a related development, Milton Shier, chair of OSS Inc., donated $1 million for a visiting professorship in Jewish Studies, in memory of his late wife, Shoshana Shier, a 1973 Woodsworth College graduate.

Professor Dov Noy of the Hebrew University will give the first lecture under this professorship on Nov. 1 at the George Ignatieff Theatre at 8 p.m. The subject will be Rose (Shoshanna) in Universal and Jewish Folklore.

Emotions run high on the set as Jay Feinberg visits Shirley Show

By LEILA SPEISMAN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — The Shirley Show couldn't have planned it better if they had tried.

During the taping of the Oct. 17 show, Audey Stanleigh, a bone marrow transplant recipient, was introduced to Steve Cheifetz, the donor.

In a spontaneous gesture, Stanleigh's 10-year-old sister, Shira, ran up to Cheifetz, and, sobbing uncontrollably, gave him an enthusiastic hug.

When host Shirley Solomon asked her why she was crying, Shira replied "because I'm so happy. He saved my best friend."

There wasn't a dry eye on the set, including the audience, television staff, Solomon herself and the makeup artist, who went around handing out fistfuls of Kleenex to everybody.

The focus of the show was 26-year-old Jay Feinberg, the New Jersey man who is desperately seeking a bone marrow transplant for himself.

In a dramatic moment, Feinberg announced that he has just been told he has only a few months to live — unless he, too, finds a donor.

Ironically, Cheifetz was originally tested for Feinberg.

(Everyone who is tested is automatically entered on the Canadian and international bone marrow registries.)

Cheifetz, who was called a tzaddik, a righteous person, by Audey's father Jerry, told the audience that he hopes other people follow his lead and are tested, and, if asked, donate marrow.

"It doesn't hurt," he said in reply to a question from the audience. "I had the operation [to remove the marrow] under general anesthetic on Thursday morning at 8, and on Friday at 9 I was at a meeting."

The idea for the show was suggested by Toronto teacher and lecturer Lori Palatnik. "Once you meet them [Jay and Arlene Feinberg] you just have to do something," she told Solomon.

Palatnik later told The CJN that she felt a television talk show would reach a whole segment of the population who might miss newspaper accounts of the situation.

The show did not deal only with Feinberg, Sharing the stage was Ricky Ramkeesoon, a 28-year-old Toronto man, of East Indian descent, who also needs a bone marrow transplant.

Others were in the audience, a mother with a 17-month old sick baby; and Amanda Leigh Clements, a beautiful, blue-eyed 7-year-old from Cambridge, rendered bald from chemotherapy, leaning weakly against her mother, Sue.

Her father, Bob, explained to The CJN that part of the difficulty in finding a match for Amanda is that she is of mixed white and North American Indian descent.

The family has begun to seek out native communities, including those in Brantford and Kitchener. "They have been anxious to help," he said, "but so far we haven't found a match."

It is not easy for the family, or for Amanda, to be so much in the public eye.

"You just put one foot on the ground, then the next foot. I'm as tired as she is. When she whimpers in the night, I wake up."

Feinberg, Amanda and Ramkeesoon are all of "ethnic" backgrounds, which tend to be underrepresented in the bone marrow registries.

Doctors feel that the best hope for a successful transplant comes from someone of the same ethnic origin as the person needing it.

There is a great need, also, for funding for the blood screening drives, as each test costs $50 US (about $75 Canadian). Drives for all the erstwhile recipients, including Feinberg, have had to be scaled back — at a time when the need is most acute.

Immediately after the show, 55 people including Solomon were in fact tested by volunteers from Dynacare Labs.

Stanleigh told The CJN that he intends to keep working for Feinberg and other bone marrow drives — "I have to. It's just right."

Arlene Feinberg noted that the unveiling for Alison Atlas, the young woman whose brave, yet ultimately futile quest for a donor was chronicled in this newspaper and other media, will be this month.

"Her family, her brother Larry and her sister Robin, still help us out in our drives," Arlene Feinberg said.

She said that she had hoped Solomon would ask her how Jay feels about others getting successful transplants from his drives, while he has not had the same luck.

"You should see how happy he is every time he hears good news for someone else. He says it keeps him buoyant."

But the poignancy of Jay Feinberg's closing plea on the show for help for all those needing transplants was heart-wrenchingly simple: "Please help save us."

Finestone urges women to join reform debate

By MYRON LOVE
CJN Prairie Correspondent

WINNIPEG — Sheila Finestone, secretary of state for multiculturalism and the status of women, has called on Canadian Hadassah-WIZO to participate in the debate to reform Canada's social security programs.

"Women and children have more at stake in this reform process than anyone else," said Finestone, keynote speaker at the gala dinner in Winnipeg which launched Hadassah-WIZO Month across Canada and the organization's new Women for Women campaign.

"There is a direct link between child poverty and women in poverty. The faces of poverty are women," she said.

Abuse against women has become the issue of the '90s, according to Judy Mandleman of Vancouver, Hadassah-WIZO national president. Mandleman described a visit last year to a Hadassah-WIZO shelter in Israel, where she was introduced to a Russian immigrant who had been beaten by her husband.

She had been battered in Russia but thought everything would be better in Israel. However, her situation worsened. Now that she is in the shelter, she and her children are safe, Mandleman said.

"The chair of Hadassah-WIZO in Israel asked us for help," Mandleman said. "I spoke to my officers and we adopted the Women for Women program. We are seeking special donations for a hotline in Israel for battered women. We are talking about the issue and trying to raise people's awareness. Many Canadian women are abused. Hadassah-WIZO is now part of the movement to end that abuse."

Finestone said that the issue of battered women is one that transcends national borders. She referred to a recent Statistics Canada study that found at least half the women in Canada had experienced violence at least once after age 16, yet only 14 per cent of the incidents had been reported to the police.

"I have been in the women's movement for 25 years and I couldn't believe those numbers," she said.

"Abuse against women takes many forms," she noted. "The most obvious is physical. The fear may be of strange men lurking in bushes, but a survey indicated that 2.6 million Canadian women have been battered by their spouses or ex-spouses — those who are supposed to love and care for them."

More dangerous, she observed, is emotional or psychological abuse. There are no scars but the victim loses her sense of self-worth and autonomy and physical and mental health.

"The goal is to eliminate all violence against women," Finestone stated. "The larger goal is for women to be recognized as equal in society and that won't come about until there is a tacit acceptance that violence against women will not be tolerated."

Finestone said she sees some encouraging signs. There are now over 400 shelters in Canada, including one for Orthodox Jewish women and another run by the National Council of Jewish Women in her Montreal Mount Royal riding; there were only 18 shelters 20 years ago. She also praised a Windsor shelter's efforts to change the attitudes of the abusers.

Finestone, speaking about the feminist movement, noted that women have accomplished a great deal in this century. She praised the evening's honoree, Pearl McGonigal, Hadassah-WIZO's Woman of the Year, as an ideal role model and an example of what women can accomplish.

McGonigal, hailing from Melville, Sask., was the first woman to be deputy mayor of Winnipeg and the first woman to be named lieutenant-governor of Manitoba. Since leaving Government House, she has played a leading role as a volunteer in several organizations.

McGonigal, in her response, addressed "landsleit" in the audience from Melville (which used to have a substantial Jewish population) and welcomed the naming of a room in her honor at the Rose Kanee Community Centre in Tel Aviv. The Kanee Family was also from Melville.

McGonigal praised Hadassah-WIZO for its work and thanked the organization for the honor but with a caveat. "I accept this honor on behalf of all volunteers in Canada," she said. "It is the spirit of volunteerism that makes this country the blessed and special place it is."

Holocaust's uniqueness stressed

By JANICE ARNOLD
CJN Staff Reporter

MONTREAL — More difficult to combat than the racists and eccentrics who deny the Holocaust are those people of "good conscience" who are not convinced of its uniqueness or suggest modern-day tragedies — like Bosnia and Rwanda — deserve more attention, delegates to an international conference of Jewish child survivors and hidden children during World War II were told.

Yehudi Lindeman, director of a McGill University project that videotapes survivors' testimonies, said that this trend can be found even in the Jewish day schools among educators who believe the Holocaust is given too much emphasis.

"They believe the Holocaust gloom imposed on Jewish children is replacing the traditional emphasis on Jewish learning and celebration...that enough is enough," Lindeman said at the closing plenary of the four-day conference.

"The fact these people are of good conscience makes them that much harder to dismiss...Just when we are starting to feel secure about our past we must defend the Holocaust again," said Lindeman, who was hidden with non-Jews as a young child in Holland and founded the Montreal child survivor group.

Much of that final session was devoted to discussion of how child survivors — the last eyewitnesses of the Holocaust — can transmit that legacy and whether the so-called second and third generations have a special role.

The conference was attended by 610 delegates from throughout North America, Israel, Australia and Europe, including Poland and Germany. Similar conferences have been held annually since the first in 1988 in Lancaster, Pa.

Keynote speaker Gerda Bikales of Washington, a child survivor, put it even more forcefully than Lindeman saying "the furor unleashed against us was like no other in history and none can ever equal it."

More than genocide

Moreover, the Holocaust was more than genocide, she argued, because the Jews never sought any territorial or national independence in Europe, she said, which are the root of today's bloodshed in Bosnia and Rwanda.

Nor can the suffering of other groups during the WWII, such as the Poles, be equated with that of the Jews, she said. "Not all victims were Jews, but all Jews were victims."

Bikales is disturbed by what she sees as the U.S Holocaust Memorial Museum's drifting to a policy of commemorating the "generic victim" of Nazism, that is putting the persecution of Jews on the same level as that directed at homosexuals, political dissidents, the handicapped and even Jehovah's Witnesses.

And with Jewish academics like Irving Horowitz of Rutgers University who has suggested, she said, that it is "unbecoming of victims of mindless killing to squabble over whose experience was worst," not the least because she believes the Nazis were extremely deliberate in their extermination plan.

Fellow panelist Thomas Schnurmacher, a Montreal journalist and child of survivors, felt Bikales was missing the point. "Throughout this weekend, people have been establishing hierarchies of pain: 'My pain is worse than yours.' But pain is pain whoever suffers it. Whether a mother sees her child killed in Lodz or Rwanda, it's pain."

Holocaust remembrance should be more than horror stories, he said. "I don't want to only hear about the deaths of my relatives; I want to hear what they were like when they were alive."

Another panelist Leah Kaufman, child survivor and teacher at Jewish People's and Peretz Schools, agreed that Jewish education should "minimize the oys and maximize the joys."

Yet another, Paul Zador, who lived as a child in a protected house in Budapest, stated: "Let victims of all genocides unite; there is strength in numbers."

Michael Wagner, whose father was a survivor, showed the impatience and ambivalence many in the second generation feel. He advised survivors to "heal themselves" and not rely on their children to somehow make things better.

CIC's new leader prepares to deal with political changes

By PAUL LUNGEN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Three years ago, who'd have believed it? Longtime enemies of the Jewish State are becoming good neighbors, and nations that have shunned the country for years are climbing on the bandwagon, reopening diplomatic relations. There have even been reports of negotiations with arch-nemesis Iraq.

Does this mean that Israel's advocates around the world, including Canada, can put away their rolodex files, end their contacts with prominent diplomats and political figures, shut down their offices and begin worrying about something else?

Not quite yet. Even though the Jewish state is realizing its longstanding goal of acceptance by many of its Middle Eastern neighbors, the period ahead will not necessarily be free of perils and pitfalls. And its friends in Canada will have to continue their task of cultivating political support among Canadian policy-makers, the newly-elected head of the Canada-Israel Committee (CIC) recently told The CJN.

Ottawa lawyer Stephen Victor, who took over stewardship of the CIC from Vancouver business executive Daniel Pekarsky, said the changing political and diplomatic landscape in the Middle East is presenting the pro-Israel lobby group with many new challenges.

"There is a growing attempt by Arab governments to revise Middle East history and question Israel's attachment to Jerusalem," said Victor, 52. "Israel views Jerusalem as the undivided capital of the Jewish people. Statements are being made to separate Jerusalem from Israel. Canadians might see that as a minor issue," so the CIC must explain Jewry's 3,000-year attachment to Jerusalem, he said.

Israel's security concerns, particularly the dangers posed by Muslim fundamentalism, are also high on the CIC's agenda, Victor continued. "Canadian Jews have a role to ensure that our government and the public understand Israel's perspective on the peace process and the related security issues."

Outlining a multi-track policy, Victor said, "Our goal is to continue to enhance the strong bilateral ties in the political and cultural fields, and also in the economic field. We have to enhance trade ties, possibly with a free trade agreement, and end Canada's embargo on arms [sales to Israel]."

Expanding on the CIC's plans,

Stephen Victor

Victor said, "There's a whole new Middle East opening up and it's the CIC's responsibility to ensure that there is significant improvement in bilateral trade, through pushing for free trade and for increased trade."

Although the CIC is changing its focus to keep pace with changing realities, it will continue to rely on the programs and strategies that have become its stock in trade. High on that list is the annual parliamentary dinner held every March that brings together about 1,500 participants, including the political leaders of Israel and Canada.

Career highlight

Victor, who chaired the 1993 dinner, recalls it as one of the highlights of his career as a community volunteer. The atmosphere generated by former Prime Minister Brian Mulroney, a good friend of Israel, and Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin made it "a really magical evening," he said.

While the parliamentary dinner is the highest profile event in the CIC's annual calendar, most of the organization's work is done behind closed doors. During the course of the year CIC staffers meet with government ministers, ambassadors, External Affairs bureaucrats, and media editorial boards, advising them on Israel's positions on a variety of issues, Victor said.

CIC staff also host Canadian parliamentarians, including those not considered friendly to Israel, on visits to the Jewish state so they can witness first-hand the security problems facing Israel, Victor said.

In addition, the CIC's Toronto, Ottawa and Montreal offices serve as resource centres for the Jewish community, providing background information to those holding rallies or public mobilization campaigns.

In the past, it sometimes appeared that organizations like Canadian Jewish Congress and B'nai Brith were stepping on the CIC's toes when it came to pro-Israel advocacy.

Now, all the organizations which are partners in the CIC — Congress, B'nai Brith, the Canadian Zionist Federation (CZF), Federation CJA (Montreal), the Jewish Federation of Greater Toronto (JFGT) and the United Israel Appeal — have approved the CIC's role as the policy-making organization for pro-Israel advocacy, Victor said.

To help make pro-Israel advocacy more efficient, and to prevent parliamentarians from being bombarded with six different voices on Israel, the parties have agreed that the CIC will be the principal spokesman on matters involving the Jewish state, he said.

The CIC must also be consulted in advance if Canada-Israel relations are on the agenda during meetings of other groups with government officials, he added.

The CIC's new constitution, passed in June, establishes a 24-member board. B'nai Brith, Congress, CZF, Federation CJA and JFGT each provide two board members. The remaining 12 board positions are allocated on an "ad personam" basis to people who need not be affiliated with the six organizations, he said.

The intent of that approach is to give the broader community a voice in the CIC, Victor said.

Among his many community associations, he served as president of the Jewish Community Council of Ottawa from 1987-89, as general chair of the United Jewish Appeal of Ottawa in 1984 and as chair of the Canada-Israel/community relations committee of Ottawa from 1985-87.

Supreme Court to hear Malcolm Ross appeal

TORONTO — The Supreme Court of Canada will hear the case of former Moncton school teacher Malcolm Ross.

The High Court last week granted leave to appeal a decision of the New Brunswick Court of Appeal which could pave the way for Ross' return to the classroom.

Ross vaulted to national notoriety by authoring books and letters which claim that an international Jewish conspiracy exists to undermine Western civilization.

Acting on a complaint from David Attis, a Jewish parent in Moncton who is affiliated with Canadian Jewish Congress, a human rights commission ordered Ross out of the classroom. The Court of Appeal overturned that decision.

Congress greeted the Supreme Court's announcement with satisfaction. "Anti-Semitic writings and publications by Ross only serve to undermine the values of tolerance and understanding which the classroom should foster," said Hal Joffe, national chair of community relations for Congress.

Congress has been a party to the proceedings from the outset and will participate in the final appeal. B'nai Brith Canada announced it intends to apply for intervener status.

Anti-racism consultant denies saying Holocaust not a racist act

By PAUL LUNGEN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — An anti-racism consultant denies published reports that allege he told a group of Crown attorneys the Holocaust was not a racist act.

Arnold Minors told The CJN that quotations attributed to him in a Toronto Sun article are "inaccurate. . . The Holocaust is a racist act."

Reports of Minors' alleged statements prompted Ontario Premier Bob Rae to order an inquiry. Minors, a member of the Metro Police Services Board and a possible successor to Susan Eng as chair, said he met last week with representatives of the Attorney General's department as part of their investigation.

Minors allegedly made the comments before a group of provincial Crown attorneys during a two-day seminar on anti-racism. He had received a $108,500 government contract to teach a series of anti-racism classes.

The report of Minors' seminar, carried in a column by Toronto Sun writer Christie Blatchford, angered Rae.

"I'm not just a supporter of the Jewish community, I'm married into the Jewish community, I'm part of the Jewish community. My children are being raised in the Jewish religion," Rae said.

"So, you can imagine how strongly I feel about the need for us to demonstrate not just sensitivity, but understanding of what's at stake here. That's why I've asked for a full report," he said.

Louis Lenkinski, chair of community relations for Canadian Jewish Congress, Ontario region, said he had sent a letter to Minors asking him to clarify the statements attributed to him. Lenkinski said Congress participated in an advisory committee on racism for the Ontario government and that Minors' statements, if true, contradict that committee's policies.

"If that's the case, we'll ask the government not to use him in anti-racism [programs]," Lenkinski said.

B'nai Brith Canada said it was "dismayed at the intolerant and narrow-minded remarks [attributed to] Minors."

Minors said the focus of his seminars is Canada and that "the dominant values are [those] of white, able-bodied, heterosexual, Christian men. The way in which race has been used in North America, typically, has been about color."

Minors, who is from Bermuda, said the recent Sun reports are part of a larger pattern. The newspaper is unfair and fails to be objective when it comes to reporting about people of African origin, he asserted.

Minors said he would be seeking legal advice.

Economic conference a first for Middle East

By ELIAS LEVY
CJN Staff Reporter

MONTREAL — An unprecedented international conference on the economic development of the Middle East will take place from Oct. 30 to Nov. 2 in Casablanca.

Some 2,000 companies, businessmen and industrialists from the four corners of the globe will participate in the forum, which will be opened with an address by conference host King Hassan II of Morocco.

U.S. President Bill Clinton and his Russian counterpart, Boris Yeltsin, are honorary patrons of the conference, organized under the aegis of the World Economic Council of Davos and the American Council of International Relations.

It was Shimon Peres, Israeli foreign minister and one of the conference's principal architects, who suggested the forum take place in Morocco. A strong supporter of Israeli-Arab rapprochement, King Hassan II welcomed the proposition with enthusiasm.

According to Peres, the conference "should allow for the channelling of huge investments towards the financing of large projects which particularly affect infrastructures." He told the Jerusalem Post that tourism, water, transportation, energy, agriculture, finance and media projects will likely attract foreign capital.

The forum is an important first in the annals of Middle East history. In official Israeli circles, it is hinted that Jordan may organize a similar forum next year in Amman if the Casablanca conference is a success.

"Nobody could have foreseen, a year ago, that a conference on economic development in our area could be held," Peres said.

Why was Morocco chosen as host country? The Muslim country and its monarch have, since the 1960s, openly favored a constructive and peaceful dialogue between Jews and Arabs; and Morocco and Israel have always been on especially good terms.

Canada will also be participating in the conference. Moroccan ambassador to Canada Tajeddinne Baddou told The CJN that the Chretien government has promised to send a senior official. "Moreover, 100 of the most important Canadian companies have also been invited to participate in the conference," Baddou said.

Among those invited to take part are Bell Canada, Hydro-Quebec, Northern Telecom, Canadian Pacific and Alcan.

Baddou also said "this historic conference could be the tangible prelude to a new era of peace and prosperity in the Middle East."

He is convinced the conference could create a psychological climate favorable to an ongoing, profitable dialogue between Israel and her Arab neighbors. "His Majesty the king is convinced that the economic reconstruction of the Middle-East, which must be the concern of all countries that want peace, will contribute significantly to improving the chances for a peaceful and equitable settlement of Israeli-Arab disputes," Baddou said.

This is a translation of an article that appeared in French in the Montreal edition of The CJN (Oct. 6).

Israel opens consulate in Chinese city of Shanghai

Jewish Telegraphic Agency

SHANGHAI — Reflecting an effort to increase economic ties with China, Israel recently opened a consulate in this bustling eastern Chinese city of 13 million.

"The government of Israel believes Shanghai is of very great economic importance," said Press Consul Avi Nir. "This is the main reason Israel decided to open the consulate general in Shanghai."

The newly established consulate, Nir said, will focus on economic matters, facilitating commercial cooperation between China and Israel.

Nir said it might be hard for Israel to compete with big firms because of the abundance of foreign companies here.

Still, he said, "It will be easier for us to compete in the fields where we have unique knowledge, such as telecommunications and medical equipment. The Chinese are really interested in these fields right now."

The Shanghai consulate becomes the second Israeli diplomatic office in China after the Israeli embassy in Beijing. Israel and China established diplomatic relations in January 1992.

Moshe Ram is serving as consul general.

Nir, who majored in Chinese studies at the Hebrew University in Jerusalem, said maintaining Jewish life is difficult in Shanghai because there is no Jewish community. He said he knows of 20 to 30 other Jews, including children, and that most of them went out of town for the High Holidays — to Hong Kong or Singapore.

Nir said the fact that Shanghai allowed an influx of Jewish refugees from the Nazis during the 1930s and 1940s has provided a basis for good relations today between Jews and the Chinese.

"No other place in the world was ready to accept Jews," Nir said. "The Chinese are proud to remember those days, and they have a right to be proud of what they did."

Israeli soldier's murder forces Arafat to make tough choices

By LEORA FRUCHT
CJN Israel Correspondent

JERUSALEM — The kidnapping and murder of Israeli soldier Corporal Nachshon Waxman was a painful blow to Israel. But the incident has also sent shock waves through the Palestinian community, and placed Yasser Arafat in a quandary.

"Choose peace or choose Hamas," was the ultimatum issued to the PLO chairman by Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin in the wake of the abduction. The Hamas kidnappers did not hold the Israeli soldier in the Gaza Strip, but they received their orders from there.

Rabin expects Arafat to clamp down on the Hamas Gaza-based terror network. And the prime minister is not alone in his demand.

"The Israeli public knows that Arafat does not have control over Hamas, but as the self-proclaimed leader of the entire Palestinian people, we expect him to make an effort to prevent Hamas from continuing its terrorist activities against Jews," wrote the daily Ha'aretz.

For Arafat the choice is not so easy. "We can't declare war on Hamas because that means declaring war on a third of our people," explained Sufian Abu Zeida, a member of the Palestinian Authority.

Indeed the arrest of some 400 Hamas activists in the last few days galvanized thousands of the organization's supporters to demonstrate against Arafat in Gaza City. A leaflet issued by Hamas' military wing, Izzadin Kassam, warned it would "trigger a civil war if the Palestinian police continued making arrests."

But Palestinian Authority (PA) information minister Yasser Abed Rabbo, said the PA would "continue taking measures to ensure national security."

Until now Arafat has been able to look the other way when Hamas has engaged in terrorist activities. But he can no longer afford to do that. His own authority is at stake.

"Hamas must understand that the Palestinian government will not allow any other body to call the shots here," warned Abu-Zeida. "It's true that at the beginning, the Palestinian Authority adopted a certain way of dealing with Hamas. But Hamas interpreted that as weakness and thought that it could do anything it wanted. Now we have no choice but to adopt a new way of dealing with them."

"The feeling among the Palestinian leadership is that Hamas crossed a line they never should have crossed," said Israeli deputy defense minister, Motta Gur.

But clamping down on Hamas supporters is sure to trigger opposition among Palestinians already suspicious of Arafat's commitment to democracy . . . Earlier this year Arafat's failure to include any Hamas representatives in the Gaza administrative council provoked sharp criticism even among Palestinians unaffiliated with Hamas.

"We don't want to eliminate Hamas," explained Aba Zeida. "We want to make it a part of the democratic process. Repressing Hamas as a whole — like Israel is demanding — may bring us to the brink of civil war."

"The challenge for Arafat is to weed out the small group of hard-core Hamas terrorists from the larger pool of political supporters," says Ronny Shaked, co-author of a recent book on Hamas.

Shaked notes that the military and political wings of the movement are completely separate. "He doesn't have to fight the entire Hamas — just its military branch."

Some people question whether Arafat can do in months what the Israeli army failed to do in years: crush the Hamas military wing.

"I think Arafat can do it," says Shaked, "especially with the help of the Israeli army. The question is not whether he can control Hamas, but whether he wants to."

Israeli leaders will be watching carefully. Among the key issues to be raised at upcoming negotiations are early empowerment and redeployment of Israeli troops in the rest of the West Bank.

"There is no point giving Arafat more power if he can't exert control over the areas already under his jurisdiction," maintains MK Ori Orr, head of the Knesset foreign affairs and defense committee. "Arafat has to come out against Hamas. It is too late to save Nachshon. But it is not too late to save the political process."

Negotiations for peace to resume

Jewish Telegraphic Agency

JERUSALEM — Despite the tragic conclusion to last week's attempt to free kidnapped Israeli soldier Cpl. Nachshon Waxman from his Hamas captors, the Israeli cabinet has decided to persevere in its peace initiative with the Palestinians.

Following what was the worst crisis in Israeli-Palestinian dealings since the start of Palestinian self-rule in May, the cabinet agreed last Sunday to resume negotiations with the Palestinians and to lift a closure that had been imposed on the Gaza Strip earlier.

Talks between Israeli and PLO negotiators over future Palestinian elections are scheduled to resume in Cairo this week.

The night before the cabinet session, tens of thousands of Israelis attended the funeral of Waxman, who was killed by his Hamas captors during a commando raid launched by the Israel Defence Force last Friday evening.

The funeral marked the end to a week-long ordeal that began with Waxman's kidnapping Oct. 9 and had gripped the entire nation.

The streets leading up to Jerusalem's Mount Herzl Military Cemetery flowed with people from all segments of society — secular, religious and Waxman's fellow soldiers — who came to pay their last respects.

Waxman, 19, lived in Jerusalem's Ramot neighborhood. He was the third of five children of Yehuda and Esther Waxman, Orthodox emigrants from the United States.

On Sunday, burial services were held in the military section of the Kiryat Shaul cemetery for Capt. Nir Poraz of Ramat Hasharon. Poraz was killed while leading the commando unit that tried to storm the West Bank safe house where Waxman was held.

Syrian minister's message gets 'cool' response

By LEORA FRUCHT
CJN Israel Correspondent

TEL AVIV — When Israel Television broadcast an exclusive interview with Syrian Foreign Minister Farouk Shara on Oct. 7, viewers were offered a word of advice: "Listen to the music, not the lyrics," urged Ehud Ya'ari, the Middle East affairs reporter who conducted the interview.

But to most Israelis, Farouk Shara's tone was anything but music to the ears.

"He cooled what little enthusiasm I had for the idea of trading land for peace with Syria," said Ittai Eren, a Tel Aviv computer programmer.

"Cool" describes the response of many Israelis to the first interview with the Israeli media by a high-level Syrian official. In a radio poll conducted two days after the broadcast, 75 per cent of callers said that Shara's appeal had not appeased their fears concerning Syria, and had even reinforced them. Only 25 per cent of the 4,800 respondents said the interview had deepened their trust in Syria.

One of those was Tel Avivian Devora Har-Sinai. "I was impressed by the fact that the Syrian foreign minister agreed to a one-on-one interview with an Israeli journalist," said Har-Sinai. "That sort of gesture is a great departure from Syrian policy. To me it suggests that they are serious about peace."

That was also the view of Israel's ambassador to the U.S. Itamar Rabinovitch.

'Rewriting of history'

"The medium is the message," asserted Rabinovitch, who heads the Israeli negotiations with Syria, and was instrumental in setting up the interview.

"A welcome change in policy that was the result of American pressure," said Syrian expert Dr. Yossi Olmert.

But even those who praised the Syrian decision to appear on Israel Television, could not ignore the "lyrics."

Shara's claim that Syria had never shelled civilian targets in Israel was regarded as outrageous and did little to enhance his credibility. Even left-wing government members, like Deputy Foreign Minister Yossi Beilin and Environment Minister Yossi Sarid (of Meretz) were quick to attack Shara's "rewriting of history," as they recalled the repeated Syrian shelling of settlements in the Hula Valley.

"We don't have to wait and see whether the Syrians will dupe us in the future," said Amos Mizrahi of Rishon LeZion. "They already did it the other night when they made that baseless claim."

Many Israelis also bristled at Shara's contention that Israel has great influence on the Western media. This explains why Arab states are wrongly regarded as aggressive, he maintained.

Shara's view that the first act of aggression in the Arab-Israeli conflict was the establishment of Israel also did little to appease viewers' fears.

His insistence that Israel withdraw from the entire Golan Heights, his reluctance to elaborate on Syria's vision of peace, and his flat refusal to consider a summit between Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin and Syrian leader Hafez al-Assad (until after Israel has committed itself to a full withdrawal from the Golan Heights) also reinforced the sense that Damascus is offering nothing new.

Farouk Shara

That view was aptly expressed in a recent Jerusalem Post cartoon showing the Syrian minister promising that in return for a full Israeli withdrawal from the Golan Heights, he would grant Israel Television a second "exclusive" interview.

"I'd like to see the day when Shimon Peres can talk freely to the Syrian people on Syrian television," said Uri Heitner, one of the Golan activists who held a hunger strike earlier this month.

Those already convinced of Syria's good intentions needed no more convincing. Meretz leader Shulamith Aloni called Shara's words "so significant that they provide a real basis for moving forward."

But among the undecided, the Syrian minister did not win many hearts and minds.

"I would consider returning part of the Golan Heights for a secure peace with Syria," said Ittai Eren of Tel Aviv. "But in denying that Syria ever attacked Israel, Shara was just repeating the same old propaganda. As far as I'm concerned the Syrians can go on making those claims every week on Israel Television. But in the meantime, until they change their tune, we shouldn't budge from the Golan Heights."

Christopher brings new ideas for peace from Syria's Assad

Jerusalem Post Foreign Service

JERUSALEM — U.S. Secretary of State Warren Christopher, arriving in Jerusalem last Wednesday night, brought back "new ideas on all the different components" of Israel-Syrian peace, including Golan demilitarization, from Syrian President Hafez al-Assad, Israeli sources said.

A source said the four-hour talks in Damascus focused on demilitarization.

"There is new creative Syrian thinking that is designed to advance the negotiations," chief negotiator with Syria Itamar Rabinovich said. "We can say the peace talks are alive and breathing."

Christopher met with Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin last Thursday morning, before heading back to Damascus later in the day.

Israeli sources said that prior to leaving Jerusalem earlier last week, Christopher urged Rabin to give a "contingent, affirmative response" to an issue on the negotiating table, provided he received the same favorable reply in Damascus. No other details are known.

"In some areas, we can begin to see a narrowing and in other areas, we still see that the gaps remain pretty much the way they were," a senior U.S. official said after Christopher's meeting with Assad. Christopher emerged from the meeting saying he was more encouraged than before that both Rabin and Assad are serious about peace.

U.S. Secretary of State Warren Christopher

Christopher acknowledged that "gaps do remain." But he said: "I feel that they're moving in the right direction."

South American Jews push for bombing inquiry results

Jewish Telegraphic Agency

BUENOS AIRES — Following the arrests earlier this month of three new suspects in the July 18 bombing of the Jewish community centre here, leaders of several South American Jewish communities joined in an effort to step up the pressure on Argentina to resolve the attack.

Jewish organizations from neighboring Brazil, Chile and Uruguay joined Argentine protesters at the now-weekly Monday morning gathering outside Buenos Aires' Central Courthouse to press for a resolution of the attack, and of the March 1992 explosion of the Israeli embassy here.

The attack on the community centre claimed 99 lives, and the one on the embassy killed 30.

While the protests had been silent until now, participants last week vented their frustration at investigators' lack of progress.

"In the country of the full stop, due obedience and pardon, it is logical that these crimes go unpunished," said human rights activist Hermann Schiller.

He referred to laws that closed investigations and eventually pardoned military leaders accused of the torture and murder of at least 9,000 alleged leftist subversives during Argentina's last military regime, from 1976 to 1983.

Schiller said law-enforcement officials should redouble their efforts to find local residents who may have collaborated with foreign terrorists.

"We are not denying the murderers may belong to Hezbollah," the pro-Iranian terrorist organization, he said. "However, we cannot be sure that the Nazis had nothing to do with this criminal act."

Argentina is home to a large German expatriate community, some of whom are suspected former Nazis.

Over last weekend, police arrested Ali al-Hasan, identified as Lebanese or Syrian, and two Argentineans of Syrian descent, Ernesto Tanuz and his son, Julio. The latter two were reportedly Hasan's landlords.

Police reportedly found eight pounds of explosives, false documents from the Syrian embassy and clippings about the bombing in Hasan's home in the Buenos Aires suburb of Castelar.

Staff at the office of Federal Judge Susana Morris Douglas, who questioned the suspects last week, were unable to confirm the findings.

Interior Minister Carlos Ruckauf reportedly said the arrests were only leads in the investigation. "Each of the leads has to be followed, but nobody should get excited about that. They are only leads. I am very cautious."

About a dozen people have been arrested since the investigation began, although only the most recent suspects, and an Argentine who sold the vehicle used in the bombing, remain in detention. The two men of Syrian descent arrested are expected to be released shortly.

In August, after interviewing a self-proclaimed Iranian defector in Venezuela, Galeano said Iranian diplomats had supported the attack.

The charges provoked Tehran and Buenos Aires into withdrawing their ambassadors for consultation, and Argentina's Supreme Court ruled Galeano had collected sufficient proof for an investigation into Iran's involvement.

Jewish Telegraphic Agency

LONDON — The Lubavitch Foundation in Britain has denounced its Oxford-based student society for planning to co-sponsor a visit by Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin, whose stance on territorial compromise with the PLO is vigorously opposed by the Chabad Lubavitch movement.

Rabbi Shmuel Boteach of the Oxford L'Chaim Society said last week that he had been summoned to a disciplinary hearing after refusing to revoke his group's involvement in the visit.

The Lubavitch Foundation's U.K. director, Rabbi Faivish Vogel, said the group should not have sponsored the Rabin visit out of respect for Rebbe Menachem Mendel Schneerson, the spiritual leader of the Lubavitch worldwide movement, who died earlier this year.

Late Rebbe disagreed with PM

"The views of the late Lubavitcher rebbe on territorial issues and compromise are well-known," Rabbi Vogel said in a statement.

"The rebbe maintained that the way to a full and lasting peace is by retaining all territories under Israeli control," he said. "The rebbe's views are not shared by Prime Minister Rabin, and it is therefore felt it would not be appropriate for the Lubavitch Oxford University L'Chaim Society to co-host the visit of the prime minister."

To do so, the statement suggested, would be "disrespectful" to the rebbe's memory.

Rabbi Boteach, noting that he was "shocked" by the statement, said in an interview, "The rebbe was the inspiration of my life, and the greatest Jewish leader of the millennium.

"He was distinguished primarily by his love for every Jew, and I cannot imagine he would want us to humiliate the prime minister of Israel, by withdrawing our participation, especially since the order to do so came after I had met Mr. Rabin and the visit was confirmed."

NAME GAME

There is a story in almost every Jewish surname and Toronto lawyer FRED M. CATZMAN has been researching their origins over the past few years. Mr. Catzman reports on his research in The CJN.

LAPIDES

Classical scholars will readily discern the resemblance of this Jewish surname to the words Lapidose and Lapidary, which come from the Latin word for stone.

Actually, it's origin is biblical. It is the name of the husband of Deborah, the prophetess (Judges 4-4).

The News in Brief

Haiti Force Leaves

TEL AVIV — A 30-member Israeli police contingent left here earlier this month to join the international peacekeeping force intended to restore law and order in Haiti.

The 28 men and two women who volunteered to assist in the restoration of stability in Haiti left Israel Oct. 6, two days after the High Court of Justice ruled that sending an Israeli police force on an overseas mission did not contravene the country's laws.

Israel's cabinet approved the mission a week earlier.

The contingent arrived at New York's Kennedy Airport and traveled from there to Puerto Rico, where they were to undergo training before being dispatched to Haiti.

Shahak New IDF Chief of Staff

JERUSALEM — Maj.-Gen. Amnon Shahak has been chosen the next Chief of Staff of the Israel Defence Force.

At its weekly session last Sunday, the cabinet unanimously approved Shahak's nomination by Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin, who also serves as defence minister.

Shahak, currently deputy chief of staff, will replace Lt.-Gen. Ehud Barak, whose four-year term expires in January.

Shahak, who will serve as the country's 15th IDF Chief of Staff, was Israel's top negotiator in the seven months of talks with the PLO leading to Palestinian self-rule in the Gaza Strip and Jericho.

During his Army career, Shahak has held a number of key posts, including commander of the West Bank and chief of military intelligence until his appointment as deputy IDF chief of staff in 1991.

Beilin: Amend Law of Return

JERUSALEM — Deputy Foreign Minister Yossi Beilin has called for the Law of Return to be amended to meet changing circumstances in Israel and around the world.

"The problem is that there are those who are exploiting the Law, because it is open to a non-Jew who might be the spouse of the son or grandson of a Jew and so on, which allows them to come to Israel and earn all the rights to which a Jew is entitled," Beilin said last week.

"The time therefore has come, in my opinion, to make changes (in the Law of Return) because Israel is a very attractive country. It's not surprising that there are more and more elements in the world calling themselves Jews."

Jews Deliver Warnings Over Shas

JERUSALEM — Leaders of the Conservative and Reform movements in Israel met last Tuesday with Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin and warned that the coalition agreement with Shas would trigger a rift with the Diaspora similar to that which occurred when world Jewry mobilized to fight the "Who is a Jew" amendment.

Uri Regev, head of the Reform Israel Religious Action Centre, said, "World Jewry will not accept or tolerate the submission to Shas's demands at the cost of abandoning the non-Orthodox streams of Judaism which are predominant in world Jewry."

He said the wooing of the ultra-Orthodox Shas party into Rabin's coalition government "could lead to a serious breach with Diaspora Jewry."

Rabin listened but made no promises, Regev said.

Omani FM Meets Peres

WASHINGTON — In a continuing sign that the Arab world is warming to Israel, the Omani foreign minister met with his Israeli counterpart for the first time last week.

Originally slated as a closed meeting, Omani Foreign Minister Yusuf Bin Alawi agreed at the last minute to allow photographers into his session here with Foreign Minister Shimon Peres last Tuesday.

An Israeli delegation visited the Persian Gulf nation last April to participate in the Middle East multilateral talks on water rights. The meeting between Peres and Alawi, however, marked the highest public contact between the two states.

While no concrete decisions were reached at the meeting here, the two ministers agreed to continue the dialogue with the goal of exchanging economic liaison officers in the future, an Israeli Embassy official said.

Ties With Rwanda Restored

JERUSALEM — Israel's diplomatic ties with Rwanda were restored last Tuesday in New York in a signing ceremony between United Nations Ambassador Gad Ya'acobi and Rwanda's UN Ambassador, Marzi Baku-Ramutsa.

Rwanda broke relations with Israel after the Yom Kippur War.

Baku-Ramutsa said Rwanda was very interested in working with Israel on security and technology projects.

The vice-president of Rwanda is planning to visit Israel in the near future to discuss details.

Israel sent a fully-equipped field hospital and several dozen medical and support staff to Zaire over the summer to treat refugees from Rwanda's bloody civil war.

Ties With Palau Established

TEL AVIV — A day after it declared independence, the tiny Pacific island-nation of Palau established full diplomatic relations with Israel.

A mutual-recognition agreement was signed Oct. 2 by Israel's ambassador to Fiji, Shmulik Moyal, and Palau's foreign minister, Andre Uherbelau.

Formerly a part of the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, which is administered by the United States, Palau is located east of the Philippines and north of Papua New Guinea.

Comprising an archipelago of 340 islands and atolls, only ten of which are inhabited, Palau has a total population of 16,000.

Palau is the 14th country from the Pacific island region of Oceania, and the 147th nation in the world, to establish full diplomatic relations with Israel.

Jewish Gravestones Destroyed

JERUSALEM — About 20 Jewish gravestones on the Mount of Olives were destroyed recently, Jerusalem police discovered last Tuesday.

A police spokesman said Arab youths were believed to be responsible. No arrests have been made.

Police in recent months have beefed up patrols on the Mount of Olives, following increased instances of desecration.

Dutch Royals To Visit

JERUSALEM — Holland's Queen Beatrix and her husband Prince Claus are to pay a state visit from March 27-29. They will be the guests of President Ezer Weizman and his wife Reuma.

This is the first time a ruling Dutch monarch will visit, and the trip will strengthen the strong ties between the two peoples and their countries, a presidential spokesman said.

Lilith Marks 18th Birthday

NEW YORK — Lilith, the independent Jewish feminist magazine, is marking its 18th anniversary this month with a celebratory issue.

With a press run of 10,000 copies and a readership estimated at 25,000, the quarterly magazine highlights issues such as the ordination of women as rabbis, "JAP"-stereotyping on campus and women-centred ways of celebrating Jewish tradition.

"Certainly the polarity between Judaism and feminism that seemed irreconcilable 18 years ago no longer pulls women apart with the same ferocious intensity it once did, and Lilith takes some measure of pride in — and responsibility for — this integration," says editor-in-chief Susan Weidman Schneider, a Winnipeg native and one of Lilith's founders.

Continent-wide celebrations of the magazine's anniversary will be held throughout the 1994-95 year, including "salons" for Jewish women in a number of cities.

ABC Nixes Roseanne's Chanukah Show

NEW YORK — Television Christmas specials are so popular that even Jews have been known to host them. But an effort by TV megastar Roseanne to get a Chanukah special onto the airwaves has been nixed by ABC network brass.

According to an ABC Television spokesperson, there wasn't enough time to produce the show in time for Chanukah because the holiday falls so early this year.

A recent article in New York Newsday reported that the network hated the proposed guests, jokes and even the whole idea of turning the Jewish holiday into a comedy routine.

Roseanne did not return telephone calls from the Jewish Telegraphic Agency. Newsday reported that the ribald comedian's response was so spicy, it could not be reprinted in a family newspaper.

According to ABC Television spokesperson Eileen Kurtz, the network hopes to air a Chanukah special in the future. Asked if one was being planned for next year, she said, "in this business you can't plan more than two weeks in advance."

Roseanne apparently feels deeply connected to her Jewish heritage and has been working since 1991 on the idea for a Chanukah special to rival the glittering Christmas extravaganzas the networks roll out each year.

Israel, Syria move toward peace

By SHELDON KIRSHNER

Despite major differences in their respective negotiating positions, Israel and Syria appear to be moving inexorably toward a peace agreement.

And as the momentum for a diplomatic breakthrough gathers strength, both sides are preparing their people for change.

At first glance, it would seem that Israel and Syria are just too far apart to sign an accord on the final disposition of the Golan Heights.

Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin is adamant that Israel cannot afford to give up the Golan in its entirety, while President Hafez al-Assad is insistent that every square foot must be relinquished.

More specifically, Israel and Syria disagree over several related issues — the timing of a phased Israeli withdrawal, its linkage with security arrangements and the extent of normalization.

"The gaps are wide and very deep," observed Rabin on Oct. 4.

"There is still a good deal of work to be done," said Dennis Ross, President Bill Clinton's special envoy to the Middle East, following a meeting with Assad in Damascus in late September.

The impasse was starkly illustrated last month when Israel unveiled a proposal designed to inject life into the peace process.

Under Rabin's plan, Israel and Syria would establish normal diplomatic relations in exchange for a partial Israeli pullback from the Golan. During a three-year interim period, Israel would test security arrangements and relations with Syria, after which a final agreement would be worked out. Rabin compared the proposal to one which Israel and Egypt hammered out at Camp David in 1978.

But Israel's current proposal is unacceptable to the Syrians. "We cannot accept a partial withdrawal because this wouldn't lead to real peace," Farouk al-Shaara, Syria's foreign minister, said recently. "We want full withdrawal for full peace."

Despite these divergencies, there has been forward movement, slow though it has been.

Last week, on the eve of U.S. Secretary of State Warren Christopher's sixth visit to the region in four months, Israel's chief negotiator and ambassador to the United States, Itamar Rabinovich, reported a measure of progress "in terms of substance and procedure."

After repeatedly calling for an immediate and unconditional Israeli withdrawal, Syria has agreed to the principle of a phased withdrawal, preferably over one year, in return for a peace treaty.

Moreover, Syria now seems willing to consider Israeli ideas for the demilitarization of the Golan. Syria had insisted on an equal Syrian and Israeli pullback from the Golan. Since then, Syria has taken into consideration Israel's view that its smaller size dictates balanced arrangements.

In the meantime, Rabin is preparing Israeli public opinion for an Israeli withdrawal from the Golan, captured by the Israeli army during the Six Day War when he was chief of staff.

Rabin, who has promised to call a referendum before undertaking a significant withdrawal, recently delivered an important speech stressing the theme that Syria is ready for peace.

Declaring that Israel would not adopt a passive approach to peace, Rabin said he would seize the day, exploiting every opportunity to settle Israel's problems with Syria.

In a revealing historical aside, Rabin criticized a former Israeli government, headed by Golda Meir, for not sufficiently exploring the possibilities for making peace with the Arabs. He said he would not commit the same mistake, implying that she and her defence minister, Moshe Dayan, could have avoided the 1973 Yom Kippur War.

With this statement, Rabin thereby associated himself with a group of Israeli revisionist journalists and historians who maintain that Israel has missed chances for peace.

Israel's foreign minister, Shimon Peres, has also broken with the shibboleths of the past. Recently, he asserted that "peace with Syria affords us more security than the entire Golan does."

The Israeli army more or less concurs with that assessment. The usually reliable Tel Aviv daily Ha'aretz reports that, in the opinion of the high command, Israel need not retain more than a narrow strip of the Golan in the context of peace and normalization with Syria.

But according to a recent poll published by Yediot Achronot, Israel's largest newspaper, Israelis are deeply divided over the matter, with only 35 per cent of adult Israelis favoring a complete pullback from the Golan under conditions of genuine peace. A Gallup poll conducted for the Jerusalem Post last week revealed that 57 per cent of Israelis would oppose such an evacuation.

And needless to say, virtually all of the 13,000 Jewish settlers on the Golan — who were originally encouraged to settle there by a succession of Labor party governments after the Six Day War — want to remain. To this end, they have launched a vocal public relations campaign. Much to Rabin's chagrin, at least six members of the Labor party Knesset faction, spearheaded by Avigdor Kahalani, support the settlers.

Kahalani, a hero on the Golan during the Yom Kippur War, says he will submit legislation requiring approval by 65 per cent of the nation in a plebiscite on withdrawal. Rabin has attacked the settlers, claiming they are putting their narrow concerns above Israel's national interests.

As the debate in Israel over the Golan rages, Syria is moderating its policy in a bid to win over skeptical Israelis.

Assad, who was defence minister when Syria lost the Golan in 1967, has stated that peace is in Syria's strategic interest, and that he will accept "the objective requirements of peace."

Taking a conciliatory tone toward Jerusalem, Sha'ara has spoken of "a warm peace" between Israel and Syria, while noting that a Rabin-Assad summit is "inevitable."

Since the 1991 Madrid peace conference, there have been gradual changes in Syria's heretofore harsh approach to Israel.

The official Syrian press no longer refers to Israel as the "Zionist entity." Syrian television broadcast segments of the ceremony in Washington last July in which Israel and Jordan ended their state of war. In October, during a visit to the United States, Sha'ara, for the first time, consented to be interviewed by an Israeli reporter. Last January, by contrast, Syrian officials vetoed the participation of Israeli reporters at the Clinon-Assad summit meeting.

In another sign of changing attitudes, billboards on the road from Damascus to the airport proclaim Syria's commitment to a "just and comprehensive peace" and declare that "peace is a noble goal."

Syria, too, is making overtures to the Jewish community in the United States.

Since January, delegations representing the American Friends of Peace Now and Project Nishma have stopped in Damascus for talks with high-ranking Syrian officials.

In August, several past presidents of the American Jewish Congress [AJC] went to Syria under the auspices of the New York-based Council of Foreign Relations, whose U.S./Mideast project is headed by Henry Siegman, AJC's former executive director.

And last week in Washington, Sha'ara held discussions with leaders of Jewish organizations in the United States.

Clearly, there is movement on the Syrian diplomatic front. But whether it can be translated into a peace agreement within a year, as is currently speculated, remains to be seen.

Two former enemies form friendship

By STEVE RODAN
The Jerusalem Post

Far from the glare of camera lights and the White House lawn, Aharon Levran and Jordan's Mohammad Shiyyab have proved that two former military commanders from enemy countries can quietly talk peace and become friends.

Before the breakthrough on July 25, when the two countries announced they would set up border crossings and explore joint projects, Levran and Shiyyab began a study of issues that needed to be resolved before a peace treaty could be signed between Amman and Jerusalem.

For both men, the experience resulted in friendship as well as awareness of the other side's concerns. Levran, a former brigadier-general, served as assistant for operational intelligence in the Israel Defence Force intelligence branch, and was Israel's defence attache in Tokyo and Seoul. Today, he does research on strategic issues.

Shiyyab is a former deputy commander of the Royal Jordanian Air Force and a founding member of the staff of the Jordanian Armed Forces War College. He retired from the military in 1992 and has since been involved in research projects relating to the Middle East.

The Levran-Shiyyab study, completed in June and released recently, was sponsored by the Initiative for Peace and Cooperation in the Middle East, a project of the Washington-based Search for Common Ground.

The paper enumerates the unresolved issues that still divide Jordan and Israel and says these will require much time and effort to resolve.

"There are three main issues," Shiyyab says, speaking from his home in Amman. "One of them relates to borders. The other is the water issue. And the last is the bilateral security — to develop a mutual understanding of how best each party can address security needs. Our study was an excellent way to foresee what would happen [in the subsequent Jordan-Israel negotiations]."

In the study, both men list their countries' interests and the response of the other. Their disagreements reflect the state of the current negotiations.

Shiyyab stressed to Levran that Jordan would not budge on the central questions of land, water, security and refugees. The result is that Levran regards reports of progress made on these issues to be the result of Israeli concessions.

"The Israelis are conceding on two things: on borders and water," Levran says. "On water, the Israelis could agree to some concessions while reaching an understanding on expanding water resources. You can't do that in a border dispute."

But the study raises other concerns. As Levran sees it, Israel wants Jordan to avoid alliances with extremist states, to ban deployment of foreign soldiers on its soil, and to agree not to acquire large amounts of Western weapons.

In the paper, Shiyyab responds that Jordan has always insisted that it will never allow its country or airspace to be used as a battleground, and that it has successfully contained terrorist attacks against Israel. Jordan, however, needs to upgrade its military equipment.

The two academics also disagree on arms control. Jordan opposes what Shiyyab says is Israel's nuclear arsenal while Levran argues that it would be impractical "and even immoral" to strip Israel of its power, even in a peaceful Middle East.

Levran touches perhaps the rawest nerve of all when he raises the issue of Jordanian-Palestinian relations.

"Israel is concerned about a confederate solution with the Palestinians as this will inevitably end the Hashemite kingdom," he writes. "Eventually, it will create a large armed Palestinian state on both sides of the Jordan River."

Shiyyab's response is vague: "Jordan, however, maintains that such arguments are unsound and that it is premature to even discuss this issue."

In the end, Shiyyab expects U.S. guarantees to help resolve the water and border disputes. Indeed, during a recent meeting between Israeli Foreign Minister Shimon Peres, Crown Price Hassan of Jordan and President Bill Clinton, the United States pledged to help obtain financing from the World Bank for the construction of two dams along the Yarmuk and Jordan rivers, meant to increase the amount of water supplied to the kingdom by 100 million cubic meters annually.

Israeli officials estimate the cost of this project, defined as a short-term solution to ease the water shortage, at more than $100 million. A long-term solution, which would seek to resolve the water problems of Syria and Lebanon as well, is estimated to require $13 billion over the next decade.

Shiyyab says that progress in the talks depends on U.S. pledges of aid. "There must be Israeli commitments and American commitments to delineate the border, and for Jordan to receive our fair share of the Jordan and Yarmuk rivers," he says."

The idea for a Jordanian-Israeli study grew out of a quiet dialogue between Israeli and Arab academics, started in 1991 by the Initiative for Peace and Cooperation in the Middle East. Its first meeting was held in September of that year in Rome, several weeks before the Middle East peace talks were launched in Madrid. Both men claim they did not seek any input from their governments; nor is there evidence that the study has had any impact on the negotiations.

Still, Shiyyab, as a recently retired senior officer who represents Jordan at many international academic forums, appears closer to his country's leadership than Levran is to his. Though it is not reflected in the study, Levran is highly critical of the policies of the Rabin government and its handling of the talks with Jordan.

"Israel is going about this in a very unintelligent way," he says. "What kind of logic is this, conceding every centimeter of land? We are setting yet a second precedent for returning all disputed lands to the Arabs in the course of a peace settlement, which will affect future negotiations."

Levran and Shiyyab say their work on the joint project resulted in mutual respect. Levran calls his Jordanian colleague "first-rate and a gentleman. I understood the concerns of Jordan much better."

"I must admit it was tough," Shiyyab says. "But as we got to know each other, I think we developed what we might call a very good friendship. Many people, when you first talk to them, you feel you're not getting anywhere. But after dialogue, you can manage. It just takes goodwill."

Deja Vu

By all appearances, Saddam Hussein, the ruler of Iraq, is his own worst enemy.

In the past 14 years, he has driven his potentially wealthy nation into misconceived adventures. By doing so, he has recklessly sacrificed the youth of his nation, isolated Iraq and plunged it into unmitigated disaster.

In 1980, Iraq invaded Iran, its ancient foe, hoping to supplant Teheran as the dominant power in the region. Saddam Hussein believed he could achieve his goal in a matter of weeks, if not months. But he miscalculated, and the costly war dragged on for eight years.

Ten years later, Iraq stormed into Kuwait, and annexed and ravaged what had been a friendly state. Inexplicably, he anticipated no foreign intervention, not even from Kuwait's chief ally, the United States. Warned on pain of bombardment to withdraw, he stonewalled. For his obduracy he paid dearly: Iraq was partially defanged and its oil-based economy was devastated.

Last week, unbelievably enough, an apparently unchastened Saddam Hussein was at it again — massing troops perilously close to Kuwait's frontier and conjuring up deja vu images of the 1990-91 confrontation in the Persian Gulf. Analysts believe that he resorted to crude military means in order to pressure the United Nations into lifting crippling sanctions imposed on Iraq four years ago.

Yet, as he well knows, force will not work. Indeed, the sanctions will remain in place until Iraq fully complies with UN Security Council resolution 687. While Iraq has grudgingly complied with some of its conditions, Baghdad stubbornly refuses to recognize Kuwait's sovereignty, the issue at the heart of the matter.

The United States has wisely responded to Iraq's brinkmanship with a show of might, the only language Saddam Hussein really understands. But what comes next? Conceivably, he could dispatch his army to the Kuwait border again once the current standoff ebbs. Given the obvious uncertainties, it is incumbent on the UN to create a military exclusion zone in southern Iraq, patterned after the no-fly zone south of the 35th parallel and designed to keep Iraq at bay.

This will not put an end to Saddam Hussein's cruel Ba'athist regime, which has terrorized Iraq and its neighbors. But at least it will remind him that aggression does not pay.

Nobel prizes

The awards given last week by the Stockholm Nobel committee to Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin and Foreign Minister Shimon Peres are well-deserved; the two leaders have worked indefatigably for decades to bring peace to the Middle East.

Rabin and Peres were part of a long line of Israelis who met in public and in private over the years with Arab and Palestinian adversaries and with third party mediators, in order to prepare the path for a modus vivendi with the Pelestinians.

It was the impetus given by Rabin and Peres to the Oslo negotiations a year and a half ago that put the finishing touches on the successful peace agreement with the PLO. Few will deny that the results have produced the first real chance for a genuine peace in the strife-ridden Palestinian-Israel imbroglio.

However, the lustre of the Stockholm awards has been significantly diminished by the tragic death of corporal Nachshon Waxman, murdered by Hamas extremists during a daring raid by Israeli troops to free him — on the same day that the Nobel prize announcement was made.

The awards are further tarnished by the inclusion of Yasser Arafat as one of the Nobel recipients. Kare Kristiansen spoke for many when he, as a member of the Nobel committee, resigned in protest at an award given to a man who has yet to prove himself as a fighter for peace.

Kristiansen's point is well taken: the Nobel committee's decision in designating Arafat is premature. During his adult life, Arafat has planned and participated in terrorist actions against Jews and Israelis.

It took 40 years for the Nobel committee to sift through the scientific contributions of former McMaster University professor Bertram Brockhouse before deciding to award him the Nobel prize in physics last week. That is the kind of waiting period that the Nobel committee should have used before honoring Arafat. Its haste in awarding the PLO leader the prize points up the unfortunate political maneuvering which motivated the decision.

HELP NEEDY FIRST

Recently I attended a general meeting at the Bloor JCC, the purpose of which was to discuss the situation, options and plans available to the membership in light of the current fiscal dilemma facing the Y.

One suggestion from the floor was that UJA funds earmarked for Israel (approximately 50 per cent of total funds raised) not be sent to Israel but rather reallocated to pay off the approximately $15 million of JCC debt.

This suggestion was roundly applauded.

Later that week I was told that at another meeting of the Valley JCC, it was suggested that persons withhold their entire UJA contribution and instead earmark their monies in order again to eliminate the JCC debt.

The community is undoubtedly shocked by recent events at the JCC. Even more shocking, however, is the community's reaction to these events.

Shall we cast adrift our brethren both here in Toronto and abroad so that the JCC (and our own considerable material comforts) remain intact?

Single parents with children living below the poverty line in Downsview or Vaughan or Markham — Jewish refugees fleeing Sarajevo or before them Ethiopia or before them, etc., etc. Shall we abandon them all?

And what if our parents or grandparents had decided at the beginning of the century that life in the new world was "too tough" and that bringing their European relatives from Hitler's onslaught was "inconvenient."

Where would we be? We would not exist.

It is very possible the JCC will ultimately face financial bankruptcy.

But a bankruptcy of will is a far more serious matter.

ROLE OF A JCC

There appears to be some confusion as to the roles and responsibilities of the members of a Jewish community, the JCC, UJA and the Jewish Federation.

Our responsibility as a community is to first fully support the Jewish needy in our community, second provide "Jewish culture" via our JCC to all Jews and their families in our community, and finally, with remaining resources, support Jews and others outside our community.

A Jewish Community Centre needs to be egalitarian and Jewishly pluralistic, where Jews and their families can, without religious or sectarian bias or coercion, educate themselves about Jewish history and culture, express their Jewishness each in their own way and experience all aspects of the Jewish arts, and provide a modern, accessible Jewish library and reading/learning centre.

Such a JCC must be fully supported by the Jewish governing and fundraising bodies in priority to supporting programs outside our community. Money collected from the general Jewish community must go back to supporting the needs of that general Jewish community.

Athletic clubs, private religious day or afternoon/weekend schools, synagogues and religious institutions and services of all sects must be fully supported by its users or benefactors.

How can we reconcile the recent Federation approval of $1.2 million for Jewish continuity (administration) with its withdrawal of support from or closing down of those very institutions that guarantee continuity?

BITTERSWEET ENDING

Your front page article, "Fight for Syrian Jewry coming to happy end" (The CJN, Oct. 13), requires some additions and clarifications.

The Chief Rabbi of Syria came to Toronto, and spoke from the pulpit at Beth Tzedec Congregation to over 1,200 people on Shabbat, specifically to thank the Toronto and Canadian Jewish communities for the most necessary financial support and assistance for 23 years.

As well, the Dr. Ronald Feld Fund for Jews in Arab Lands no longer sends religious books and supplies to the remaining Jews of Syria. It fulfills other urgent needs of those still there and those who have left.

While Jews in Syria face many restrictions, they can vote in "elections," contrary to what the article stated.

Finally, the headline was somewhat misleading. While from one standpoint, the campaign for Syrian Jewry is coming to a "happy end," the plight of those who have come out is not always so. Emigres have left their homes, businesses and magnificent synagogues behind. They face hardship in their new homes, be it financially, cultural or employment-related. And for those who stay behind, the situation is especially sad. The word "bittersweet" would have been more appropriate.

CATCHING WAR CRIMINALS

It is the vogue currently in the daily press and in newsmagazines to ask if the war criminals in Rwanda will ever be brought to justice.

The simple answer is no, because as in Canada, there is no political will to prosecute war criminals. Canada has enabling legislation enacted in 1987, Royal Canadian Mounted Police with a reputation for always getting their man, a sophisticated judicial system and a war crimes section of the Ministry of Justice.

In seven years, four charges were laid, three have been withdrawn and one accused was acquitted. Hundreds of others discovered by a Royal Commission have not even been identified let alone charged. What possible hope is there in a country like Rwanda which lies in shambles with no infrastructure, judicial or otherwise? None!

To entertain that the United Nations would undertake such a task is tragically laughable. Would they start with Cambodia, Iraq or the former Yugoslavia? Commissions of inquiry will provide jobs for thousands, and millions of dollars will be expended, but not one perpetrator will ever be brought before a tribunal.

The problems of the Jewish Centre in Toronto

By RABBI W. GUNTHER PLAUT

During these last weeks I have been repeatedly urged to write a column about the Jewish Community Centre in Toronto, its difficulties and the proposed solutions.

I found very little public agreement on the major issues that beset this unhappy situation. A prime Jewish institution in the country's largest city, having incurred a debt said to be around $15 million — which it was unable to pay — sought help from the Toronto Jewish Federation, banks and private interests.

Ordinarily one would think that this is the kind of matter that could be settled intelligently and calmly by people who have had experience in community work and/or have been enormously successful in business. But it turns out that a lot of emotion beclouds the matter which has developed into an unfortunate controversy and has divided much of the community.

Different groups have accused each other of presenting the facts wrongly, of shading the past and introducing personalities into a solution which is either wholeheartedly supported or vigorously opposed. Much depends on the person or persons to whom you listen. I've tried to sort out the facts as best as I could, but I must admit that I do not have enough knowledge about the entire tangle (perhaps more accurately described as mess) that has brought a well-beloved institution to its knees and has so sharply increased animosities in the community.

Rabbi Plaut

A key issue was the dismissal of 32 employees of the centre and the Leah Posluns Theatre. (Some have now been reinstated.) Another question centred on the demise of the Institute for Jewish Learning. Steps have recently been taken to make each of the three branches of the JCC an independent entity; and the Bathurst branch is operating under a new name, with a new board to operate the facility for the receiver.

What still worries me above all, however, is the division that has occurred in the community — a division which I think is not only unnecessary but most unfortunate. As indicated, I do not know all the facts and therefore will abstain from any kind of public judgment, but the time is right for appointing an independent person or group of persons to sort out what needs to be clarified and to inform the community objectively what took place and what still needs to be done.

When that occurs, I believe the community at large will regain its confidence in communal institutions that need support. Without this, the future of many other institutions would be in serious doubt.

For instance, some people urge others to reduce their pledges to the Jewish Federation in its annual UJA campaign. That would be throwing out the baby with the bathwater and in the end, neither the community with all its other educational and social programs, nor the recipient institutions in Israel, would be helped. Everyone would lose, and I think the centre probably would lose most of all.

I therefore ask my readers to put their judgments temporarily on hold until the facts are clear, and meanwhile go on with the business of doing the right thing by the United Jewish Appeal and its current campaign, which sorely needs money for a great variety of causes. They now know that the centre is in operation, offering most of its programs, and when more information about the financial reconstruction is at hand, as suggested above, an independent group of persons should give us all the story as they see it. This is the only way to calm the troubled waters and it is none too early to proceed with some such plan.

I take it for granted that the future of the dismissed employees, many of them having served the Jewish centre for a number of decades, will also be reconsidered. Individuals, in my book, are more important than institutions and some solution that is equitable and satisfies the demands of justice, must be found — and I think it will.

Future remains uncertain in Ukraine

By LISA GLAZER
Jewish Telegraphic Agency

Emigration is increasing, yet Jewish life beginning to flourish as schools grow

For the Jewish community of Ukraine, one of the world's largest, the future looms like an ominous question mark. The dreams, desires, anxieties and uncertainties can be reduced to a single query: To stay or to go?

Emigration to Israel is accelerating so rapidly that Ukraine now has the fastest-growing emigration rates in the former Soviet Union, according to officials with the Jewish Agency for Israel.

Yet at the same time, Jewish life is beginning to flourish, with schools, camps, Yiddish clubs, newspapers, cultural groups and religious organizations expanding by leaps and bounds.

Not surprisingly, planning ahead is difficult, especially since the national political situation is tense and unclear.

"I have no sense of what's going to happen," said Rabbi Ya'akov Bleich, the chief rabbi of Ukraine's approximately 500,000 Jews. "I don't think everyone is going to move out in the next three or five years, but then again, I wouldn't advise building a new synagogue."

"The more people go, the more people come. This is our paradox," said Kira Verkhovskaya, a Jewish leader from Odessa, referring to the simultaneous trends of emigration and new affiliation with the Jewish community.

For those boarding planes to Tel Aviv, financial problems appear to be a primary motivation. While average wages are stuck at about $20 a month, consumer items like clothing and appliances cost about the same as they do in the West. Industrial production is plummeting, market reform is only hiccuping along and hyperinflation means that Ukraine's currency, the coupon, now runs at more than 45,000 to the dollar.

"For the most part, Jews are leaving for economic reasons," according to Zvi Rom, who oversees the Jewish Agency office in Kiev.

"It's not really aliyah, it's repatriation, because it's not for ideological reasons," he said. "As an Israeli, I would like to see Jews leave Ukraine because they have come to the conclusion that Jews should live in Israel, but that is not what is happening."

Still, a growing proportion of Ukrainian Jews have decided to move to Israel after attending the new Sunday schools for adults and sending their children to Jewish day schools.

Others are leaving to be with loved ones. Nearly every member of the Jewish community here has close friends or relatives living in Israel who are urging them to make the move.

Another push is anti-Semitism. While the new president, Leonid Kuchma, is following the friendly policies toward Jews that have become the norm since independence, the country's sputtering economy is straining his staying power.

But Jew-hating has not disappeared. Interviewed at a Jewish summer camp in Odessa, Igor Bloch, 16, recalled a recent performance of the Jewish theater group he belongs to in the eastern Ukrainian city of Makeyevka.

"Some people cried out, "Avram, go away to Israel' and other things I don't want to say," Bloch said. "Our leader said, 'Don't worry, we will go!' "

The number of Ukrainian Jews choosing Israel is constantly increasing. While emigration statistics are dropping slightly in Russia, where the economic and political mayhem has stabilized somewhat, Ukrainian emigration has nearly doubled in the past year, from 1,300 a month to 2,300 each month, according to Chaim Chesler, who oversees the Jewish Agency in the former Soviet Union.

Despite the many departures, Jewish life continues its vigorous revival in the land that produced Chasidic Judaism, populist Zionism and dozens of gifted Yiddish writers before the dark years of Soviet repression.

Today Ukraine has not one, but two umbrella Jewish organizations.

Kiev, the capital city, is home to three religious congregations and a welfare society serving 6,000 poor and elderly Jews. Active communities also exist in Odessa, Kharkov and dozens of smaller cities and towns.

"Ukraine has a very lively Jewish community," Rabbi Bleich said. "The Jews here are more connected to their Judaism than those in Russia because it wasn't long ago they lived in shtetls. They have an emotional connection, while in Russia, people's relationship with Judaism is more philosophical."

Arkady Monastirski, 33, the vice president of the Jewish Council of Ukraine, calls himself an optimist when it comes to the future for Jews here.

"People are working with us, helping us," he said. "Some people say Jews are history, their problems are old problems, but these people don't understand."

One of the organizations providing assistance to Jews here is the American Jewish Joint Distribution Committee, which has offices in Kiev and Odessa.

"There is a future here, if only because there will be hundreds and thousands of Jews here for the next five or 10 years, barring any unforeseen catastrophe," according to Charles Hoffman, a former journalist who oversees the JDC office in Kiev.

"There is no reason why they should be deprived of the basic means and facilities to redevelop a Jewish life for themselves," he said.

Those who remain and redevelop this Jewish life must grapple with the country's troubled past, which includes the Chmielnitsky massacres of Jews in 1648, the Petlyura pogroms of 1919 and 1920 and Babi Yar, where 33,771 Jews were shot and buried in September 1941.

"In Ukraine, anti-Semitism is a tradition: negative views of the Jewish people have been passed down from generation to generation," said Monastirski of the Jewish Council.

"But now many Ukrainians have married Jews and their children are now half-Jews," he said, adding that such intermarriage can serve as a basis for reconciliation.

Zinaida Fourmanova, a screenwriter in Kiev who recently completed a film examining the myths about the relationship between Ukrainians and Jews, believes that while Jewish history in Ukraine "has been very difficult, very tragic," the Jewish connection here is "still very deep."

It's that connection, she said, that keeps her here to continue her work while the rest of her family has moved to Israel. "I feel it myself," she said.

Talk at Sunday school proves revealing

By ERICA MEYER RAUZIN

Recently, I was the guest speaker at an adult Sunday school class at a rural Methodist church. I was given an hour on their agenda, one hour, in which to explain myself and my religion. It was an interesting and slightly nerve-wracking experience.

When I arrived, I was escorted into the church dining hall where members of the congregation were sharing coffee, orange juice and doughnuts before classes and services. Children ran around, weaving through the adults; every adult knew every child by name. Little girls in bright dresses looked at me wide-eyed over their doughnuts. I was not sure they had ever seen anyone Jewish before, at least, not anyone they knew was Jewish.

Last year, I spoke to a class of fourth and fifth graders at this same church, so I saw a few familiar, but shy, children. I didn't know any of the adults except my mother's friend who had invited me both times to visit her church and to speak.

I am accustomed to public speaking, but most of my audiences are either classrooms of small children or luncheon groups of Jewish ladies. The Peace on Earth Sunday School Class was a new experience for me.

And, I think, I was a new experience for them.

The class began by singing hymns. Lacking a decent singing voice, a knowledge of the lyrics, and any internal commitment to the content of the songs, I was happy to listen, and to try to gather my thoughts. The singing was followed by an update from the volunteer chair, a comfortable lady in a sprigged dress and sensible shoes. She offered a tally of recent fundraising, a list of those who were ailing and should be prayed for, and a gracious welcome.

Erica Meyer Rauzin

As I stood up, the church's minister came in to the class and sat down. My nervousness ratcheted up a couple more notches.

I had been asked to discuss Jewish customs and traditions. Instead of offering a litany of holidays, I tried to describe behaviors that bring the religion home, that make it part of our everyday lives, at least in the modern Orthodox world: studying Torah, keeping kosher and observing Sabbath.

I began by explaining that I could speak only for myself, not for Judaism, not for Orthodoxy, not for anyone else. I told them, "I know 100 people, not counting a score of rabbis, who could do this task better than I can, but I am the one who is here, and so I will try."

They listened carefully, politely. Most of them were older than I am, though a few were fortysomething like me. They were taken by the items I had brought: a prayer book with commentary, a Chumash (Torah) with commentary, a mezuzah, and a jar of olives I had picked up at the convenience store on the way over, so that I could show them the U in the circle on the label, a little spot of kosher-confirmation right on their block.

When we got around to questions, the minister asked me to explain the symbolism of the items on the seder plate. I could do that. One lady asked if I had been this caught up in my religion my whole life. No, I hadn't. I grew up Conservative, spent my early professional life in a Reform congregation, and became more observant when I got married. An older man asked about sin: "What do you do," he queried, "about sin?"

I managed not to make any jokes (like, "I try to avoid it"). He meant what did Judaism offer for forgiveness and repentance, so I described both the daily prayers' request for atonement and the solemnity of Yom Kippur.

And then they asked about their messiah, who was he to me. This is always the hard question, the dividing line question, and I always try to answer honestly, but without offence. This time, I had the right story to offer.

I have a dear college friend in North Carolina. Mary is a talented writer, a dedicated mother, and a very religious person. She has been working on a biblical time line of the "Old and New Testaments." She had finished her "Old Testament" project and was considering whether to send it to a publisher now or to wait until she completed the "New Testament" section to go with it.

"I'm wondering," she told me on the phone, "if the 'Old Testament' stands on its own?"

"Well," I told her, with a smile in my voice, "I always thought so."

And we laughed together.

It was good to laugh with her, and with the Sunday school class, as we went out into the bright, cordial morning, content with our differences.

Relations with Austria never better

By SHELDON KIRSHNER

Yosef Govrin, Israel's ambassador to Austria for the past year, is normally reticent, as befits a diplomat of his stature. But when he describes the current state of Israel's bilateral relations with Austria, he positively gushes.

"They're excellent. They've never been better."

Kurt Hengl, deputy head of the Middle East department in the Foreign Ministry and Austria's former envoy in Israel, is in full agreement with Govrin's assessment. "Things have never been smoother and so devoid of problems."

Walter Schwimmer, a member of parliament and president of the Austria-Israel Friendship Society, is just as upbeat. "All the clouds have disappeared, and the situation is better than normal."

That Austria and Israel have started "a new chapter" in their previously acrimonious relationship, as Israeli Foreign Minister Shimon Peres recently put it, is anything but hype.

"The period of ill-feeling has definitely ended," observes Andreas Unterberger, foreign editor of Die Presse, Vienna's august daily.

Relations began to improve dramatically in June 1992, when Israel raised its representation in Vienna from charge d'affaires to ambassador. A year later, Franz Vranitzky became the first Austrian chancellor to visit Israel, solemnly acknowledging that Austria shared "a moral responsibility" for crimes committed against Jews in Austria during the Nazi period.

Not long afterward, the vice-chancellor, Erhard Busek, and the president of the Austrian parliament, Heinz Fischer, as well as a parade of cabinet ministers, went to Israel.

And on Nov. 7, Thomas Klestil will be welcomed in Jerusalem, the first Austrian president to set foot on Israeli soil. (He has already made state visits to Jordan and Syria.)

Visible improvements in Israel's links with Austria took shape as the six-year presidential term of Kurt Waldheim wound down.

Waldheim, the former secretary-general of the United Nations, tried to conceal his role as a German intelligence officer in the Balkans during World War II. According to the U.S. Justice Department and the World Jewish Congress, Waldheim was involved in actions against civilians.

The disclosures, publicized on the eve of the 1986 presidential election, caused an international storm and prompted Yitzhak Shamir, the-then Israeli foreign minister, to comment that a Waldheim victory would be "a real tragedy."

With Waldheim's triumph at the polls, Israel recalled its ambassador in Vienna, Michael Elizur, who did not return. He was eventually replaced by a lower ranking charge d'affaires.

It was not the first time Israel's ties with Austria had been buffeted. From 1970 until 1983, when the leadership of Austria was in the hands of Bruno Kreisky, a Socialist of Jewish descent, there were often recriminations between the two nations.

The reasons for the tension were clear. Kreisky adopted an activist Mideast policy, championing the rights of the Palestinians, recognizing the PLO, cultivating the leaders of Third World countries, and condemning Israel's settlements in the territories and, during the Likud era after May 1977, harshly lambasting Menachem Begin's policies and character and Israel's invasion of Lebanon.

Austria — whose foreign policy was based on strict neutrality between East and West — lowered its rhetoric on Middle East affairs in the wake of Kreisky's resignation and his replacement by Fred Sinowatz. As a result, there was a perceptible improvement in Israeli-Austrian relations. But with the emergence of the Waldheim controversy, Israel and Austria squared off again.

Yet even during this tense period, Vienna continued to serve as a transit point for Soviet Jews emigrating to Israel and the West. Furthermore, Austria played a much-appreciated role in United Nations peacekeeping on the Golan Heights and in the Sinai Peninsula, and was at the centre of a number of Arab-Israeli prisoner-of-war exchanges.

Although Israel remained bitter about Waldheim's ascendancy, high-level contacts were never broken off. "Neither side," says Unterberger, a keen analyst of Middle Eastern affairs, "had a vested interest in exaggerating the conflict."

The process of normalization was gradual, explains Hengl, who was Austria's charge d'affaires in Tel Aviv from 1989 and ambassador from 1992 until last spring. (He was the cultural attache from 1971-74, and his son was born in Israel).

In June 1992, at around the time Austria and Israel exchanged ambassadors once again, Klestil, then secretary-general of the Foreign Ministry, visited Israel. Ostensibly there for the birthday party of Teddy Kollek — the then mayor of Jerusalem and a native son of Vienna — Klestil used the opportunity to engage in talks with leaders of Israel's new Labor party government. Upon his return, Klestil pointedly urged Waldheim not to try for a second term in office.

Klestil, Hengl believes, "opened the door" for a marked improvement in relations. Shortly afterward, Peres and Shulamit Aloni became the first Israeli cabinet ministers to visit Vienna, albeit unofficially. Govrin claims that "time constraints" have prevented an official visit by an Israeli minister.

Although the core of its current policy remains unchanged — an Israeli withdrawal from the territories and the establishment of a Palestinian state — Austria has a more balanced approach to the Arab-Israeli dispute, in Hengl's opinion. And, in Govrin's estimation, "the Waldheim and Kreisky eras belong to the past." Austria, he declares, wants "to play a more objective role" in the future.

Hengl, who's scheduled to be Austria's next ambassador to Mexico, feels there is greater Austrian understanding of and appreciation for Israel's security needs, as well as "much less of a willingness to give in to Arab demands." And, he adds, "I'm proud to have contributed to this new perception."

Austria, Unterberger points out, is really more neutral now than in the 1970s and early 1980s. "During the Kreisky years there was a slight anti-Israel touch," he allows.

Austria, too, is not as preoccupied with the Mideast as it was under Kreisky. "With Kreisky, the Middle East seemed to concentrate Austrian attention. But today, Austria is preoccupied with events in Europe in general and with the Balkans in particular."

Nonetheless, due to its longstanding political and economic interests in the Middle East, Austria's involvement in the Mideast peace process remains undiminished.

Austria is one of some 30 nations taking part in multilateral talks on water resources, economic cooperation, arms control, the environment and refugees. These working groups stem from the 1991 Madrid peace process.

Last May, Israeli parliamentarians and a PLO delegation picked Vienna as the venue for informal talks on the final status of the territories.

More concretely, Austria is studying the idea of setting up an office in the newly autonomous Palestinian areas (the Gaza Strip and Jericho). Meanwhile, it has pledged $21 million (US) for humanitarian projects there.

In line with Vranitzky's pledge to Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin that Austria will spare no efforts on behalf of Israeli servicemen missing in action in Lebanon, Austria has raised the issue at the highest levels in Iran and Syria. Damascus and Teheran, of course, exert enormous influence with regard to MiAs.

Although Austria has no anti-boycott legislation in place, Israel is pressing for increased mutual trade, hoping to capitalize on the changed political climate in Vienna.

"There is room for greater Israeli exports, particularly in such fields as high technology and textiles," says Schwimmer, who recently held discussions in Israel with Rabin and Peres.

"The potential is enormous," observes Hengl. The current annual volume of trade — amounting to slightly less than $200 million, in Vienna's favor — is expected to rise now that Austria is on the verge of gaining membership in the European Union.

"We want to increase our exports," says Govrin. "To close the gap."

With this objective in mind, Israel, in July, dispatched an economic counsellor to its embassy. And recently, Israel was given permission to bid for military tenders. Austria looms as a potentially rich market for Israeli weaponry. (Austria, though, has a well-developed arms manufacturing sector. In the 1980s, Austrian equipment, ranging from tanks to artillery pieces, was sold to Iraq and Iran. At issue today is whether Austria should allow Saudi Arabia to buy Austrian weaponry.)

Scientific and technical cooperation is high on the agenda now that Israel and Austria have signed an agreement to that end. Several projects, some involving the Technion and the Weizmann Institute, are under consideration.

Cultural relations are also on the upswing, though this field is still rather fallow. Austria has financed a chair in Austrian Studies at the Hebrew University, and plans are afoot for similar chairs at other Israeli universities. Innsbruck University and Tel Aviv University are planning a joint project on the development of Israel's relationship with Austria. And Israel has signed an accord with the Austrian Ministry of Education for the supply of Holocaust-related materials.

Amid all these fast-flowing developments on the political, commercial and cultural fronts, there has been a remarkable turnaround in Israel's overall image in Austria.

"The intifadah [the Palestinian uprising, which broke out in December 1987] worsened Israel's image," says Schwimmer. "TV clips of Israeli soldiers firing on Palestinian children elicited sympathy for the Arab side. But since Israel's reconcilation with the PLO last year, public opinion in Austria has changed.

"Austrians now realize that Israelis want peace and are doing a lot to achieve it. This has worked to Israel's advantage."

The Jewish World

By SHELDON KIRSHNER

Leon Zelman builds bridges.

Bridges that foster mutual understanding.

Bridges that convey knowledge.

Bridges that heal wounds.

Zelman, a 67-year-old Holocaust survivor from Poland, runs the Jewish Welcome Service in Vienna, an organization he established in 1979 with the cooperation and support of Vienna's former mayor, Leopold Graz.

Originally founded as a public relations office acting on behalf of the city for the benefit of Jewish visitors, the Jewish Welcome Service has since broadened its mandate.

It is known as the place for arranging contacts between Jews from Austria and abroad, organizing exchange programs for Austrian and Israeli youths, bringing the offspring of former Austrian Jews on visits to the Austrian capital, publishing periodicals on Jewish Vienna and renovating Jewish cemeteries.

It is hard to miss the Jewish Welcome Service, which is in a perfect location opposite St. Stephan Cathedral, Vienna's venerable landmark.

And it's practically impossible not to be impressed by Zelman's indefatigable dedication. He is a bundle of energy, an excitable, talkative individual who usually gets so enmeshed in his visions that he is prone to go off on tangents.

Despite his eccentricities, Zelman — the recipient of a PhD in philosophy from the University of Vienna and a man of many parts — never wavers from his course.

A survivor in Vienna

By promoting Vienna — a city once energized by Jews — to Jewish tourists, Zelman accomplishes two major goals. He generates tourism, and he helps burnish Austria's image, which was badly tarnished by the Kurt Waldheim affair.

In line with these objectives, Zelman publishes the Jewish Echo, a German-language annual chock full of articles on Jewish history and culture, particularly as they relate to Austria. Buttressed by ads, the Jewish Echo has a circulation ranging from 9,000 to 11,000. The Austrian government buys about 1,000 copies, sending them to its embassies.

He is also the mastermind behind Jewish Vienna: Heritage and Mission, a glossy brochure published by the Vienna Tourist Board for the Jewish Welcome Service.

Zelman, who lost his entire family during the war, regularly delivers lectures to Austrian students on the Holocaust and the contributions of Jews to Austrian society.

"Jews played an important role in Viennese history. They wern't strangers here. It's my task to impart this information. It's my mission."

In the past two decades, Zelman has visited more than 100 schools, gratified and encouraged by the response. "They want to know about Jewish history. They are interested in my Holocaust experiences."

At the height of the Waldheim affair, in 1986 and 1987, Zelman was especially busy with his lectures. Describing the incident as "a confrontation with the past," Zelman has nothing but contempt for Waldheim, who was Austria's president until two years ago. "He is a terrible liar. He didn't have the courage to be honest about his [wartime] record."

Zelman's latest project, a cultural centre within a Jewish school in Jerusalem, is expected to be ready next May, in time for the 50th anniversary of the end of World War II.

Financed by private donations, the facility will be a place where Israeli and Austrian students can meet and discuss issues of common interest. As many as 2,000 Austrians are expected to participate in the program annually.

Zelman was raised in Lodz, lived through the rigors of the Lodz ghetto and survived the depravations of Auschwitz and Mauthausen. Finding himself all alone in Vienna after the war, he rebuilt his shattered life. He and his wife — an Israeli — have two daughters, a doctor and an Austrian Airlines stewardess.

Some survivors don't understand why he's chosen Vienna as his home. But he adores the city. And he's optimistic about the Jewish community's future. "Forty years ago, I was told the community was finished. Look at what's happened since."

By RABBI REUBEN POUPKO

No story in our Chumash has captured the attention of people, Jew and gentile alike, like the account of the Binding of Isaac.

Jewish commentators throughout the ages have left their own unique imprint upon the body of accumulated learning focused on the Akeida. No Jewish thinker considered his work complete unless somehow the story of a father tying his son to an altar was interpreted to represent the individual's world view.

Some have focused on Avraham, a man who dreamed so long of an heir to carry on a spiritual mission, who was now called upon by the focus of that mission to destroy any hope that the knowledge of Him would be known to the world.

Some have focused on Yitzhak, imagining what it must have been like to go through life with the image of your father standing over you with a knife. The spiritually aware realized that Yitzhak was forever changed, not so much by his father's knife, but by having been placed on the altar of God.

All agree, however, that the Akeida has served as the prototype for Jewish martyrdom through the centuries. It is the symbol of Jewish self-sacrifice from our earliest history through the Holocaust. Together, with Sinaitic revelation, it stands as one of the primary events in Jewish spiritual life.

A great modern rabbi sought to contrast the Akeida with the primary event of the Christian faith. He explained that in Christianity, God comes down from heaven to sacrifice Himself for people; in Judaism, man ascends a mountain to offer a sacrifice for God. The differences speak volumes about the way we view this world and the way others see it.

There is one question about the Akeida which receives relatively scant attention. Why is it God Himself who commands Avraham to bind Yitzhak upon the altar, but only an angel who rescinds the command? Why is it God who demands the sacrifice of a life, while it is the angel who spares that life?

The Rambam maintains that one of the reasons for the Akeida is to demonstrate faith in prophecy: Avraham believes that what he hears is the clear and unadulterated word of God, and is willing to make the ultimate sacrifice, based upon a prophecy.

One could therefore postulate that while the command to sacrifice was a demonstration of the confidence a prophet has in his own prophecy, the obeyance of the command to spare Yitzhak was a demonstration of how all Jews must respond to an authentic messenger of God. The command came from an angel and not from God, in order to clearly reveal the greatness of Avraham. Avraham was not only able to act on a prophecy, but was able to discern an authentic messenger of God and follow the word of that messenger.

JTS receives major donation to launch graduate school

NEW YORK — The world's largest and, organizers say, most comprehensive graduate school of Jewish education will open its doors at the Jewish Theological Seminary of America in September 1996, thanks to a record $15 million (U.S.) gift from William M. Davidson, the Detroit businessman and majority owner of the Detroit Pistons basketball team.

The new school, to be named the William Davidson Graduate School of Jewish Education, is expected to play a major role in the battle for Jewish continuity in North America, a statement from JTS says.

A spokesman for the seminary, the 108-year old religious and academic center of Conservative Judaism worldwide, said the $15 million gift is likely the largest ever given to a single institution of Jewish education.

The school's mission will be threefold: to overcome what JTS says is a disturbing scarcity of professional Jewish educators in North America and around the world by developing a new generation of teaching and administrative personnel; to support local Jewish education efforts through the development of new teaching curricula and materials; and to conduct the most extensive academic research yet in the field of Jewish education.

"This is a historic day for the seminary, for Jewish education and for the future of American Jewry," said JTS Chancellor Rabbi Ismar Schorsch. "A major Jewish philanthropist has decided to give a gift, on the scale usually reserved for universities and hospitals, to an institution of higher Jewish studies. More important, the money will go entirely for the single most urgent need in North American Jewish life: the field of education."

Will offer doctorate of education

The new school will offer a fully accredited doctorate of education in religious studies, in addition to PhD and master's programs.

The entire amount of the gift will form an endowment devoted exclusively to support programming. Specifically, it will be used to retain current and add additional faculty, provide scholarships and fellowships to the most outstanding students, and fund research into improved methods of Jewish education. No part of the gift will be used for additions or improvements to the physical plant, JTS says.

Founded in 1886, JTS is a university-level institution housing the Rabbinical School, the Cantors Institute/Seminary College of Jewish Music, the graduate school, which offers degrees through the doctoral level, and the Albert A. List College of Jewish Studies.

JTS affiliates include the University of Judaism in Los Angeles, the Bet Midrash/Seminary of Judaic Studies in Jerusalem and the Jewish Museum in New York City.

The seminary is also closely allied with the Seminario Rabbinico Latinamericano in Buenos Aires and the Jewish Theological Seminary in Budapest.

Richmond Hill councillor favors tax reassessment

Municipal Decision '94

David Cohen

By FRANCES KRAFT
CJN Staff Reporter

RICHMOND HILL — The Town of Richmond Hill's only Jewish candidate in the Nov. 14 municipal election is determined to raise the issue of market value assessment if he's re-elected.

Although David Cohen, incumbent councillor for Ward 3, was the only council member to vote in favor of market value assessment last term, he is undeterred.

A 40-year-old collection officer for Revenue Canada, Cohen believes market value assessment could reduce municipal taxes in his ward by 10 to 25 per cent.

Taxes are proportionally higher here than in Metro Toronto, he explains, because most of the homes in his ward were built in recent years, after land became more expensive.

"We've frozen taxes for the last three years. That is the main issue in Richmond Hill," said Cohen, who was first elected in 1988 and now chairs the town's finance and administration committee.

Among Cohen's challenges will be ensuring "the sensible development of the Langstaff Jail Farm lands [north of Highway 7 between Yonge and Bayview]," he said. An application for high-density housing on the land has caused the issue to be a major concern for Ward 3 residents, he explained.

Although his ward's geographic size has been reduced by about one-third for this election, it is still the second largest ward in Richmond Hill. Now bounded by Bayview Avenue, Highway 7, Highway 404 and Major Mackenzie Drive, the ward once extended as far west as Yonge Street.

The 14,000 voters are about 15 per cent Jewish and 45 per cent Chinese, said Cohen. It's a mostly affluent bedroom community, with the majority owning homes or condominiums.

Among his accomplishments as councillor, Cohen lists the organization of a race relations committee. He was also involved in the creation of the new Central Library (the largest library in York Region) at Yonge and Major Mackenzie, and the Bayview Hill Swimming Pool.

"I enjoy working [as councillor], and I find it very challenging," Cohen said.

Blood screening clinic being planned at BJC to find donor for Jay Feinberg

By LEILA SPEISMAN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — As the condition of Jay Feinberg deteriorates, attempts to find a compatible bone marrow donor for him are becoming more urgent.

B'nai B'rith Youth Organization, Lake Ontario region, is holding a mass blood screening clinic on Thursday, Oct. 20, in the lobby of the Bathurst Jewish Centre, 4588 Bathurst St. from 5 p.m. to 8 p.m.

Because his situation is getting so serious — Feinberg, who suffers from a virulent form of leukemia, announced on the Shirley Show this week he has only a few months to live unless he gets a transplant — this clinic will test youngsters under the age of 17, as long as they have written consent of a parent or guardian.

Ordinarily, the Red Cross insists that candidates for bone marrow donation be between 17 and 50.

Those wishing to be tested must be in general good health. Blood type does not matter.

Those previously tested for Feinberg, Alison Atlas or for others who need bone marrow transplants need not be retested.

The clinic has the approval of the Feinberg family.

BBYO will have booths selling cake, pop and chips to raise money to pay for the testing, and there will be a donation table as well.

Each test costs about $75 (Cdn).

For more information, call BBYO, (416) 635-9411.

Another clinic was scheduled for Oct. 18 at Shaarei Shomayim Congregation (470 Glencairn Ave.), from 5 p.m. to 9 p.m.

Holocaust Education Week planned

TORONTO — More than 50 exciting and insightful programs will mark the 14th Annual Holocaust Education Week to be held Nov. 3 to 15.

Holocaust Education Week is presented by the Holocaust Remembrance Committee of the Jewish Federation of Greater Toronto.

This community-wide event "attempts to reach people of all ages, ethnic backgrounds and religions" said organizer Lilian Schachter.

On Nov. 3 at 8 p.m., Dr. Michael Berenbaum, director of the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Research Institute, will speak at Adath Israel Congregation, 37 Southbourne Ave.

Other speakers include Dr. Rachel Feldhay Brenner of the Department of Hebrew & Semitic Studies, University of Wisconsin-Madison; Dr. Franklin [illegible], professor of religion at Temple University; history professor Susan Zuccotti of Barnard College, Columbia University; Dr. Esther Delisle of McGill University; Ruth Ellen Gruber, freelance writer and former chief UPI correspondent in Vienna, Warsaw and Belgrade; Prof. Randolph Braham of the Rosenthal Institute for Holocaust Studies, City University of New York; and Prof. Michael Marrus of the University of Toronto.

There will be a special program on war veterans and the liberation of European Jews. Both Jewish and non-Jewish perspectives will be presented.

For more information, please call Pnina Zilberman at (416) 635-2883 ext. 144.

Women at Beth Tzedec get expanded role

By FRANCES KRAFT
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Women at Beth Tzedec Congregation have a newly defined role at services following the recent release of an 18-page responsum by Rabbi Baruch Frydman-Kohl, senior rabbi of the congregation.

The board of governors of the synagogue had asked the rabbi, as a condition of his being hired last year, to help define "what a full role could be" for women in the synagogue service. In 1992, the board passed a resolution endorsing women's participation in services and eligibility for Torah honors.

Although the Rabbinical Assembly's committee on Jewish law and standards determines parameters of Jewish law for the Conservative movement, congregational rabbis in Conservative congregations make halachic decisions for their own synagogues.

Rabbi Frydman-Kohl's responsum has opened the door for women at Beth Tzedec to be called for aliyot (as long as men are also called), to carry the Torah, lift it for Hagbah, roll the Torah scroll and tie the Torah sash for Glilah, and to open the ark to remove or replace the Torah.

Previously women at Beth Tzedec — the largest Conservative congregation in North America — were permitted aliyot only under certain conditions. Women who had had a bat mitzvah, for example, were permitted to have an aliyah on the occasion of their child's bar or bat mitzvah.

"We had a definite inconsistency," says Judy Feld Carr, the only woman to have served as president of the congregation. Unlike her male counterparts, she was not offered an aliyah on becoming president in 1982. (Instead, the offer was made to her husband, who declined.) Three months later, however, Carr was offered an aliyah on the occasion of her daughter's bat mitzvah.

In a community where women pray together with men, said Rabbi Frydman-Kohl, "halachic scholars must avoid prohibiting women from participating in aspects of public liturgy which are theoretically permissible."

The belief that women are prohibited from physical contact with the Torah during their menstrual cycle is "in direct contradiction to Talmudic law which rules that 'words of Torah are not susceptible to ritual impurity,' " he noted.

The new policies, which went into effect at Rosh Hashanah, should not be misconstrued as egalitarianism regarding inclusion in a minyan for public prayer or leading prayer services, Rabbi Frydman-Kohl emphasized.

"The community should not misunderstand the justifiable inclusion of women for Torah honors with the abandonment of rabbinic law or gender distinctiveness," he said.

There is Talmudic and rabbinic justification for giving women Torah honors, he noted.

The rabbi's conclusions regarding women's participation are only part of "a comprehensive picture" of making everyone at services feel welcome and spiritually fulfilled, he said.

Other changes at the shul as a result of the responsum are a return to reading the full Torah parshah each Shabbat and to allotting the first two aliyot to male kohanim and levi'im.

Beth Tzedec's immediate past president John Pollock, an admitted traditionalist, lauds the responsum as "courageous, timely and a theological breakthrough in Toronto." Pollock believes the changes will be "invigorating" and will bring "a greater sense of piety" to the congregation.

Rabbi Baruch Frydman-Kohl

Maxine Gallander Wintre, who opened the ark on Kol Nidre night in Beth Tzedec's main sanctuary, said that the honor provided "a signal to my daughters that they could continue to participate in Torah services past their bat mitzvah."

"If you don't get the women involved today, down the line you won't have a synagogue," said a longtime Beth Tzedec member who didn't want his name to appear in print. "Once the mothers are interested, the kids will come. I think the rabbi's going about it the right way."

"By and large the people who have spoken to me [about the responsum] have been positive," Rabbi Frydman-Kohl said. For those who have difficulty with the changes, he pointed out that Beth Tzedec ritual has not been "significantly altered [from a halachic standpoint], in that women have received aliyot at Beth Tzedec in the immediate past.

"My concern is that people listen to each other, respect each other and find ways to live with each other. This is not a win-lose situation.

"Understanding each other is such a difficult task. We will have to work hard to ensure that everyone feels there is a place for him or her at Beth Tzedec."

Peace Now spokesman urges Israeli sacrifices for peace

By BARBARA SILVERSTEIN
Special to The CJN

TORONTO — The Israeli-Arab peace negotiations may be moving quickly, but peace will only be achieved if Israel makes some real sacrifices, said Tzaly Reshef, a spokeman for Peace Now (Israel).

Reshef was speaking to an audience of some 200 on Making Peace Work: Realities and Challenges, at the recent annual meeting of Canadian Friends of Peace Now.

A member of the Central Policy Commission of the Labor Party, Reshef said the swift pace of the peace process took him by surprise. In a conversation he had with Shimon Peres in May 1993 when they met to discuss "a possible solution to the conflict," Reshef said Peres had suggested giving Jericho and the Gaza Strip to the Palestinians.

"[Peres] already knew that negotiations were taking place. But to me it sounded like a fantasy," Reshef said, adding that at the time, he did not think Peres could convince Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin to go along with the plan.

While the peace negotiations exceeded his expectations, Reshef said there are still some thorny issues — the status of the Golan Heights, the West Bank, and Jerusalem — that must be resolved before "a more complete peace" in the region can be achieved.

He said long term peace with Jordan and the Palestinians would be contingent on Israel's relationship with Syria, because of the power that country wields in the region. However, "peace with Syria has its price," he said. "There is no way to reach an agreement with Syria without returning the whole Golan Heights."

He explained that such an accord would require public approval — Rabin will hold a national referendum. Peace Now is committed to peace with Syria, Reshef said. "It's in Israel's interest. It justifies making a real sacrifice like returning the Golan Heights."

He predicted a bitter struggle in Israel over the return of the Golan Heights as well as the West Bank. Reshef wants the government to financially compensate settlers willing to leave the West Bank, because 80 per cent moved there to get cheap housing, he said.

Reshef also criticized Rabin for not moving the 5,000 Israeli settlers out of Gaza after it was turned over to the Palestinians because such a move would have set a precedent for the relocation of the 100,000 settlers in the West Bank. "Without removing the settlers there will be no agreement," he said.

But the solution for Jerusalem — the political centre for both the Palestinians and the Israelis — will have to be a compromise because it's impossible to draw a border through the city, he said.

Reshef's proposals are controversial inside and outside of Israel. His speech was disrupted by a member of the Jewish Defence League (JDL) who was quickly escorted out of the meeting by a police officer.

Anticipating trouble from the JDL, Mintzy Clement, administrative assistant for Canadian Friends of Peace Now, had contacted the police. JDL members had disrupted a meeting last year and become abusive of one of Peace Now's speakers.

But Clement stressed that people with opposing views are encouraged to contribute to the debate.

Reshef also said he welcomes provocative questions. "I think it's only fair for this audience to hear the challenge."

Dr. Michael Wilschanski, a resident of the West Bank temporarily living in Toronto, rejected Reshef's proposal for West Bank settlers, declaring that those who wished to stay should be allowed to stay.

But Reshef responded that only right wing extremists would choose to remain for ideological reasons, and leaving this group in the middle of the Arab territory is a "recipe for bloodshed between Jews and Arabs."

Jacqueline Swartz, media chair of Peace Now told The CJN she felt the speech "was a very incisive rundown on the successes of the Peace Movement and the challenges it faces."

Describing himself as a pragmatist Reshef said peace is in Israel's best interest. "My aim is not to please the Palestinians. I believe this [peace] is a better solution for Israel."

Peace Now's Mel Shipman stepping down after 12 years

TORONTO — The president of Canadian Friends of Peace Now, Mel Shipman, is retiring after 12 years with the organization he founded.

Shipman will be honored at a Tribute Dinner Oct. 27 at the Primrose Club. Guest speaker Gary Rubin, executive director of Americans for Peace Now, will present the U.S. view of the peace process.

Shipman founded Canadian Friends of Peace Now in 1982. He is director of the Intergenerational Education program at Ryerson Polytechnic University as well as director of United Generations Ontario.

He will be replaced as president by Israeli-born psychologist Dr. Ester Cole and Simon Rosenblum, chief of staff to Ontario's finance minister.

Canadian Friends of Peace Now has branches in Toronto, Montreal, Ottawa, Winnipeg, London and Hamilton.

Tickets for the Tribute Dinner are $55 with a $30 tax receipt. Proceeds will support the Israeli-Palestinian Peace Information Centre, a joint organization representing a full partnership between Peace Now and the Palestinian peace organization Gesher.

Solo York questioned

Municipal Decision '94

By PAUL LUNGEN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Whither York?

Is there a City of York, a place with its own identity, sense of community and future, or would the residents of the mid-town area be better off as part of the City of Toronto?

While local matters such as garbage pickup, policing and traffic flow continue to be the bread-and-butter issues for civic politicians, two of the challengers vying for a council seat in Ward 1 are raising the larger issue of York's future and identity.

Roz Mendelson

Lawyer Ron Frank and freelance journalist Gil Kezwer argue that York is overdue for major changes. Frank, a resident of the region's Humewood area, says "no one refers to the City of York. People don't recognize an identity to the City of York. It's a community that's been without vision and a sense of identity."

Kezwer, who lives in the Cedarvale area of Ward 1, is running on a platform that calls for a community referendum in 1997 to determine whether to merge with the City of Toronto.

With a population of about 140,000, "the city is too small to be viable on its own," Kezwer said. Pointing to "the highest taxes in Metro Toronto," Kezwer claims "our services are the worst" because of the small tax base.

Incumbent councillor Roz Mendelson, who has served a three-year term after defeating longtime representative Ben Nobleman, says council has encouraged economic development in the city. With that development will come an increased tax base and better services, she added.

Mendelson, who lives in the easternmost reaches of Ward 1, adjacent to the City of Toronto, told The CJN council has convinced Metro "on the need for a subway extension from the Eglinton West station to Black Creek."

The extension will promote small business and other commercial development, she said.

Mendelson acknowledged that "there's no question the City of York has the highest mil rate and that's why we're going after commercial development."

Ron Frank

Candidates contacted by The CJN agreed that Ward 1 is primarily a bedroom community with little indigenous commercial resources. There are a few businesses on Vaughan Road and on the south side of Eglinton, west of Bathurst. But the heavily commercial north side of St. Clair is part of the City of Toronto.

The north part of the ward, known as Cedarvale, is home to 15,000 residents, many of them Jewish. The Beth Tzedec Congregation and the Holy Blossom Temple are inside the ward's boundaries. A third, Beth Sholom on Eglinton Avenue, is just outside the ward.

The Humewood area, west of Bathurst, north of St. Clair and south of Cedarvale Park, is home to a mixed population that includes a number of young Jewish couples, as well as pockets of blacks and Hispanics, Frank said.

A 36-year-old father of two, Frank believes city politics have been tainted by corruption scandals involving some York politicians.

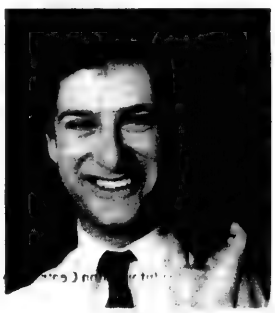
"I think councillors have to express leadership in the community and have a vision of where they'd like to go and set out a broad set of priorities," he said.

Frank said he got involved in local politics when he joined the Oakwood Vaughan second plan steering committee, which reviewed the development plan for the area. His involvement there helped develop his belief in relying on grassroots input into decisions affecting the community.

If elected, Frank said he will hold monthly town hall meetings. "You've got to be out there having dialogue. We've got disparate groups out there. You have to get them together and [take advantage] of the resources that are out there."

Kezwer, a lifelong resident of Cedarvale save for a five-year period in Israel, said there has been an underlying current of dissatisfaction in York ever since 1967 when the province created the current Metro structure.

There is a strong sentiment in favor of amalgamation with Toronto. That would lead to lower taxes and fewer duplication of jobs by city bureacrats, he argued. "One board of education, one library system, one parks department, one works department. Less government means more value for your tax dollar," his campaign material urges.



Gil Kezwer

While Kezwer, 39, acknowledges that amalgamation is the prime plank in his platform, he also takes aim at more immediate concerns, like beautification schemes to plant trees and install benches on the south side of Eglinton.

Although he does not call for amalgamation, Frank believes York residents have traditionally looked to the City of Toronto for services. Residents use Toronto libraries and enroll their children in Toronto sports programs, he points out.

The city could be improved by making better use of the few facilities available. York could offer a minor hockey program at Phil White Arena in Cedarvale Park.

Mendelson, who got her start in politics by working for Liberals John Roberts and Chaviva Hosek, said the city has started streetscaping by planting trees on Raglan Avenue (one block west of Bathurst). A new council, she said, would "go after" the parks department for tree planting on Vaughan Road.

She discounts Kezwer's call for a referendum on amalgamation, saying it is a provincial decision. At any rate, she said, if there were a merger, parts of York would join Toronto, but other areas would join Etobicoke or North York.

Father and son meet after 51-year separation

By RUTH SCHWEITZER
Special to The CJN

TORONTO — On a cold January day 51 years ago Leon Eidelberg smuggled his unnamed one-day-old son out of the Lvov ghetto in a knapsack under his coat, and left him in the care of a Polish Catholic family.

Through the help of the Red Cross, Eidelberg and his son Jerzy Wencki were reunited recently at Pearson International Airport. "I remember how he looked in that house in the ghetto and now he is here," said Eidelberg. "It is something more than a miracle."

The 81-year-old Toronto resident had searched unsuccessfully for his son for years and almost gave up hope, but two years ago he registered with a Red Cross program for reuniting families. With the end of the Cold War, the Red Cross got access to the archives of the former Soviet Union and its satellites, and this time Eidelberg was in luck.

Late in June, Eidelberg and his second wife Nusia, 70, arrived home to find a message from Wencki on their answering machine. Letters and weekly long-distance phone calls led to the airport reunion, which included the Eidelbergs' two sons, Steven, 40, and Jackson, 45.

Eidelberg had never wanted to discuss the past — most of his family perished in the Holocaust — until that first telephone call from Wencki unleashed a flood of painful memories and he opened up. "This stirred a lot of emotions and he started talking about things," said Jackson, who learned of Wencki's existence from a relative for the first time when he was 20.

In 1942, Eidelberg and his pregnant wife Mira lost their 3-year-old daughter when she was snatched from under his wife's coat by soldiers on a street in the Lvov ghetto.

Clara Wencki and her family, who lived behind the fur factory where the Eidelbergs worked, agreed to hide their second child, a son born in January 1943. "She said to us that they will take in the baby — hold it until we are free," Eidelberg remembered. Wencki called the baby Jerzy, and his parents saw him every day for the next few months, until the middle of the summer, when the Nazis liquidated the ghetto.

Eidelberg, with his wife and other Jews fled to the woods, where he hid for the next year and a half. They slept outdoors, and when they ran out of money for food, they begged from farmers. The group was in constant danger from attack by Nazis, other soldiers and bandits, he said, and many were killed, among them Jerzy's mother.

After the Russian liberation of Poland in 1944, Eidelberg returned to Lvov and his son. The Wenckis still lived behind the fur factory, which hired Eidelberg again. "They said, 'You haven't a wife, a place to live,' " he recalled. "They said, 'It will be better if he stays with us.' And they were right." He rented a room in the building, to be close to his son.

In 1945, Polish nationals were relocated within the new borders of Poland — Lvov became Lviv, now in Ukraine — and the Wenckis promised Eidelberg that he would accompany them.

However, after spending a weekend away in the summer of 1945, he returned to find that the Polish family had disappeared without leaving a forwarding address. He then searched for his son in vain.

Eidelberg left Poland on foot for Italy, where he met his second wife Nusia. They came to Canada in 1948, settling in Montreal, and continued the search for his lost son through a relative of Nusia's living in Warsaw. After many years the couple gave up in despair.

But when Eidelberg learned about the Red Cross family reunification program through Kelly MacGregor, a family friend who had heard about it on the radio, he was prepared to try again. "In his heart, Leon always knew his lost son was alive," said Jackson.

When Jerzy Wencki received a letter from the Red Cross earlier this year, the puzzle that was his heritage began to fall into place.

Baptized and raised Roman Catholic, he had been told that he was the illegitimate son of one of Clara Wencki's daughters, although he always suspected that something was amiss because he was so different from the Wenckis.

"Mentally and physically I did not resemble them." Wencki said in Polish, with his father acting as translator.

Seventeen years ago, when he was 34, one of his Polish aunts informed him that his parents had been killed during the war and she divulged his birth family's surname. The aunt denied that his birth family was Jewish, but Jerzy was skeptical because he thought Eidelberg was a Jewish name. This year Jerzy went to examine the records for himself and he confirmed that he is Jewish.

In less than a week, Jackson and his brother Steven came to feel very close to Wencki in spite of their minimal Polish.

"My sons are so close to him that you can feel the closeness and love," said Nusia.

Although Jerzy flies back home at the end of October, an ocean will not keep the family apart. Wencki's wife and his 16-year-old son plan to visit Toronto in the next few months and the Eidelbergs plan a trip to Poland in the future. "We will be a family," vows Eidelberg.

ISRAEL BONDS HONORS MARKUS

Bank of Montreal Partners With Baycrest Centre

Employees from five Bank of Montreal branches combined business with fun to raise close to $2,000 for the "Baycrest Challenge," a major fundraising project of Baycrest Centre for Geriatric Care. One day a week for five weeks preceding this Mother's Day event, each of the branches organized a special "Baycrest Challenge Day" to raise awareness among their customers and collect pledges. Pinchas Gutter, President of the Men's Service Group (third from right), congratulates the five branch managers, (left to right) Anar Samji (Dufferin/Celt), Joanne Kokkoros (Bathurst/Steeles), Rob Crema (Bathurst Community Manager), Lydia Landolt (Eglinton/Hilltop) and Mark Adler (Bathurst/Frontenac).

Jewish community to commemorate anniversary of liberation from Nazis

TORONTO — A two-day event to mark the Jewish community's commemoration of the 50th anniversary of the liberation of Europe from Nazi oppression and Holocaust Remembrance has been organized for April 30 and May 1, 1995.

Co-sponsors Canadian Jewish Congress (CJC), Ontario region and the Holocaust Remembrance Committee of the Jewish Federation of Greater Toronto called for communal participation in the event, which will include a program at Queen's Park, the annual Yom Hashoah Commemoration, plenary sessions and workshops at the Ontario Institute for Studies in Education (OISE), and a Commemorative Dinner at Adath Israel Congregation.

Gerda Friedberg, a Holocaust survivor and chair of CJC, Ontario region, said: "The event is being planned in order to give the entire community the opportunity to recognize the sacrifice of the Canadian Armed Forces in the liberation of Europe; to recall the partisans and the ghetto fighters who battled Nazi oppression; to remember the victims of the Holocaust; and to pay tribute to the courage of the survivors.

In urging participation by communal organizations, synagogues and schools, Eleanor Getzler, chair of the Holocaust Remembrance Committee and a child of survivors, observed that "as the generation of survivors and those who directly took part and witnessed the events in Europe 50 years ago advances in age, it is more important than ever that there are those in our community who continue to carry the torch."

The focus of the Queen's Park event, to be attended by government leaders and other elected officials, diplomats, members of the Canadian military, and veterans, will be the indispensable role played by the Canadian Armed Forces, including its Jewish men and women, in the battle against Nazism and the subsequent liberation.

The Queen's Park program will be followed by the traditional Yom Hashoah Commemoration at Convocation Hall. Frieberg will deliver the keynote address.

The OISE sessions will include a program for the second generation (children of survivors). Dr. Yaffa Eliach, scholar and author of Chassidic Tales of the Holocaust, will give the keynote address and participate in workshops.

The complete program of the 50th Anniversary of Liberation and Holocaust Remembrance — A Community Commemoration will be announced in the coming months.

For more information, contact Pnina Zilberman, director of the Holocaust Remembrance Committee (416) 635-2883, ext. 144, or Steven Shulman, CJC associate director of community relations (416) 635-2883, ext. 175.

McMaster elects Jason Stevens student president

By MOURA WOLPERT
CJN Correspondent

HAMILTON — For the first time in what is probably its entire history, the McMaster Student Union (MSU) has a Jewish president.

As well, vice-president Brianna Caryll, an arts and sciences student from Toronto, is Jewish, and so is associate vice-president of services and promotions Rena Killen, a social science student from Brantford.

Jason Stevens

The president is Jason Stevens, a personable 23-year-old psychology student from North York.

Active in the MSU since he entered university in 1990, Stevens won a narrow victory over 11 other candidates in last February's election.

It was "the largest contested presidential election ever in McMaster history," he said, but "with 12 people running, you can't have a big majority."

Stevens feels "good about being a Jewish president." He takes a keen interest in Israeli affairs — "at home we talk about it all the time" — but as president of the MSU, "I do not make my position on the Middle East situation public."

He has, in fact, strong ties to the Middle East. His father, Jack, is from Iraq, and his mother, Miriam, is an Israeli Jew. "Actually, Palestinian," he laughs. "She was born before 1948." And his older brother, Eddy, was also born in Israel, making Jason the only native born Canadian in the family.

His ultimate goal "is probably politics," says Stevens. But first there are still a few courses to finish and after that, most likely law school.

Looking ahead to political future

He admits his studies have suffered because of his involvement in student politics, and with a somewhat rueful smile, quotes his father's observation "that you don't get marks for being president."

But he's ambitious and determined, and meanwhile, being president of a 12,000-member strong student union is good preparation for a future in politics.

Stevens is "the chief spokesperson" on behalf of McMaster University students at the municipal, provincial and federal levels. He has a full-time staff of 23, 400 part-time staff members and 700 volunteers.

And he is proud of having taken "a leadership role" in organizing the first MSU Volunteer Recognition Night, which this year will be held for the fourth time.

Senate service

Stevens has been a member of the Student Representative Assembly (SRA), which he explains is "what the governing body of the MSU is actually called;" he served two years as a student senator and also as a member of the senate executive. He was also the founding president of the Musical Arts Club.

The MSU supports the Canadian Federation of Students (CFS), which represents almost half a million students across the country. The CFS Ontario constituency, Stevens says, also contains a Jewish student group, which concerns itself with such Jewish issues as anti-Semitism and exams set for Saturdays and Jewish holidays.

Last year the MSU also worked to have a proposed tuition fee increase of 50 per cent condemned by the school's senate.

Top priority this year, Stevens says, is the long delayed building of a new university centre for McMaster and "ensuring that the MSU plays a greater role in representation at the senate and on the board of governors."

JNF to honor Joey Tanenbaum

TORONTO — The 46th Annual Negev Dinner of the Jewish National Fund of Toronto will honor Joey Tanenbaum Nov. 27 at the Sheraton Centre Hotel.

Tanenbaum is well-known as a community leader, philanthropist, entrepreneur, collector and patron of the arts.

"Joey is truly a remarkable figure in the community," said JNF president Patricia Alpert. "He and his wife, Toby, have enhanced the cultural landscape of this city."

Almost 200 volunteers are helping organize the dinner and its campaign under campaign chair Ronald Appleby and dinner chair Robert Prichard, president of the University of Toronto. Committee heads include Alvin Abram, Marilyn Berg, Brenda Cooper, Nathan Disenhouse, Madelein Epstein, Barry Ganz, Marilyn Glick, Harry Goldgut, Cheryl Appleby Jackson, Stephen Karr, Sandy Posluns, Jane Rendely, Susan Sager, Susan Tanenbaum and Frank A. Wilson.

The 1994 Negev Dinner will establish The Joey Tanenbaum Youth Institute for Studies in Nature, History and the Environment at JNF's Camp Yatir in the northern Negev Desert. The camp is open for youth of all abilities. Funds raised through the dinner campaign will be used to hire staff, and purchase equipment and materials.

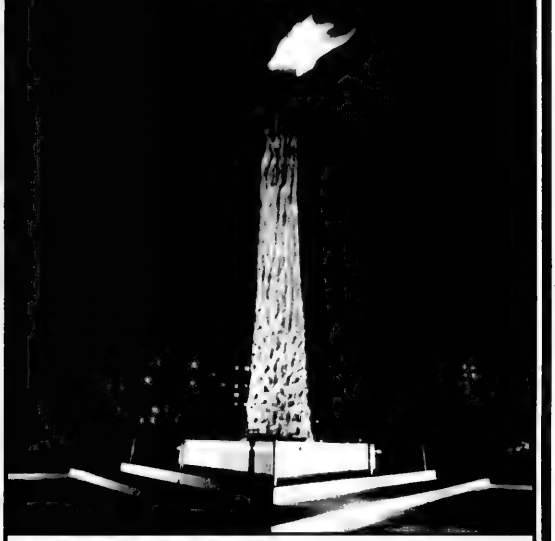
YEAR OF THE FLAME 1995



On the occasion of the 50th Anniversary of the liberation from Nazi tyranny THE CANADIAN SOCIETY FOR YAD VASHEM invites the entire Jewish community, individuals and groups, to honour the memory of family, friends or communities, and support the perpetual burning of the flame atop the Yad Vashem Holocaust Memorial in Earl Bales Park.

The Canadian Society has dedicated 1995 as the 'Year of the Flame of Remembrance.'

It is incumbent on all of us to keep the flame lit so that we can pass it on "Mi Dor L'Dor — From Generation Unto Generation."

The success of this endeavour depends on us all. Let us leave the Flame of Remembrance as a legacy to our children and their children!

Contributions of $100 or more per family each year will make this a reality.

Names of those to be remembered will be published in The CJN.

Israel Bonds or Visa also accepted and tax deductible. Please complete and return the perforated portion of this page.

Rosh yeshiva urges the total Torah experience

By LEILA SPEISMAN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO —Communal study of Torah enables the participants to experience the giving of the Torah at Mount Sinai, according to Rabbi Benjamin Tabory, former rosh yeshivah of Or Chaim Yeshiva and Ulpanat Orot Girls' School and now on sabbatical from Yeshivat Har Etzion in Jerusalem.

Rabbi Tabory was giving the inaugural lecture of the Or Chaim Kollel at Or Chaim Yeshivah in Downsview.

The requirement of Torah study is not just to study Torah, as when one listens to a Torah tape in the car — it is to experience it.

He compared it to those parts of prayer that may only be recited with a minyan, such as Kaddish and Kedushah. Both, he explained, declare the glory of G-d.

Similarly, Rabbi Tabory said, the blessing said before studying Torah, Barchu et-HaShem Hamvorach (Bless the L-rd who is to be praised) "extolls the name of G-d."

Studying in a group, as happens in a school, or a kollel, he said, helps one feel the "enthusiasm, fear, and trembling" that was felt at Sinai.

"The experience of Mount Sinai is beyond the intellectual significance of the Torah itself."

That is not to say, the rabbi noted, that one cannot study Torah on one's own.

There is no limit to how close to heaven one can reach alone, no limit to the self-growth that can take place, he said. But that self-growth is at the expense of spreading the influence of Torah to other people.

He compared the two approaches to those of the Baal Shem Tov, the founder of Chassidus, and the Vilna Gaon.

The Baal Shem Tov, he said, spread the love of Torah far and wide — but he was not known for his learning. The Vilna Gaon sat and learned Torah day and night, even closing up the windows to avoid distractions, but his influence is limited, the rabbi said, to those willing to accept his stringent demands.

The ideal method of Torah study, he said, is that of mothers and fathers teaching and learning with their own children. Any school situation, he said, is only a substitute when that ideal is no longer possible.

He quoted the late Rabbi Joseph Soloveitchik as saying that he felt that he merited entering heaven because he had taught Torah to his children, and because he founded Maimonides, one of the first day schools in the United States.

The exchange of views that takes place in a group Torah study atmosphere, Rabbi Tabory said, ought to lead to love and respect for each other.

"We need someone to issue a call, that all who study Torah, even if they don't agree [on certain interpretations], must treat each other with respect."

Rabbi Jay Kelman, one of the organizers of the Or Chaim Kollel, welcomed the over 100 people attending, and invited them to take part in the many programs for men and women that the kollel is planning.

Rabbi Tabory was introduced by Eli Rubinstein, chair of the kollel steering committee, and thanked by Rabbi Marvin Pritzker, former rabbi of Halifax's Orthodox synagogue, and co-chair of the Mizrachi Adult Education program.

Rabbi Pritzker lamented that people have forgotten that much of the original work in North America to establish Jewish day schools was done by the Mizrachi movement.

Bonds honoree stresses traditions

By MOURA WOLPERT
CJN Correspondent

HAMILTON — For those who care deeply about where the Jewish family and Jewish community will be generations from now, the immediate agenda should not be continuity but instead, to "live as Jews today," this year's Hamilton State of Israel Bonds women's division honoree told guests at a gala luncheon in her honor.

"We must teach our children our traditions," said Dr. Cheryl Greenbaum.

Immediate past Bonds women's division chair and current co-chair of Hamilton's United Jewish Appeal (UJA) general campaign, Greenbaum said "we should take our children to our shuls, celebrate our holy days with them, give them — and ourselves — Jewish education, and take them with us when we go to Israel.

"Continuity does not follow us. It begins with us."

Jewish continuity was also the theme of guest speaker Jeanette Eichenwald, who suggested building "walls of connection to our people ... to sustain not only us but future generations here and in Israel."

A powerful speaker, Eichenwald held the close to 200 guests at Adas Israel Synagogue spellbound with the story of her father, now 86 and blind as a result of tortures endured at Dachau and Buchenwald, but from whom "shines forth a light of Jewish understanding," and of her mother, a survivor of Auschwitz who pleaded with Nazis to spare the life of her husband.

"Together they have shown me the ultimate meaning of courage," Eichenwald said, "to bring into this world one more generation of Jewish life — mine!"

Hamilton Hebrew Academy teacher Faigie Itkin paid tribute to Greenbaum as "an example par excellence of someone who has been able to rise with incredible strength to the challenge of rebuilding our people not only here, but also in Israel."

CORRECTION

The obituary for Dr. Irvine Israel Glass ("Space science pioneer dies," CJN, Oct. 13) incorrectly stated that Dr. Glass was an ordained rabbi. In fact, his father, Samuel Solomon Glass was a rabbi. The CJN regrets the error.

Adath Israel's sexton retires after 41 years

By RUTH SCHWEITZER
Special to The CJN

Alex Koenigsberg

TORONTO — Alex Koenigsberg, the beloved "shammes emeritus" of the Adath Israel Congregation, is a humble, learned man who peppers his conversation with gentle jokes.

Koenigsberg, 76, who retired this past August after 41 years as the synagogue's sexton, has a gift for getting along with people, like the two generations of children he prepared for bar and bat mitzvahs.

"He has the old melamed quality," said A. Eliezer Kirshblum, Adath Israel's cantor. "He's able to talk to people, relate to them, and able to build a rapport with children by his great sense of humor."

When asked how he juggled his sexton's duties — assisting the cantor and reading the Torah at services, providing breakfast at morning services and refreshments for meetings, managing the physical plant, and renting the hall for events — Koenigsberg told The CJN the job required patience. "I may not be a doctor, but I have patience," he said, with a twinkle in his eye.

Although he is officially retired, he hasn't really left Adath Israel. Koenigsberg still conducts one of the morning services each day, assists at High Holiday services, attends evening services and helps mourners who come to the synagogue. "Some people haven't been in a synagogue for 15, 20 years," he said. "When they come in, you have to help them."

Retirement means he will go to Miami for three months this winter. Pointing up at the shelves of books that line the wall over his desk, Koenigsberg says, "I have lots to do."

Originally from Brezovica, Czechoslovakia, he entered the yeshivah in Komarno at 13, later enrolling at a rabbinical college in Naitra. When he was 22, in 1940, he was sent to Czechoslovakian labor camps, then to Auschwitz and Dachau. Liberated in 1945, Koenigsberg says it is a miracle he survived. Many members of his family perished.

He returned to Czechoslovakia after the war and married Ida, his wife of 48 years. With the communist takeover, the couple fled to Austria in 1949. After two years in a displaced persons camp, they came to Canada, settling in Toronto.

Koenigsberg was working as a tailor on Spadina Avenue when he applied for the position of "shammes plus" at Adath Israel in 1954. At that time it was known as the First Roumanian Hebrew Congregation Adath Israel and was located downtown at Bathurst and College.

The congregation's leaders wanted an assistant cantor and a Torah reader as well as someone strong enough to wield a mop. They thought Koenigsberg was a dream candidate. Soon he was relieved of his janitorial duties and promoted to management.

When the congregation decided to erect the current building in North York, which opened in 1957, he helped the building chairman as chauffeur, consultant, supervisor and jack-of-all-trades.

In his early years with Adath Israel, Koenigsberg recalled he often worked seven days a week and never had time to take a vacation. "I left the children ... they slept ... I came home ... they slept." His children are now in their 30s and 40s, and he is a proud grandfather of seven.

Summing up his years as sexton of Adath Israel, he said, "I had no trouble here all 41 years. I'm very satisfied, they treat me good."

He apologized for his English — he speaks with a strong Yiddish accent — adding, "I'm a good listener but not a good talker."

Kirshblum said Koenigsberg is a humble man, a great scholar and very religious in his own right while extremely tolerant of others. "His impact on the total Jewish community has resulted from his outreach to individuals in the daily minyan services."

The Adath Israel Congregation pays tribute to Alex Koenigsberg this Saturday, at morning services and at a dinner in his honor. At morning services, Rabbi Steven Saltzman and Rabbi Erwin Schild will address the congregation. Speakers for the dinner include Rabbi Saltzman, Rabbi Schild, Rabbi Sheldon M. Korn and Cantor Kirshblum.

The congregation plans to name its new conservatory, consisting of a board room, a chapel and a library, after Koenigsberg, and it will create an endowment fund in his name.

Whitby hospital celebrates

By BEN ROSE
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — "The most important need of Jewish psychiatric patients is to believe that someone in the Jewish community cares about them," according to Rabbi Larry Lander of the Reform synagogue Har Tikvah in Brampton.

Rabbi Lander is one of the team of Whitby Psychiatric Hospital chaplains who will celebrate 45 years of pastoral care at the hospital, at a gathering on Nov. 1, where the theme will be Mental Health Ministry in your Neighborhood.

The featured speaker at the celebration is Rabbi Jeffrey Cohen, director of the Missouri division of pastoral resources.

There are only 10 Jewish patients at the Whitby hospital, Rabbi Lander said, including those with Alzheimer's disease and a dual diagnosis of retardation.

The low number reflects the decrease of the hospital population from a total of 3,000 to 300 today. Rev. Grant Schwartz, director of pastoral care for the hospital, told The CJN that the number of Jewish patients was at least 20 in his experience dating back to 1972.

Though a rabbi has only been part of the pastoral team on a formal contract basis since 1959, when it was Rabbi Bernard Rosensweig, Rev. Schwartz is sure that a rabbi from the Beth Zion synagogue in Oshawa visited patients in the years before that. Today, Sue Green and Belle Kruger of that congregation are still active visitors at the hospital.

Other rabbis who have served as chaplains at the hospital are Rabbi Morris Gorelick, Rabbi Albert Raab, Rabbi Nathan Lieberman, Rabbi Michael Celniker and the late Rabbi Sheldon Steinberg who served there 15 years.

Rabbi Lander, who makes the 120-mile return trip to Whitby once a week, has brought patients to his own synagogue for services in special circumstances. He directs services at Whitby on Rosh Hashanah, Chanukah and Passover, and arranges for special Passover foods for patients.

Emunah volunteers to be feted

By CYNTHIA GASNER
Special to The CJN

TORONTO — Three outstanding volunteers whose volunteer years for Emunah Women total more than 100 years will be honored by Emunah Women of Toronto at an Oct. 30 dinner at the Wagman Centre.

Montreal communal leader Ariella Cotler, the Quebec regional director of Canadian Shaare Zedek Hospital Foundation, will be the keynote speaker at the dinner for Magda Klein, Magda Ruzohosrky and Hannah Schursheim.

This is the first of what will be an annual Salute to Volunteers dinner, said dinner committee chair Lenore Schelew. Funds raised will support day care centres, nurseries and learning institutions in Israel.

"In the face of what is happening in Israeli society, Emunah's work is more vital than ever in rearing generations of children who know what it means to be Jewish, and in caring for the victims of defective social behavior," said Dr. Carole Golding, chair of World Emunah.

Klein, who moved to Toronto from Montreal 11 years ago, is a 40-year veteran of Emunah. She recently spearheaded Emunah's insert in The Canadian Jewish News to commemorate Emunah's 50th anniversary. The project raised more than $35,000.

Although Klein has been active in her family business, she has held many leadership positions in Montreal and Toronto. She chaired the Combined Jewish Appeal of Montreal and is a member of the Pomegranate Guild of Judiac Textiles.

Ruzohorsky, who is described as "a tireless worker" for Emunah for more than two decades, has an abiding love for Eretz Yisrael with a special interest in helping children.

Schusheim, who moved to Toronto from Montreal, served as president of Emmunah's Toronto Council and chaired the organization's dinner honoring the people of Denmark on the 50th anniversary of their rescue of Danish Jewry.

Schusheim is active in the Toronto Jewish Book Fair. She is a member of the Holocaust Remembrance Committee and the book committee of the Toronto Cultural Council of the Jewish Community Centre.

"Our honorees all have one thing in common," Schelew said. "They are modest about being honored and the reason they agreed to be saluted was they would do anything if it would help bring in money for Emunah projects."

BJC launches membership drive

TORONTO — The Bathurst Jewish Centre (BJC) has launched a membership campaign called The Time Is Now, with a package of incentives including a temporary freeze on fee increases.

With the introduction of a new management company (BJC) taking over operation of the Bathurst branch of the Jewish Community Centre (JCC), athletic and health club fees had been scheduled to rise. However, new members and those who renew by Nov. 1 will be charged at the JCC's old rate.

The BJC will accept monthly post-dated cheques, a policy that is designed for the protection of members, said BJC board member Tom Lobel.

"The past trauma of the old JCC is still fresh in the minds of many members. Therefore we are answering their concerns by permitting monthly post-dated payments for those who are reluctant to pre-pay in larger amounts," he said.

The new BJC, which is a separate corporate entity than the old JCC, will also honor payments made by current members to the old JCC. For example, members who issued a cheque for a full year beginning March 1, 1994 will remain members as long as they register by Nov. 1 and submit post-dated cheques for March to August 1995 — the end of the BJC's fiscal year. Old JCC cards will not be honored after Nov. 1.

General adult athletic fees at the BJC are currently $418; health club fees are an additional $375. After Nov. 1, the health club fee will rise to $475.

The BJC is also offering special six-month memberships at discounted rates.

Digging family roots

TORONTO — The upcoming genealogical fair Dig for Your Roots is inviting visitors to do just that.

The Oct. 30 fair will feature tips on where to start digging for family background and what to do when you aren't making progress. The free event takes place from noon to 5 p.m. at York Quay Centre, 235 Queens Quay W.

If we go back about 30 generations, "each of us would have more than one million ancestors living at that time," said Noel Elliott, Director of Research for The Genealogical Research Library.

For details call Harbourfront Centre Information, (416) 973-3000.

Hadassah-WIZO gala dinner set

By MOURA WOLPERT
CJN Correspondent

HAMILTON — Hamilton Hadassah-WIZO will mark Hadassah-WIZO Month with a gala dinner on Oct. 24, at 7 p.m., at the Hamilton & District Chamber of Commerce.

In recognition of Women Helping Women, the dinner is co-sponsored by and in tribute to The Women's Trust of Hamilton.

A special guest will be Taube Zeifman, recording secretary of Hadassah-WIZO Organization of Canada; the program will include a presentation by Half The Sky Theatre Company, a women's non-profit, grassroots theatre troupe formed in 1982 to educate and inform the community on women's issues.

Women Helping Women is the new campaign launched this year by Canadian Hadassah-WIZO, designed to help battered women and women and children in need in Israel, through the establishment of hotlines, shelters, self-help groups and counselling and legal advice centres.

Hadassah-WIZO's aim is "to create a sisterhood of women's organizations" devoted to helping other women, explained co-chair Beverley Lasky.

Hadassah-WIZO groups across the country all have their own program. "What we wanted to do here," said Lasky, "is to show local women what we're doing."

The group chose The Women's Trust of Hamilton because it is a local organization whose mission is to serve all women and children in need.

Taube Zeifman

The Women's Trust was the first regional women's foundation to be established, said Lasky. It is a member of a national network of women's foundations whose goal is to find women interested in and with the means and opportunity to raise funds for the purpose of establishing trust funds to be used to aid women and children in need.

Lasky's co-chair is Ilona Feldman; others involved in planning the event include Cindy Mark, Sheila Levitt and Linda Waxman.

Hadassah Bazaar set for Oct. 26

TORONTO — As the world's largest one-day event, the Hadassah-WIZO Bazaar is a day of hustle and bustle, aching feet, happy customers and excited bargaining.

But for two volunteers, the Bazaar doesn't end when the doors close. That's when Karen Goldberg and Carla Forrin go to work.

The two roam the suddenly quiet building collecting broken toys, dolls missing arms and legs, partial boxes of crayons and colorful paper. They take "treasures" home and restore them.

Then they deliver the toys to the children at Doctor's Hospital in order to brighten their Christmas season. Karen and Carla perform charity at its best — quietly and with genuine loving kindness.

70th Hadassah-WIZO Bazaar will be held Wednesday, Oct. 26, from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m. at the Automotive Building, Exhibition Place.

Congregation elects board

TORONTO — The annual general meeting of Congregation Keshet Shalom was held recently at the Bloor Jewish Community Centre at which a new Board of Directors was elected.

Howard Goldstein and Doron Horowitz were re-elected to their third terms as president and vice- president, respectively. Also elected to the board were: Alan Stern, treasurer; Alan Scheer, director of membership; and Michelle Crawford, director of women's outreach.

Congregation Keshet Shalom is a progressive congregation dedicated to meeting the needs of the greater Toronto lesbian and gay community. Friday evening Kabbalat Shabbat services are held monthly at the Bloor branch.

MS patient remains optimistic

By CAROLYN BLACKMAN
Special to The CJN

TORONTO — Gary Sandler has a simple daily ritual. When he wakes up each morning he tells himself he is glad to be alive.

Sandler, 42, stricken with the most severe form of multiple sclerosis, is paralyzed from the neck down. His philosophy however remains intact:

"To me, life is great and the fact that we all have life is a privilege. Being in a handicapped body presents a lot of challenges and it is no fun, but it is better than being dead."

He give the credit for this optimistic philosophy to a psychiatrist he consulted in 1989, after life dealt him yet another blow and he lost a kidney due to cancer.

"I had not seen her in four years," he said, "and I complained that life was a drag. I needed someone with me at all times and I was really unhappy. When she commented that it was a good thing I didn't die, it had a great effect on me."

Sandler, who is the divorced father of two sons, Daniel and Randy, sits in his bright, well-furnished apartment in a motorized wheelchair demonstrating how he gets around his home with the help of a special computer hook-up on the chair. Depending on how he puffs into the mouthpiece he can use the telephone, turn on the radio, television and VCR, and even his "life-line," the computer.

It is through his computer that he has become an important friend and mentor to disabled children and young adults through the Ability On-Line Support Network. Using the computer, young people who might otherwise live isolated lives can communicate with one another, share their stories and encourage others not to give up.

"I like to help other disabled people face their disability more positively," he said. "There are about 4,000 members of Ability On-Line and it receives about 900 calls a day from young, old, disabled and able people, but mostly from teenagers. Some people are seeking advice, some support and others just want to say hi or thank you. I'm looking into getting voice output for the computer because I'm worried that my eyesight is getting worse."

Sandler's volunteer work is not confined to his computer. On a regular basis he is picked up by Wheel-Trans and taken to the Hugh McMillan Rehabilitation Centre where he speaks to disabled pre-teens and teens.

"Kids have a definite change of attitude after seeing how disabled yet independent I am. It causes them to re-evaluate themselves. I tell them that with the wrong attitude, I could be in my bed all the time. I have quite an impact on the younger set but it is also a symbiotic relationship. It makes me feel good to help them."

On a sad note, he talks about a child, age 11, he used to visit at the Hospital for Sick Children who has since died from AIDS. "I used to visit Liam and make him laugh. His mother once told me that the last time he laughed was with me. The hospital is sponsoring a humor contest in his honor and I am going to be a judge."

Sandler has also been a champion for the disabled in terms of accessibility. With a background in construction, the former developer was able to help implement better facilities and better access to Mel Lastman Square.

In 1982 he helped National Council of Jewish Women, Toronto Section create a building with support services for the disabled, the building in which he now lives. "Without this building I would have nowhere to live."

In recognition of his courage and determination the Clarke Institute of Psychiatry Foundation honored him last year in its Courage to Come Back Campaign. The campaign recognizes people who have fought back against seemingly insurmountable odds and now serve as role models for those who are facing similar challenges. This year's recipients will be honored at a dinner in November.

Sandler credits the Clarke with helping him to obtain a new wheel chair due to arrive this winter. "This state-of-the-art chair will even be able to stand me up. I am really looking forward to it — getting it makes me feel like I've won the lottery."

JERUSALEM — A drug under development by Israel's Teva Pharmaceutical Industries has been found to reduce the rate of relapses in certain cases of multiple sclerosis.

The promising findings, based on clinical tests conducted in the United States, were announced last week in San Francisco.

The findings are being hailed as a breakthrough in the treatment of the crippling neurological disease, 75 per cent of whose victims are women.

Copolymer 1, developed by Teva, Israel's largest pharmaceutical company, was discovered at the Weizmann Institute of Science.

The drug could be on the U.S. market as soon as 1996. Teva is finalizing its international registration package and hopes to submit it as soon as possible for approval by the FDA, said Aaron Schwartz, vice president of business development at Teva.

There's no word on whether the drug will be tested for approval in Canada.

Jewish roots book revised

By BILL GLADSTONE
Special to The CJN

TORONTO — It has been almost 25 years since novice Jewish genealogist Arthur Kurzweil wandered into the Jewish Division of the New York Public Library to search for references to the Galician shtetl of Dobromil, where his ancestors had lived.

The family legends and stories about the town he heard had given Dobromil substance in his imagination. But Kurzweil did not expect to find anything in the library catalog.

As he recalled in his 1980 book, From Generation to Generation: How to Trace Your Jewish Genealogy and Family History — a revised edition of which has recently been issued by HarperCollins — Kurzweil was astonished to find an index card for the town's memorial book. He was even more astonished after a librarian retrieved the volume and he began flipping through its more than 500 pages.

"Turning to the first page, a full-page photograph, I read the caption: Main Street in Dobromil.

Discovering his great-grandfather in a group picture , Kurzweil had to share his excitement with a librarian who "took the matter quite casually."

Even at this early stage, Kurzweil was learning one of the genealogist's cardinal rules: nothing is potentially more fascinating to a person than his or her own family history, nor potentially more boring to anyone else. The exception is when a gifted storyteller like Kurzweil is doing the telling.

Kurzweil's next genealogical adventure involved phoning Philip Frucht, one of the members of the Dobromiler Society of New York, which had put the book together. But Frucht claimed he had never known Kurzweil's grandfather.

"Again I repeated my name, but it did not help. It was then that an idea struck me. Though I knew my grandfather to be named Julius, his name in Yiddish — and therefore in Dobromil — was Yudl. I also knew that though my grandfather was a roofer in Brooklyn, he was a tinsmith in Dobromil. So I asked Mr. Frucht, 'Did you know Yudl the tinsmith?'

"Frucht's voice perked up. 'Who are you to Yudl?' he demanded.

" 'I'm his grandson,' I said.

"The next thing I knew, Frucht was shouting into the next room to his wife, telling her that he was speaking to Yudl's grandson. He sounded as excited as I was."

Most family tree researchers have experienced such spine-tingling moments of genealogical discovery, but, no writer to my knowledge has captured this thrill as effectively as Arthur Kurzweil.

His ability to chronicle each step on the path to discovery, along with his thoughts and feelings, touches a universal chord among Jewish family history researchers.

A surprise bestseller, the first edition of From Generation to Generation was not the first modern book dealing with the general subject of Jewish genealogy (that honor belongs to the 1977 book Finding Our Fathers, by Dan Rottenberg). But reviewers hailed Kurzweil's contribution as the best, and today it modestly stands as a quasi-classic of the genre and the book most recommended for neophytes.

Does the updated version offer the same encyclopedic background and summarized advances since the first edition, with the same delightful human touch? This reviewer reports the warmth is still present. However, in most of the new sections, the author comes across as a sort of Jewish Rip Van Winkle, recently awakened after a long schluff and not completely able to integrate or even grasp all the changes that have overtaken his world.

For instance, Kurzweil might have acknowledged changes in the availability of Jewish records in Belarus, Lithuania, the former East Germany and many other places following the collapse of communism. Does he know that at least two services have been established — RAGAS and FAST — that have had limited success at retrieving old Jewish civil registration records from these formerly closed states?

He seems equally unaware of the annual seminars on Jewish genealogy that attract hundreds of researchers to locations like Los Angeles, Salt Lake City, New York, Toronto and Jerusalem.

Likewise, Kurzweil gives scant consideration to Alexander Beider for his remarkable 1992 opus, Dictionary of Jewish Surnames from The Russian Empire, which has been hailed as the most comprehensive and scholarly contribution to the field of Jewish onomastics in the last century. As well, he lists Miriam Weiner as a mere professional genealogist, though she is by far the most accomplished. How many others have hacked their way into the jungle of the post-Soviet regime — Moldova, Ukraine, Belarus — and emerged with 19th-century Jewish records in hand? An entrepreneurial trailblazer, she should have been given more attention.

Despite its imperfections, the new edition of From Generation to Generation is still a great beginner's guide. No other book takes the novice's hand and leads him or her so carefully and patiently through the intricacies of Jewish family history research.

The Rape of Europa: The Fate of Europe's Treasures in the Third Reich and the Second World War by Lynn H. Nicholas (Random House of Canada $37.00)

The Nazis were barbarians. They not only murdered people but also destroyed untold valuable works of art.

Hitler as art critic favored 19th century German representational artists and safe old masters. Most modern artists he labelled degenerate. These included the post-impressionists, German and Austrian expressionists, cubists, abstract artists generally — and of course, all Jewish artists, no matter how they painted.

In 1937, the Nazis held the infamous "Degenerate Art" exhibition in Munich. Over 100 artists were represented and their works ridiculed and derided.

When the exhibition was over, Goering, an obsessive art collector, recognized their monetary value, and many of the works were sold by prominent Nazis on the international art market. But a quantity of the paintings were destroyed in an act of sheer vandalism.

"On March 20, 1939, 1,004 paintings and sculptures and 3,825 drawings, watercolors, and graphics were burned as a practice exercise in the courtyard of the Berlin Fire Department . . . The whole process of 'purifying' the German art world, and its 'final solution' in flames, eerily foreshadows the terrible events to come in the next six years."

As the German armies occupied Poland, France, the Low Countries and finally Italy, the official corps of art looters stopped at nothing to acquire paintings and sculpture, as well as coins, books, tapestries, jewels and furniture. From France alone, over a three year period, the artifacts shipped back to Germany filled 138 boxcars.

Those who managed to flee before the borders closed left houses full of possessions behind, which were quickly stripped by SS troops or the neighbors. "Although it was avowed Nazi policy to encourage Jewish departures, the demand for funds under Goering's Four-Year Economic Plan was too great to allow their considerable assets to slip away."

Hitler dreamed of a monster museum in his home town of Linz that would house the cream of the stolen treasures. The dream began to fade as the Allies advanced in Europe and many of the objects had to be stored in makeshift warehouses, damp salt mines and sometimes dangerously close to munition dumps.

When the war was over, a dedicated group of Allied "Monuments Officers" spent six years locating and sorting huge repositories of the stolen material and seeking to restore them to museums and surviving owners. Of course, many of the objects were either destroyed or lost forever.

The problem of "heirless" Jewish property became a source of controversy. The Jewish Restitution Successor Organization, founded in New York in 1947 to represent Jewish groups from all over Europe and Palestine insisted that the thousands of Torah scrolls, ritual vessels and more than a quarter of a million books be turned over to Jewish institutions.

Ultimately, the vast majority of objects went to Israel and the United States but the distribution was fraught with conflicts. "The few Jews remaining in Germany did not wish the relics of their devastated communities to go abroad, even though many of their people were in the receiving countries. Nor did German gentile communities always give up valuable Jewish manuscripts and archives with grace. The disputes would go on for many years and become entwined with the settlements eventually arranged between Germany and the state of Israel."

Lynn Nicholas, an art historian has written an account of cultural rapists at work and the terrible work of their hands. But her account is also a triumphant story of devotion, concern and heroism that resulted in the salvage and rescue of some of the imperishable treasures of the ages.

Show Boat producer to sue province

By BILL GLADSTONE
Special to The CJN

TORONTO — Toronto entertainment mogul Garth Drabinsky has filed a legal notice of claim against the Ontario government after hearing that the provincial Anti-Racism Secretariat had allegedly funnelled $200,000 to various groups that were part of an organized campaign to stop the musical Show Boat from opening at the North York Performing Arts Centre in October 1993.

"They have 60 days to respond, and then I file my statement of claim," said Drabinsky, a former lawyer and current CEO of Live Entertainment (Livent) Inc. of Toronto, during a talk to an audience of about 400 at the Beth Sholom Synagogue on Oct. 12. "I don't think they'll do anything until I file my statement of claim."

Speaking on the topic, My Life From Movies to Musicals, Drabinsky recounted several other dramatic episodes and read excerpts from Closer To The Sun, an autobiography which McClelland and Stewart has scheduled for publication next February.

Drabinsky announced the book in 1988, after hearing that publishing rights for an unauthorized biography were about to be auctioned off. The book has been a serious on-again, off-again project of Drabinsky's ever since.

Garth Drabinsky

Regarding his bout with polio that put him into the Hospital for Sick Children in September 1953 and left him with a semi-paralyzed left leg, Drabinsky said, "It galvanized my spirit and sense of determination."

A year before his bar mitzvah at Beth Sholom, he persuaded Rabbis Mendel Kirshenblatt and David Monson to let him read the Torah at study services, an honor generally reserved for older boys.

Drabinsky also recalled the day when, as a Grade 9 freshman at North Toronto Collegiate, he stepped into a Grade 13 theatre group and was mesmerized by a performance of Moliere's The Imaginary Invalid. "It was a moment of genuine epiphany. I loved it at once," he said, pinpointing this as the genesis of his lifelong intoxication with the theatre.

His first experience with Broadway was in 1978, as the producer of A Broadway Musical, a flop that closed after opening night. Nonetheless, he was heartened by a friend's recognition that few Canadians would have dared something so grand, or risked a failure of such proportion.

The following year marked the beginning of his partnership with Nat Taylor and construction of the first Cineplex theatres; Drabinsky recalled it as the year he turned down opportunities to invest in two cinematic projects — Rambo and Porky's, films which spawned sequels that cumulatively grossed about $1.1 billion at the box office.

In 1986, Cineplex faced foreclosure because, Drabinsky explained, Famous Players and Canadian Odeon were monopolizing most of the best films from Hollywood. He overcame his adversaries in the courtroom using Canadian anti-combines laws as a weapon and then vanquished Famous Players all over again.

Famous Players was negotiating a minor contractual dispute with the landlady of its major multi-screen complex, the Imperial Six on Yonge Street. Drabinsky flew to the landlady's home in a remote town on Lake Michigan and returned with a rental deed to half of the Imperial Six. By morning, Cineplex had erected a fence to subdivide its part of the property.

However, "Black Friday" is Drabinsky's name for the day in September 1989 when his adversaries forced him to resign from the Cineplex Odeon Corporation.

He attained even greater heights in live theatre — Livent's production of Kiss of the Spider Woman won multiple Tony awards last year in New York.

Drabinsky has fought some of his major battles as head of Livent Inc., as when he steered his critically acclaimed and unexpectedly controversial production of Show Boat into the North York Performing Arts Centre.

Of Rabbis Kirshenblatt and Monson, Drabinsky said, "It's a rare opportunity to stand on the same pulpit 32 years after your bar mitzvah and still see the two rabbis who were responsible for guiding your life."

As Rabbi Monson proudly declared in a glowing introduction, "Garth Drabinsky is one of our boys who reached the top."

The evening contained many insights into the character of a man who, in the course of a wildly dramatic and successful career, has revitalized many aspects of the modern entertainment industry, made hundreds of millions of dollars for himself and others, but has not strayed far from his origins nor from this Conservative congregation on Eglinton Avenue West.

EYE ON ARTS

Images of Mexico: Karen Perlmutter is a Toronto-area commercial photographer who has done much portraiture for business publications over the last 12 years. On several trips to Mexico in the last five years, she has expanded her interest in portraiture by snapping photographs of people in ordinary life. "What I was really trying to capture were the everyday lives of the people — the peasants in the street, the women in the marketplace, the children in school," she says.

The Mexican Series, an exhibition of 30 of Perlmutter's black-and-white portraits from Mexico, opens at the Alliance Francaise Gallery, 24 Spadina Rd., Toronto, on Oct. 26; the opening runs from 6 to 9 p.m., and the show itself runs until Nov. 26.

Winn-Lederer Art on View: The art of Chicago-area artist Ilene Winn-Lederer is to be displayed at the 1994 Biennial Convention of the Women's League of Conservative Judaism, scheduled for The Concord Hotel, Kiamesha Lake, New York, Nov. 13 to 17.

The artist is known for her unique Jewish imagery which interprets and illuminates classic Torah themes, tales from the Midrash and Aggadah, and her own personal, spiritual journeys. Her works have become part of numerous public and private collections throughout the United States, Europe and Israel.

Enterprising Bubbie: After four seasons of producing The Bubbie Break, a television series in which she is the feature attraction, Toronto grandmother Marion Schwarz still finds time for related projects. Schwarz is currently authoring two books of grandmotherly advice for the publishing firm Somerville House. Her TV show is currently airing on five channels in the United States, and is scheduled to begin a national run on a new Women's Television Network in January.

Sharon, Lois & Bram: This celebrated trio of entertainers for children and grown-ups has produced Candles Long Ago, a Chanukah mini-album that is helping to raise money for the Jewish community through sales in sisterhood shops, community organizations and Jewish schools.

Candles Long Ago, the title song, has already been acclaimed a holiday classic. It was written by Emmy-award winning writers Glen Roven and Mark Saltzman. The album also contains other classic Chanukah songs such as Dreydl, Dreydl, I'm A Little Latke and Oy Chanukah.

For details on how your school or organization can participate in this fundraising program, call Shari Sirota at (905) 731-1440.

Once Is Not Enough: Toronto actress and film-maker Cayle Chernin was only 21 years old when she landed a major role in Goin' Down the Road, a film made by Don Shebib in the late '60s that has earned a hallowed place in the pantheon of Canadian film. On the evening of Oct. 5, the film aired on The Movie Network (Rogers Cable). Later that same evening, astute viewers were able to catch Chernin again in the 1993 short film, The Third Ingredient, based on a story by O'Henry, which was shown on Vision TV. Meanwhile, Chernin's video documentary chronicling her rendez-vous with long-lost Russian relatives has been pre-sold to several networks and is expected to air sometime in 1995.

Hannah Sandberg's Art in North York: Born and educated in Israel, artist Hannah Sandberg lived in England and the United States before coming to Canada in 1970. Her works are luminous, symbolic abstractions of biblical themes, incorporating Hebrew calligraphy, brilliant colors and fluid lines. An exhibit of her work remains on view at the Barbara Frum Library, 20 Covington Rd., until Nov. 4.

Kashruth Correction: Judy Singer, a Toronto artist who owns a company that sells fine baked goods, was the focus of a recent CJN article that mistakenly reported that Judy's Country Tarts are kosher and pareve. "Judy's Country Tarts are not yet under supervision and therefore are not officially kosher," advises Singer. "We are working on it, however, and trust that they will be in the very near future."

Uptown Senator Restaurant makes for a great night out on the town

The Uptown Senator Restaurant offers dining, entertainment and dancing in a warm, inviting, yet sophisticated atmosphere. It is well-lit with soft light. The decor is elegant, yet simple, with plenty of wood; antique mirrors and commodes lend an Art Deco flavor. Patrons tend to be in their mid-30's and up.

Five minute walk from the North York Performing Arts Centre, the Senator is geared partly to theatre and recital hall patrons, who come for dinner around 5:30 or 6:30, then return for coffee and dessert about 10:30 or 11:00. For couples who come for dinner at 7:00 or 8:00, they can spend the evening slow dancing after dinner to R&B or jazz, with live music on Thursdays, Fridays and Saturdays starting about 9:30 p.m. For private groups of about ten people, there is a VIP room - The Senate Room.

For those on their way to the theatre or recital hall, there is a pre-theatre menu available with appetizers such as Caesar Salad and the house specialty "Senator Antipasto Platter." Among the appetizers on this menu, are prime rib, seafood, pasta or chicken; the desserts are special pies and cakes.

The a la carte menu includes Louisiana crab cakes, grilled calamari, pasta dishes like penne arribiate, and the pasta of the day. The pizzas and bruschetta made in a wood-burning oven, include seafood and la margarita as well as the pizza of the day. Then there are entrees like dry-aged sirloin with oyster mushrooms, grilled swordfish, rotisserie half chicken, seafood catch of the day, or veal chop with rosemary and roasted potatoes; the chef is adding a daily special grilled meat dish.

The Senator is wheelchair accessible. The main dining room is permanently non-smoking; the bistro area at the front permits smoking, but much of it can be designated non-smoking.

The Uptown Senator is affiliated with the Downtown Senator on Victoria St. near Dundas, maintaining the same tradition of superb dining and gracious service. Along with the same relaxed style, there are many of the same items on the menu, such as the Crab cakes.

The Uptown Senator is in the North York City Centre on the Concourse level, across Lastman Square, north of Sheppard at Park Home Ave. There is underground parking in the City Centre; bring in the receipts and the Senator will pay for your parking. For reservations or information call 250-7234

Dr. Matthew Orzech General Dentistry

Dr. Matthew Orzech is the inheritor of the dental practices of Drs. Harry Jolley and Sam Spivak, who joined their practices in 1989, then sold to Dr. Kwong-Hing. Dr. Jolley pioneered pediatric dentistry in the late 1940's; his child patients have come back as adults and seniors. He graduated in 1930, and was the first Jewish dentist to be President of the Ontario Dental Association.

The decades since Dr. Jolley began practice have seen advances in all aspects of dental work. The average "dental IQ" has risen, points out Dr. Orzech, who says "the educated patient is the best customer". People enquire about new techniques covered by the media. There is more interest in non-invasive procedures, and more stress on prevention than restoration.

Emphasizes prevention

Along with old-style silver fillings, there are porcelain or plastic fillings, tooth-colored and bonding, as choices for restoration. Crowns are now made of gold, porcelain or plastic. For children, there are sealants, plastic coatings to protect from decay the deep pits and fissures which are difficult even for a dentist to clean.

Dentures can now be metal or plastic. Root canals can be done without pain, preventing loss of the tooth. Conventional bridgework, where crowns on the teeth on either side support a false tooth between them, is still done. Also available are bonded bridges. Now there is also the option of the implant bridge, surgically set in the bone like a wall plug; an abutment is attached to the implant, then the false tooth or denture attached.

Anaesthesia has seen extensive progress. Local anaesthetic uses smaller needles, and is more specific in area. There are also topical anaesthetics used on gum tissue, to eliminate the pain of the needle. Electronic anaesthesia uses electrodes which the patient controls. Finally there is nitrous oxide, which does not destroy the pain, but decreases anxiety and has minimal side effects.

Even sterilization has changed. Not only is the procedure in the dentist's office more thorough: tests are sent to a laboratory for a monthly checkup on the sterilizer, and a report sent to the dentist.

Dr. Orzech trained at Northwestern University in Chicago, whose dentistry school emphasizes supervised clinical training; from his second year on, he saw at least two patients a day. He also had a year's experience as a resident dentist of Erie County Medical Centre in Buffalo.

On Thursday, October 27, Dr. Orzech will host an open house. The office is at 505 Eglinton Ave. West, between Bathurst and Avenue Rd. at the corner of Tarlton; telephone 481-9131, 24-hour pager 329-7000. "Keep smiling!"

Singles Registry offers the ultimate "gift certificate"

There is never a dull moment at the Jewish Singles Registry (JSR) of Toronto. This month is no exception for the community-based Jewish organization which offers members the easiest and most non-threatening way to enter the dating scene. JSR has literally taken Toronto by storm, with new members joining on a daily basis.

Two more engagements announced

Less than two years old, with a membership of more than 530 singles and growing, the JSR recently announced two more engagements. This brings their total to four in that very important category. There has been one wedding and more than 20 couples are currently dating steady. JSR fully expects to soon begin matching the much older Montreal chapter, which averages one wedding a month.

Gift certificates now available

JSR is pleased to announce an exciting new promotion. The JSR Gift Certificate Program enables friends and family to invest in a loved one's romantic future by giving the perfect gift for someone to join Canada's largest network of Jewish singles.

Gift certificates are now available in denominations of $50 and $100, and are redeemable for new or existing memberships.

"We get many phone calls from parents enquiring about the service for their children," says JSR Director Rob Singer. "Now these parents can take a pro-active approach and give the 'perfect gift' to their children."

Guaranteed service policy

Two months ago the JSR initiated a new "guaranteed service policy" for their members. Essentially, they guarantee a minimum of six dates over a year's paid membership. "The response," says Singer, "has been tremendous. After all, there is virtually no risk in joining our service". Please contact the JSR office for more details. JSR is undoubtedly one of the fastest and easiest ways to meet people! They "guarantee it!"

For individuals looking to meet other Jewish singles, be it for friendship, a relationship or even marriage - or others who may know someone who can benefit from their service - then now is the time to call the Jewish Singles Registry of Toronto.

For more information please call (416) 398-7068.

The Villas of 760 please meticulous buyers

Today, when making a major purchase such as a home, people choose with an eye to quality and the long term. The Villas of 760 are designed and built to meet the requirements of even the most meticulous buyer. Solid construction, easy maintenance, and the safety, comfort and decorative tastes of the home owner have all been treated as essentials.

There are three models, the Monte Carlo, the Monaco and the Cannes. All are solidly built of clay brick. Soldier coursing, brick arches and keystones give the Villas elegant, dignified exteriors which harmonize with the permanence and solidity of their construction.

Other exterior features include pre-finished maintenance-free aluminum soffit, fascia, eavestrough and downspouts. Every house also has a balcony in front, and an external connection for a gas barbecue.

The front door is fitted with a brass grip set, house number, coach lamp, door bell with electric chime, and deadbolt lock. In addition, it has a rough-in for a security system. There are casement or fixed thermal windows in front, and a pre-cast concrete slab and paved walkway to the entrance.

Every Villa has its own private garage and paved driveway in front. In all models, there is a tap in the garage. The basements, located at street level next the garage, have poured concrete walls; there is a powder room and storage area in each basement, as well as an inside stairway to the main floor.

The elegance and solidity of the exterior is matched within the house. The interior trim features brass finish hardware. There are Series 800 doors in finished areas, and Colonial baseboards with quarter-round in all tiled areas. All the main floor archways are trimmed. For floor areas, the vendor offers a selection of quality 35-ounce broadloom, and a choice of ceramic tile in kitchen, entrance foyer, main bath and powder room.

In the kitchen, there is luminous overhead lighting. For cabinet styles and counter tops, the buyer may select a variety from vendor's samples. The stove area is equipped with an overhead exhaust fan. The sink is double stainless steel, with a single-lever faucet and rough-in plumbing for an automatic dishwasher.

All models have two bathrooms plus a powder room. The vendor offers a selection of ceramic wall bathroom tile, and a choice of vanity cabinets and counter tops to form a pleasing contrast with the fixtures, which are all white.

The vanities have sinks with single-lever taps; also, beside every vanity, there are electrical outlets for small appliances such as razors. Over the mirrors in powder room, main bath and ensuite bath, there is vanity strip lighting.

In the unfinished area of each basement, there is a circuit breaker type electrical panel with 100 amp service, and two outlets under the panel. All wiring is installed in accordance with Ontario Hydro standards, with heavy-duty wiring and receptacles for stoves, refrigerators and dryers. The bedroom light fixtures are in the ceilings. All switches and receptacles are white.

Both safety and energy conservation have influenced the design of the Villas. Safety features include a smoke detector in the upper hallway. Heating and air conditioning are individually controlled; gas and hydro are individually metred.

Each Villa has a mid-efficiency forced air, gas-fired and gas-heated integrated hot water system, and a hot-water tank with a rental contract from Consumer's Gas.The water pipes are copper. There is R19 insulation in the exterior walls, R32 in the roof and R12 in the basement. For convenience, the thermostat is located centrally on the main floor.

The interior walls and trim will be painted with two coats of off-white premium quality latex paint. Except for the kitchen, laundry room, washrooms and basement, all ceilings are stippled in white.

The Villas of 760 are conveniently located on Lawrence Avenue West, just east of Dufferin, a five minute walk from the Lawrence West subway and a short drive to Yorkdale shopping mall. There are schools and synagogues within easy walking distance.

The people who bring you the Villas of 760 have a distinguished history of developing and building quality residences across southern Ontario and the states of Florida and Georgia for over 50 years. In Toronto, major projects include the Sailwinds Condominiums and College Park and the Pavilion.

Construction begins in spring 1995; possession is scheduled for late summer or autumn that year. The prices range from $179,900 to $224,000. Capped-rate mortgage financing is available through the CIBC.

To find out more about the Villas of 760, drop by the office at 760 Lawrence Avenue West, or call Steeles-West Realty Inc. at 256-4098.

TRAVEL TALK

By BILL GLADSTONE

On the morning I had set aside to write this week's column, the sun was shining and the air was warm and still, and my inner voice said, "There can't be many more days left as nice as this one." So I hopped in the car and went for a drive instead, ending up in Haliburton.

The poignancy of a Haliburton autumn cannot be underestimated. Beginning in late September and continuing through much of October, these rocky highlands, studded with lakes and forest, are touched by the first tentative fingers of frost. Each of the deciduous trees in turn succumbs — maple, birch, walnut, oak — and the leaves turn scarlet, amber, burnt sienna, russet and gold, leaving only the stoic pines and firs unchanged, seemingly indifferent to winter's coming wrath.

Just beyond the town of Haliburton, as I drove along an unpopulated road that winds through the rugged Canadian Shield terrain, each curve brought some new spectacular prospect.

It was just such a vision of earth and sky that possessed the French Count and Countess de Moustier of Brittany to purchase a large tract of land in this region some 12 years ago. Two years later, their sons, Dante and Jean-Edouard Larcade, came to Canada and established the Domain of Killien, an isolated rustic retreat on the shores of Drag Lake. The name is an anglicization of Quillien, the seigniorial estate that has been in the family since at least 1277.

Formerly a run-down fishing and hunting lodge, the Domain of Killien consists of a large pine-panelled guest house, eight elegant cabins, and some 5,000 acres of private land. The main lodge has an inviting sitting room with an abundance of armchairs and a cosy fireplace. Cityfolk note at once that there's not a telephone or television to be seen anywhere — hallelujah! Adjacent to the lounge is the wood-panelled dining room, from whose kitchen come the astonishing plates of French provincial cuisine, adapted to the Canadian setting, that have won outstanding notices in publications from Figaro to Toronto Life to Le Monde.

Hiking and cross-country ski trails

Guests are given a map of the grounds showing the various groomed hiking and cross-country skiing trails that provide the key recreation that the property has to offer. Rowboats and canoes await guests at the edge of several private lakes; there is even a sailboat available (at no extra charge) for experienced navigators. Also at guests' disposal is a winterized cabin on Delphis Lake, a suitable destination for overnight treks. Killien staff will provide packed lunches as well as detailed information about the relative difficulty of the trails.

Jean-Edouard Larcade is a tall 36-year-old with an aristocratic bearing and an unerring sense of hospitality. "We run the Domain of Killien as a private home where we receive our paying friends," he says. "We like to treat others as we would like to be treated when we travel around the world."

His older brother, Dante, works the magic in the kitchen. "We don't try to re-create Paris in the middle of the bush — but we do believe in good food."

Jean-Edouard and I drove deep into the bush in his rugged, four-wheel-drive jeep, which at one point passed easily over the rocky banks of a stream, through the frolicking current, and up the other side. He manoeuvred the vehicle for several kilometres through the trees along one of the hiking trails, finally stopping on a smooth precipice above Douglas Lake, where we disembarked to inspect nature's panorama.

Wonderful getaway

"This is why we came here," he said excitedly, sweeping his hand seigniorially over the vast, unspoiled Domain of Killien. "In Europe, we don't have this anymore."

Back at the lodge, Jean-Edouard responded to the nearly-inaudible ringing of a telephone, hidden behind the desk. "Next weekend? No, I'm sorry, sir, we're fully booked.... The weekend after? Sorry, but we have no space... Thank you for thinking about us." He put down the phone. "I hate to turn down business, but when you're booked, you're booked."

So far, the Larcades have not attempted to spoil a good thing by expanding it beyond its present intimate and workable size. A wonderful getaway from Toronto, the Domain of Killien is open year-round; Jean-Edouard likes the winters best. Rooms in the main lodge are $148 per person, based on double occupancy, per night; $10 more per person for the cabins; dinner and breakfast included. Domain of Killien, P.O. Box 810, Haliburton Ont. K0M 1S0. (705) 457-1100.

Guidebooks for all destinations...

Do you yearn to get away from it all?

Perhaps you've been searching for Central Africa — Cameroun, Chad, the Congo, Equatorial Guinea, Gabon, Sao Tome and Zaire.

These are truly exotic countries, and Central Africa (Raincoast, $21.95), part of the Lonely Planet series, will fill you in.

Laos is another off-the-beaten-track country. And Laos (Raincoast Books, $16.95) will tell you all about it.

China, which is far more accessible than Laos, is expecting a flood of tourists this year. And since practically everyone begins a grand tour in the Chinese capital, Beijing (Raincoast, $11.95) is required reading.

Far less distant or esoteric is the United States.

Canadians who head south with the approach of winter will appreciate South Beach, Miami (Fitzhenry & Whiteside, $11.50), a useful guide to a trendy neighborhood.

Another guide 2 to 22 Days in the American Southwest (John Muir, $13.95) leads you from Albuquerque to the Petrified Forest on a trip to the Old West.

Weekends for Two in the Pacific Northwest (Raincoast, $19.95) is just the thing for romantic couples. Bill Gleeson takes you to great destinations — the Washington Cascades, Seattle, the Olympic Peninsula, the San Juan Islands and British Columbia.

Once you're in B.C., you can visit Vancouver. For more on this topic, read Vancouver: Best Places (Raincoast, $17.95).

Travellers with children planning to visit Florida should consult Disney World And Beyond (Raincoast, $14.95) by Stacy Ritz.

Apart from Disney World, Ritz dwells on all the other tourist attractions in the Orlando area. There are many more, and Ritz knows them like the back of her hand.

Artists frequented Weimar

By SHELDON KIRSHNER
CJN Staff Reporter

WEIMAR, Germany — For a town of only 61,000 inhabitants, Weimar looms large in Germany's cultural and political landscape.

A charming burg of half-timbered buildings and cobblestone streets, Weimar is intimately associated with some of the leading figures in German letters, music, art and architecture.

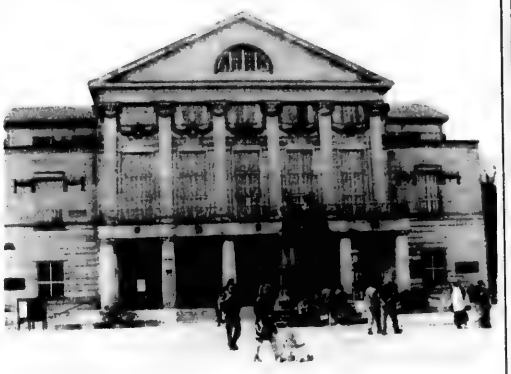
Above all, Weimar is synonymous with Johann Wolfgang von Goethe (1749-1832), the dramatist, poet and novelist who was invited here in 1775 by Charles Augustus, the duke of Saxe-Weimar.

Goethe spent the rest of his life at the duke's court, and the house in which he lived almost continuously until his death is today a museum and perhaps Weimar's principal attraction.



The National Theatre in Weimar

The building, known as the Goethe National Museum, was constructed in Baroque style. Tourists can visit 14 tastefully decorated exhibition rooms, including Goethe's modest study and his library with its 5,000 volumes.

Goethe's first residence, called the Garden House, is set in a wooded park on the Ilm River. Even after he moved out, Goethe returned during summers to contemplate nature and to seek out tranquillity.

It's a beautiful spot in every respect, and one can easily understand why Goethe regarded it as something of a sanctuary.

Goethe's friend and fellow literary giant, Friedrich von Schillet (1759-1805), lived in Weimar from 1802 until 1805.

Schiller's residence was heavily damaged in an Allied bombardment during World War II, but was reopened as a museum in 1946. It contains mementos of his life and work, as well as a collection of costumes from productions of Schiller's dramas.

Liszt House commemorates Franz Liszt (1811-1886), whose daughter, Cosima, married fellow composer Richard Wagner.

Liszt's residence, which was once the home of the royal gardener, stands at the western entrance of the park to which Goethe used to withdraw. Through the medium of documents and exhibits, the museum offers insights into Liszt's rich career.

Lucas Cranach (1472-1553) was an important painter and engraver during the Reformation. The Renaissance structure that bears his name is a sight to behold, like so many of the renovated buildings in Weimar.

Strangely enough, Weimar honors neither Johann Sebastian Bach (1685-1750), who was a court organist and chamber musician at the royal court, nor Walter Gropius (1883-1969), the world-renowned Bauhaus architect who was director of the Weimar School of Art.

The legacy of the doomed Weimar Republic — which tragically gave way to Hitler's National Socialist regime — is recalled at the National Theatre. Here, in February 1919, the Weimar constitution was struck.

A memorial plaque designed by Gropius reminds visitors of this chapter in German history. A monument of Goethe and Schiller sits in front of the building.

The most illustrious hostelry in Weimar is the venerable Hotel Elephant, which is usually solidly booked. During the Third Reich, Nazi bigwigs stayed here. It remains an elegant hotel, right down to its lovely garden cafe.

From the Hotel Elephant, Nazi VIPs would be driven on inspection tours of Buchenwald, the notorious concentration camp just north of Weimar.

Today, Buchenwald is a memorial which honors the 56,000 inmates from 35 nations who perished within its boundaries.

THE Strand DINER

OUR REVIEWERS SAY IT ALL ...

"The Strand food is everything you want from a diner ... spunky, full of flavour, & fully cognizant of the lessons learned in the past 20 years"
Joanne Kates, Globe & Mail

"DO THE STRAND ... every table is filled with happy diners. Extravagant salads are like gardens on plates. This is one Yorkville spot, you can take the family!"
Sarah Waxman, Toronto Sun

Marathon provides business opportunities for olim

By TOBY KLEIN-GREENWALD & DAVID BEDEIN
Special to The CJN

JERUSALEM — Geoffrey Clein grew up with the Zionist Betar movement in Toronto and believes he is living the embodiment of the Zionist dream.

The Jerusalem office of this trained Conservative rabbi sports photos of NASA space capsules and William Shatner, Leonard Nimoy and others from Star Trek.

"I'm a Trekkie" he admits during an hour-long interview.

Yet Clein is neither a nostalgic hippie nor a born-again Jew seeking his roots. He is the managing director of Marathon, Jerusalem's first international investment house, which in its first 12 months accumulated more than $23 million (US) of managed assets.

Marathon's three divisions focus on private banking, investment banking and special projects.

Carrie Samuels, another former Torontonian, helps take care of the private banking. She advises individuals and corporations on international and local financial investments. More about her later.

Clein's expertise is investment banking, which he describes as "mostly merchant banking. We are the Israeli representatives for companies looking for foreign financing. We are involved in trying to help Israeli companies to function in a more western, businesslike manner."

At a time when the Israeli government slowly divests itself of corporate assets and enters an era of privatization, Marathon hopes to play a vital role in that process.

Clein confides that Marathon is currently involved in a $400-million (US) deal for private investors from Israel and abroad to buy up Shikun Upituach, Israel's government building company.

ENTER YUPPIE ZIONISM

"Our investment banking department deals with what we call 'Yuppie Zionism'," says Clein. "The best way to build up Israel is by building up the economy, by building companies as opposed to giving donations."

Carrie Samuels

To that end, Clein has established the Endeavor Fund to help new olim. "Start-up companies in Israel, especially those run by new immigrants to Israel, cope with a great deal of trouble finding financing. It is even difficult to find investors in what is called 'incubator projects'."

So Marathon put up half of the $10-million fund, with matching dollars from the Israeli government. The fund has helped 13 new companies, all based around Jerusalem.

Clein told The CJN projects include a multi-media "Introduction to Israel" educational project and hi-tech electronics. Of the latter, Clein says, "We are helping [the firm] out on their entire financial structure. They are very brilliant scientists from the CIS, but they don't know much about management, so we brought in our own managers to advise."

Clein gestures towards the large windows of his office. It is a panoramic view of all of Jerusalem. "On a clear day, we can see till Jordan," he says.

Clein says his dream is to see Israelis investing in the West Bank and Jordan and West Bank Arabs investing in Israel.

MAPLE LEAF ZIONISM

Clein's Zionism was generated in Canada. He was born in Montreal and moved with his family to Toronto in 1971. His father, Brian, is a consulting engineer and his mother, Pauline, is the principal of the Bayview Campus of United Synagogue Day Schools. Clein attended the school and there he met his wife, Tova, a staff physician at Shaare Zedek Hospital in Jerusalem.

Clein studied economics and political science at the University of Toronto. Upon graduation, he left to study for the Conservative rabbinate at New York's Jewish Theological Seminary before moving to Israel in 1983. But in Jerusalem, he dropped his rabbinic studies and instead took a law degree at Hebrew University, served in the army and later got a Boston University MBA through Ben Gurion University.

Company extends a hand of friendship

Clein first worked for another investment house, "but at a certain point some of us decided we wanted more independence in investment strategy, and to do something positive for Israel."

The former Betar leader says, "I see what we are doing now as fulfilling Herzl's dream — helping to create an Israel of the future which is western, hi-tech and industrialized."

Geoffry Clein

The man who read a lot of science fiction as a kid speaks proudly of Israel's technological advances. "Israel today has the most advanced telephone system in the world. It is sold all over the world, including the Far East, and probably some Arab countries as well." Veteran immigrants to Israel who remember when one had to wait seven years for a telephone can espcially appreciate the import of what Clein is saying.

How does he explain it?

"All the Israeli governments of the last 10 years have recognized the importance of technology and encouraged it. They also recognized that we have to rely on our only resource — our brain power. And Israelis are the type who like to own the latest technology. I would say the average Israeli in the street is more hi-tech than the average American or Canadian in the street."

One wonders how Clein's years of study serve him in his present position. He says his grasp of political science is especially useful, "since economy is decided more by politics than by other factors." As for the rabbinics, "that's for my own personal enrichment, my self-awareness. It is part of what makes this more than 'just business' for me.

Clein has involved others in his dream. Fifteen people, mostly from North America, Great Britain and Europe, work at Marathon. Clein also involves Jewish professionals from inside and outside Israel in helping to evaluate project candidates for the Endeavor Fund.

Carrie Samuels is a partner in the dream. Samuels studied in the B'nei Akiva Ulpana, came to Israel after high school and did national volunteer service in the geriatrics department of Shaare Zedek Hospital. She returned to Toronto to take an engineering degree and work in the Foreign Exchange before making aliyah this year.

"I was at another company when Marathon approached me and the minute I walked in I felt good," Samuels told The CJN. "They were very professional but very friendly."

Carrie is not the only Samuels child in Israel. She shares an apartment with her sister, Joanna, who works as the English speech writer and special trouble-shooter for Jerusalem Mayor Ehud Olmert. Her brother, Noah, is also a staff physician at Shaare Zedek hospital in Jerusalem.

Parents Laurie and Sandi Samuels also make Jerusalem their home.

Where does Marathon go from here? The answer can be found in the names Clein gave his children: Shavit Noa (moving comet), "because Ibn Ezra said every comet stands for change," Kessem Ra'anan (fresh magic), and Si Re-ut (pinnacle of friendship).

And indeed, Marathon is quickly becoming a company that extends a hand of friendship to new olim, and uses its magic touch to reach for the stars.

At the time of this piece's preparation, the Israeli Ministry of Absorption reported that more than 30,000 newly arrived academically-qualified immigrants to Israel are employed in menial labor. If Geoffrey Clein, Carrie Samuels and their colleagues at Marathon can make a dent in that number and provide business opportunities for some of these enterprising immigrants, then they can live out Herzl's vision in a business-like way, that "if you will it, it is no dream."

Bonds honors CIBC for investments

By BEN ROSE
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Profits made in Israel "exceeded our expectations," an official of the company that invests some of the Walt Disney family fortune said here recently.

"You have to learn to live with the excruciatingly slow decision-making in Israel. Nothing replaces living in the trenches," said Robert G. Moskowitz, of Los Angeles, executive vice-president, Shamrock Holdings Inc.

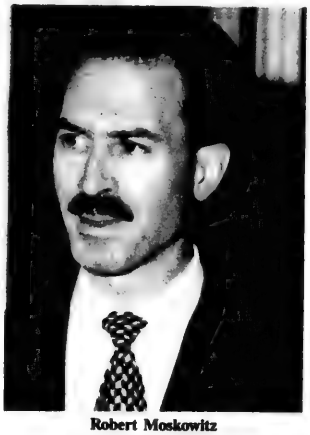
Shamrock is involved in five Israeli companies with a current value of more than $50 million (US), in cable and commercial TV and in energy.

Moskowitz spoke to a select blue-ribbon group of bankers at a reception on the 56th floor of Commerce Court where the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce's Wood Gundy division was honored for its investment in State of Israel Bonds.

"We are now a full contributor and supporter of State of Israel Bonds and it is totally appropriate that we are, for CIBC has a very close partnership with the Jewish community which is beneficial to our clients and potential clients," said John S. Hunkin, president, CIBC Investment and Corporate Bank, the reception host.

The approval of Israel Bonds for RRSPs was lauded as a highly successful development by Richard Venn, chief executive officer, Wood Gundy Inc.

Since much of the Disney funds are already invested in radio stations from Honolulu to Detroit, Moskowitz said it made sense for the company to look into the communications field in Israel. It did that, and so successfully that its first $15 million public offering of Matov cable TV shares on the Tel Aviv stock exchange resulted in it being oversubscribed by 400 times.



Robert Moskowitz

"You can imagine the excitement on the exchange that day," Moskowitz said.

The Matov stock is worth 10 percent more than on the day it went public, he said.

Shamrock was a successful tenderer for one of three commercial TV licenses, though continual delays in announcing the licencees was a serious problem. It combined with the Israeli newspaper Maariv to win one of three licenses granted for commercial TV and operates a TV channel in Tel Aviv on Tuesdays and Thurdays.

"It's interesting to have both cable TV and commercial TV interests in Israel because we are both the plaintiff and defendant in some court cases," Moskowitz said.

Matov cable TV has 180,000 subscribers in Bat Yam, Holon, Haifa and Hadera.

"There is an unfilled demand for TV services in Israel," the Shamrock executive said.

Through its investments in Dos Energy and Dos Gas, his company has about 15 percent of the sales of gas to Israeli automobiles, and is looking into the possiblity of investments in food and food processing, he said.

One of the reasons for Shamrock's success in Israel is its strategy to depend on strong local management and active shareholders. Through its involvement in Israel, the company heard about opportunities in eastern Europe and has invested in cold storage and food processing in Hungary and in telecommunications in Poland, a country which Moskowitz described as "the most under advanced in TV."

The impending dissolution of the Arab boycott should encourage investment in Israel, he said.

The speaker was presented with a catalogue of the Barnes Exhibit at the Art Gallery of Ontario by his host. "We stole the exhibit from Los Angeles, so we think it is only fair that you should get the catalogue," CIBC officer Hunkin said.

Moskowitz was introduced by Al Keiser, CIBC executive vice president, while guests were welcomed by Alex Grossman, Mike Florence and Larry Waller of Israel Bonds.

Hunkin was presented with a painting entitled Star of Peace and Hope by Grossman, Bonds' Canadian chairman.

Peace process spurs activity in Israel's real estate market

Jewish Telegraphic Agency

JERUSALEM — The real estate industry, like most other sectors of the Israeli economy, is feeling the effects of the peace process, according to industry insiders.

During the past year, Israel's real estate market has benefited from the optimism generated by peace agreements with the Palestine Liberation Organization and Jordan. Foreign investment in commercial real estate is booming, and realtors attribute at least part of this upward trend to the peace process.

Yet, while momentum at the negotiating table has translated into profits in the commercial sphere, the private housing market remains more ambivalent.

Despite daily headlines proclaiming that the government has secretly offered compensation to some settlers in the Gaza Strip and the Golan Heights — reports that the government has firmly denied — few settlers appear to be preparing to leave.

Whereas local realtors say they anticipate a time when many residents of the territories will seek property within Israel's pre-1967 borders, they report that very few settlers have made inquiries to date.

Furthermore, the question of when, or even if, Israel will relinquish control over the territories has added a measure of uncertainty to the country's real estate market — something many homeowners and potential buyers find unnerving.

Still, even with this uncertainty, realtors predict that, at least in the long term, the peace process will be good for business.

In a recent interview with the Jerusalem Post, Haim Kaufman, chair of the Israel Real Estate Association, predicted that "foreign investment in real estate, including investment by Israelis who have been living abroad, will increase as the influence of the peace process takes firmer hold."

Evidently, realtors here are already witnessing this trend. Albert Rimi, of Kenyan Realtors in Tel Aviv, said

This week The CJN features ...Daiter's

By CAROLYN BLACKMAN

TORONTO — Daiter's, with stores at 3535 Bathurst St. and 928 Eglinton Ave. W., maintains the same high quality dairy products as it did in the original store in Kensington Market opened by Harry Daiter in 1937.

Now run by Harry's son Ron and grandsons Joel and Stephen, the company is still known for its kosher cheese, supervised by Kashruth Council of Toronto and manufactured under the Lana label.

"We still make this 100 per cent natural, 2½ per cent butterfat cheese the way that it was made in Europe. It is made in cheesecloth and taken out when ordered by customers. Because it is hand cut, they can order as much or as little as they like. They do not have to take a precise amount — only what they need. The cheesecloth keeps the cheese dry so it is excellent for baking," says Joel Daiter, who runs the retail end of the business.

Keeping up with the trend towards lower fat consumption, Daiter's also manufactures a 2 per cent and a ½ per cent butterfat whipped cottage cheese.

"The ½ per cent cheese is our largest selling cheese today. It is low in butterfat, but still creamy. Daiter's cream cheese, with only 17 per cent butterfat, is also a low-fat item and most customers cannot tell the difference between our cheese and a higher fat cream cheese. We leave in just enough fat to give it the cream cheese taste. Our yogurt, also supervised under the Kashruth Council, comes in 3½ or ½ per cent butterfat."

Daiter says that when they manufacture their dairy products or stock the store with the myriad of other products they offer, they keep in mind that people are looking for low or no fat items, but they still want to enjoy what they are eating.

"Eating healthy does not have to mean that food has no taste. Our aim is to offer healthy foods that people like to eat," says Daiter.

Catering is a large part of Daiter's business, specializing in making custom-ordered trays.

"We have no set menu so customers can spend as much or as little as they can afford and can pick and choose exactly what they would like to serve. Someone from the catering department discusses exactly what the customer wants and that is exactly what they get. We are proud to provide that personal touch."

Always ready for Jewish holidays, Daiter's stocks its stores chock full of holiday food items. Daiter stresses that "we do not raise our prices just before a holiday."

BLACK TIE DINNER

Adam Zimmerman, a director at Noranda Inc. was the keynote speaker at a dinner hosted by University of Toronto president Robert Prichard. Zimmerman was deputy chairman of U of T's $100 million Breakthrough Campaign and was central to the success of the fundraising effort for the construction of the Earth Sciences Centre. The annual dinner, held at Hart House, honors the university's top donors. Other speakers included Andre Salama, a professor of electrical and computer engineering and Rizwan Hassan, an undergraduate student and 1994 nation scholar.

Firm targets commercial filming

By BARBARA SILVERSTEIN
Special to The CJN

TORONTO — At a downtown studio, an Avion Film Productions crew is shooting a 30-second television commercial for Chrysler.

The special effects people create a snow storm with a machine that blows tiny white plastic chips into the air. The camera rolls as the snow flakes drift down onto the red jeep sitting in the middle of the set.

The camera stops at intervals so the production staff can keep piling snow on the car. By the end of this sequence — it has taken seven hours to shoot — the car is completely covered with snow.

Michael Schwartz, the president of Avion, doesn't need to spend much time on the set — a producer runs the show. But on this day he's on hand for an interview with The CJN.

Avion has been in business for less than five months, but it has already racked up 90 days of film shooting, Schwartz says. "We're ahead of our projections." But the early success of the company doesn't surprise him. "There was a lot of heavy talent in place. We weren't a little Mickey Mouse operation just starting up."

Three of the owners of Avion — Schwartz, George Morita and Stanley Mestel — had been partners in Partners Film Company, one of the largest commercial production companies in the world, Schwartz says. Labatts took it over five months ago and bought out many of the partners, including the three principals in Avion.

They subsequently formed a company with two silent partners. They've have been busy from day one, Schwartz says. "The advertising community was quite anxious to have a financially sound alternative choice to the Partners Company."

He says Avion has a financial edge over many other production companies because businessman Jon Geist, one of the silent partners, is helping with the financial management of the company. "Jon's a very good businessman and compliments the group very well."

Schwartz, 44, has over 20 years of experience in film. He started working in commercials after completing a degree in film studies at York University. He was employed at Schulz Productions for 12 years before joining Partners, with whom he stayed for seven years.

As president, Schwartz works on bids for commercials, preparing production cost estimates of the story boards sent to him by advertising agencies. But winning a bid is not just a matter of cost. The work of the directors whom Avion represents is a major factor in the selection process, Schwartz says.

Avion is the exclusive agent for a number of American and Canadian film directors — such as Peter O'Fallon and Carol Ballard — who do commercials in between feature film and television projects. Schwartz promotes them and other directors specializing in commercials by sending out demo tapes to advertising agencies. Morita and Mestel are amongst this group.

On the set Michael Cooper, the executive producer, oversees the entire shoot for BBD and O Canada, the advertising agency that created the Chrsyler commercial.

He says he selected Avion to because he wanted Morita to direct — "George is a technocrat and this is a technical spot." The company has a good reputation, Cooper says. "All the people that Mike's hired for his company and the shoots are the cream of the crop."

Schwartz says he plans to increase this pool of talent, by helping young local directors develop skills for directing commercials. He also wants to expand the company's scope by getting into other commercial related products such as infomercials and sponsored programming.

Schwartz says that while the low Canadian dollar is luring the feature film business to Canada, the commercial business is not benefiting from the low dollar. He says this is partly due to the lack of funds for promoting the commercial film industry south of the border.

But commercial film production in Canada, unlike feature films, isn't subject to the fluctuations of the dollar — it's a $150-million industry wether the dollar is up or down, Schwartz says.

The commercial film industry keeps people in the film industry working between features, he says. "The whole infrastructure [of the film industry] is supported on an ongoing basis by the commercial film industry."

Back on the set in the early evening, the camera has stopped rolling. A few production staff sweep the snow into garbage bags while someone hoses down the jeep in the driveway. Equipment is packed up and hauled out of the studio. It's a wrap.

Diaspora Jews 'feel out' the market

that "the peace process has already made a difference in the commercial market. Many foreign investors think that peace is around the corner and believe that Israel will become a center of world commerce."

During the past year, Rimi said, "commercial property sales have gone up 20 per cent, and prices have jumped at least 20 per cent. Many properties that were dead (undeveloped) have been sold to overseas firms in the area between Tel Aviv and Jerusalem."

"We have definitely seen more business inquiries since the start of the peace process," said David Blumberg, of Anglo-Saxon Realty in Herzliya.

"Midsized companies, especially from the United States, are purchasing more offices, shops and factories."

To take advantage of this investment, the Herzliya Pituach Industrial Zone, one of the largest industrial parks in the country, plans to build 2.2 million square feet of hi-tech office space over the next five years, Blumberg said.

Both Blumberg and Rimi report that a growing number of Diaspora Jews, including Israelis living abroad, are feeling out Israel's residential real estate market.

"We are getting quite a few inquiries, especially from Israelis," said Blumberg, who added that "right after the earthquake in California, Israelis living there began to show a real interest in coming back."

"There is definitely a feeling of optimism about Israel, and Jews from abroad are looking to buy," Rimi agreed. "What's new is the fact that they seem to be looking at apartments that will not only serve as investments, but also as their homes sometime in the future.

"Until recently, purchases by Diaspora Jews had been confined almost exclusively to Tel Aviv, Netanya and Jerusalem. Now they're looking in other parts of the country as well," Rimi said.

Unfortunately, this upbeat mood has not spread to Israelis at home — at least not yet.

With territorial compromise a distinct possibility, most prospective buyers are wary about buying beyond the pre-1967 borders, said Karen Goldman of Jerusalem's Narkiss Agency. This fact, coupled with the limited supply of homes within the Green Line, is raising already inflated prices even higher.

"The situation is very unclear, and people are feeling the uncertainty," Goldman said.

"It's hard to know what the future will bring, and whether the settlers will move to property within the Green Line."

If they do, she predicted, "they may not have enough money to buy the type of home they had in the territories. Property there is much cheaper and people who have beautiful, large homes may have to settle for much smaller apartments, perhaps outside of the city.

"This, of course, will push up the price of less expensive apartments. Really, everything depends on whether the government provides the settlers with compensation."

According to most realtors, very few residents of the territories are actively looking to move.

"I've had only a handful of settlers come into the office," said Blumberg, "but in truth, it's hard to know who lives in the territories and who doesn't. If a settler is preparing to leave, he doesn't necessarily want others to know."

While the majority of realtors also say that the real estate market in the territories has become virtually stagnant over the past year, and note that the Rabin government halted all new housing starts when it came into power, there have been some exceptions.

Miriam Armon, owner of Miriam Realty in the West Bank town of Efrat, said that "a lot of people" moved to Efrat this year.

Although some people moved into houses bought prior to the start of peace negotiations, she said, "many bought homes just a few months ago.

"People are drawn to Efrat. They are looking for a quiet life near Jerusalem. The prices are good — just $120,000 for a three-bedroom apartment with a garden — and we're just 15 to 17 minutes to the city by car."

Asked whether her clients are concerned that further strides in the peace process could endanger their homes, Armon responded, "There isn't a single apartment available for rent in Efrat. Personally, I'm not worried."

275 PERSONAL COMPANIONS WANTED

Bachelor, 5' 10", 43, business man, sincere & caring would like to settle. Seeks nice young lady up to 35 years old, kind & friendly. Box 6293 CJN

By nature, I am a modest and humble male. So if I resort to bragging, you'll know it's not easy for me.
The word nice was invented to describe me. My mind is constantly on "consideration alert." I can't help doing good. It's an addiction.
Looks. I was truly cursed. Physically, I am beyond handsome. Looking at me is like looking at an eclipse. My pulchritude might blind you.
I could have been a doctor or lawyer. But that would have been the easy way out.
I'm 48, divorced, no children. The embellishments are tongue in cheek, but not the essence. Box 6300 CJN

European background, early 60s divorced male, non-smoker, financially secure, seeking sincere woman, non-smoker 50-60. Box 6301 CJN

I'm 51 years old, Russian-Jewish widow. I would like to meet a caring, unattached Jewish gentleman up to 65 years old for longterm relationship. Please reply to Box 6298 CJN

I'm a romantic Jewish gent, 49, looking for a Jewish lady and if you missed out, like me, on having children let's talk. Call me anytime 663-4076

RECIPE OF THE WEEK

Mustard-glazed Rib Steak

Ingredients:1 3/4-1 lb. rib steak (approx. 3/4" thick); 1/3 cup [75 mL] Dijon mustard; 2 tbsp [25 mL] olive oil; 2 tbsp [25 mL] lemon juice; 1 tbsp [15 mL] Worcestershire sauce; 1/2 tsp [2 mL] Tabasco sauce; 1/2 tsp [2 mL] freshly ground pepper; 1 tbsp [15 mL] soy sauce.

Pat steak dry. Combine remaining ingredients and spread mixture on both sides. Allow to marinate in refrigerator for 30 minutes or up to 3 hours. Preheat bbq or broiler. Brush grill with a little oil and herbs before placing steak on it (this will prevent sticking). Cook for 5-7 minutes per side for medium-rare.

Israel denies plans to kill Hamas leaders

Jerusalem Post Foreign Service

JERUSALEM — Israeli officials last Sunday dismissed a Hamas claim that Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin has ordered the assassination of its leaders, but confirmed that Israel has launched a wide-scale crackdown against the organization.

In a statement received by Reuters in Beirut, Hamas said Rabin had issued orders to assassinate its leaders in retaliation for last Wednesday's bus bombing in Tel Aviv that claimed 22 victims.

Hamas vowed to hit back if any of its officials were attacked, either inside the territories or abroad.

"We tell Rabin and all the Zionist terror and assassination apparatuses (sic) to beware of harming the sons and symbols of Hamas," the group warned. "Hamas or its brigades will not hesitate to retaliate with all its might to these attempts."

The group repeated its demand that Israel free Arab prisoners, including its founder, Sheikh Ahmed Yassin.

At Sunday's cabinet meeting, ministers were briefed on Hamas and its increasing employment of terror by Rabin, the General Security Service (GSS) and other security officials. Fifty Hamas activists have been arrested since the bombing, the cabinet was told.

Israel confirmed that Saleh Abdel Rahim Souwi, an unknown Hamas activist, carried out the suicide bombing.

However, the 50 activists are not considered major players by the GSS and the Army, although some are central figures in their villages.

By and large, they are local operatives who may shed light on the whereabouts of those on the wanted list of approximately 25 major activists and about 70 members of Izzadin Kassam, Hamas's military wing.

Security sources denied that Rabin ever gave a direct order to "eliminate" anyone, and stressed that Hamas terror is initiated and ordered by people outside the territories.

"An effective crackdown would undoubtedly require international cooperation," one security source said. "Hamas is being financed by sympathizers in the U.S. and Britain and through banks in Jordan. One of the first steps inevitably will be to follow the money trail and cut it."

After the briefings, the cabinet decided to authorize the demolition of houses of terrorists who have been killed, but disagreed on the legality and effectiveness of destroying the houses of their families.

"If the intention of the Hamas leadership is to speak about the terms for destroying Israel, it is truly no partner," he told reporters last week.

"If, however, it is interested in calming the storm, I believe we have passed the age when we say we won't speak with an organization because it has a certain name.

Mourners weep for terror victims

By AMY SATTIN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Close to 1,000 people gathered Sunday in a North York synagogue to mourn the 22 Jewish victims of the Oct. 19 bus bombing in Tel Aviv.

There was standing room only at a community memorial service held at Beth David B'nai Israel Beth Am Congregation, organized by B'nai Brith Canada, the Canadian Zionist Federation and Canadian Jewish Congress, Ontario region.

Black armbands dotted the crowd, which listened appreciatively as Ontario premier Bob Rae called for an international effort to stamp out terrorism and the governments that support it.

"If a group of terrorists can blow up a centre in Buenos Aires or in Tel Aviv, who is to say they couldn't do the same in Toronto?" he asked.

Rae urged his listeners not to "let the terrorists win their game. Their game is fear, their game is to so terrorize us that we will refuse to speak up, that we will refuse to carry on, that we will give up and say, 'Well, what more do you want?'

"The road to appeasement, with that kind of terror, is a road no one wants to go down," he said to thunderous applause.

"As long as I have breath to breathe, the people of Canada are at one with the people of Israel," Rae shouted.

The 50-minute service was opened with Congress regional chair Gerda Frieberg reading out the names of the dead.

Canadian reaction page 10

The attack was in retaliation for a bloody Israeli commando raid earlier this month, in which three Hamas kidnappers were killed along with their victim, 19-year-old soldier Nachshon Waxman, and commando Nir Poraz.

Those gathered for the memorial service murmured their assent when B'nai Brith Canada president Brian Morris and Israeli consul Dror Zeigerman called for Canadian efforts to "dry up the flow of funds" to Hamas from Iran, Syria and other fundamentalist Muslim regimes.

Feelings ran high in the crowd. Some hissed when federal government representative Art Eggleton said the land-for-peace talks in the Middle East must continue. Others bowed their heads at the mention of the earlier bus bombings in Afula and Hadera that killed 13 in April.

Pamela Sharfe, 24, sobbed during the singing of Hatikvah. She said because her older brother and his family live in Jerusalem, the Tel Aviv attack "is very close to home." Her parents are considering cancelling their upcoming trip, she said, fearing more random violence.

Alex and Helen Lifshitz, both members of the synagogue, said they came to the service "because we're Jews and we feel very bad about this. The people are trying to make peace and it's not fair."

The couple, who spend six weeks every year in Israel, is going ahead with their February trip. "We never have second thoughts," said Helen Lifshitz.

Ishai David, 18, an Israeli living in Canada, wore a black armband to the memorial service, the first at which he ever cried, he said. "It was in the heart of Tel Aviv, where I used to hang out on weekends," he said, shaking his head.

Sagi Gedalevitch, 19, said Israel must continue its tough stand against terrorism. "If we show [the terrorists] we're not afraid, nothing will happen," he said. "We have to fight them."

By DAVID LAZARUS
CJN Staff Reporter

MONTREAL — Less that a week after coming together to memorialize Israeli Cpl. Nachshon Waxman, Montreal Jews gathered again on Oct. 20 to mourn 22 more brethren murdered by Hamas in Tel Aviv.

The crowd of 800 listened to speakers demand that Canada and the world community galvanize efforts to destroy Hamas and ostracize any nation that sponsors terrorism.

The most emotional address during the hour-long service at the Tifereth Beth David Jerusalem Synagogue came from McGill University law professor Irwin Cotler, who had to pause towards the end of his remarks to hold his emotions in check.

"Hamas is the only post-Nazi, post-apartheid racist movement in the world," Cotler said, "A standing incitement to genocide."

Cotler and other speakers described the Tel Aviv bombing as an attack not against Israel, but against the Jewish religion and people.

Cotler said the call to kill Jews is contained in the Hamas charter.

He also said the fact that the PLO continues to uphold its own charter calling for the elimination of Israel and to shield Hamas inside the Gaza strip is tantamout to the PLO's being a "standing accomplice" to Hamas terror.

Cotler accused Canada and the United States of standing by while Hamas infrastructure cells operate on North American soil, where they raise funds to launch terrorist operations "by remote control."

It is an open secret that this is the situation which exists, Cotler and Canada-Israel Committee, Quebec region (CIC-Q) chair Thomas Hecht said.

Cotler wondered why thousands of Hamas members are able to "train openly in the citrus groves of Gaza?"

He also asked: Why are thousands of their weapons not confiscated? Why does Hamas roam unfettered through Gaza while a Palestinian police force of 9,000 looks on? And why has not one of 35 Hamas leaders in Gaza been arrested, charged or extradited?.

Because, Cotler concluded, the victims are Jewish.

He said the international community must treat Hamas as the "enemies of humankind," not merely be "quick to send condolences" when terrorist acts occur.

Lawrence Bergman, Liberal MNA for D'Arcy McGee, called Hamas members "devils." He said parties to the peace process must pursue them or forfeit the right to be described as true peace-seekers.

Hecht called on Canada to take the lead in taking action against states that support and fund terrorism.

Toronto opens its heart to Jay Feinberg

By LEILA SPEISMAN
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — Kol Yisroel areivim zeh bazeh — the people of Israel are responsible one for the other.

Toronto's Jewish community showed their commitment to that talmudic philosophy last week, as they rolled up their sleeves and opened their pocketbooks to help Jay Feinberg in his fight for life.

Feinberg suffers from chronic myelogenous leukemia. His only chance for survival for more than a few months lies in receiving a bone marrow transplant.

Screenings of close to 50,000 Jews around the world have not yet found a compatible match for him, costs are escalating (each test costs about $75 Canadian) and time is running out for the plucky 26-year-old.

Over 2,000 people jammed the main banquet hall of Shaarei Shomayim Synagogue for testing. Most stood in line for over an hour waiting for their turn. Doctors, nurses and technicians in the crowd were tested themselves, then turned around and stayed to help out.

Members of the Stanleigh family, whose son and brother Audey received a transplant from Steve Cheifetz, a Windsor man originally tested for Feinberg, manned the microphones pleading for donations to pay for the testing.

And people came through — over $20,000 was raised during the evening.

Although the clinic was advertised as running from 5 to 9, people began coming by 4:30. Exhausted organizers and volunteers left the building after 11.

Because of the seriousness of Feinberg's condition, youngsters under the usual allowable age of 17 were tested, although they are not permitted to be listed on the international bone marrow registries.

Beth Jacob girls in their distinctive grey pleated skirts and grey striped blouses, yeshivah boys in black hats and suits, CHAT students and Bnei Akiva Schools and public school kids joined university students, mothers pushing babies in strollers, people on their way home from work or headed for evening commitments, in a scene that brought tears to the eyes of many who entered the room.

In a tragic twist, some had been tested several years ago for Alison Atlas, a Maryland student whose quest for a transplant was the first in a series of mass screenings. Inexplicably, the results of some of those tests were never entered in the registries.

Around the city, fuelled to a great extent by Feinberg's moving appearance on the Shirley Show and by a determined public relations effort by Lori Palatnik, others took part in the effort to save him.

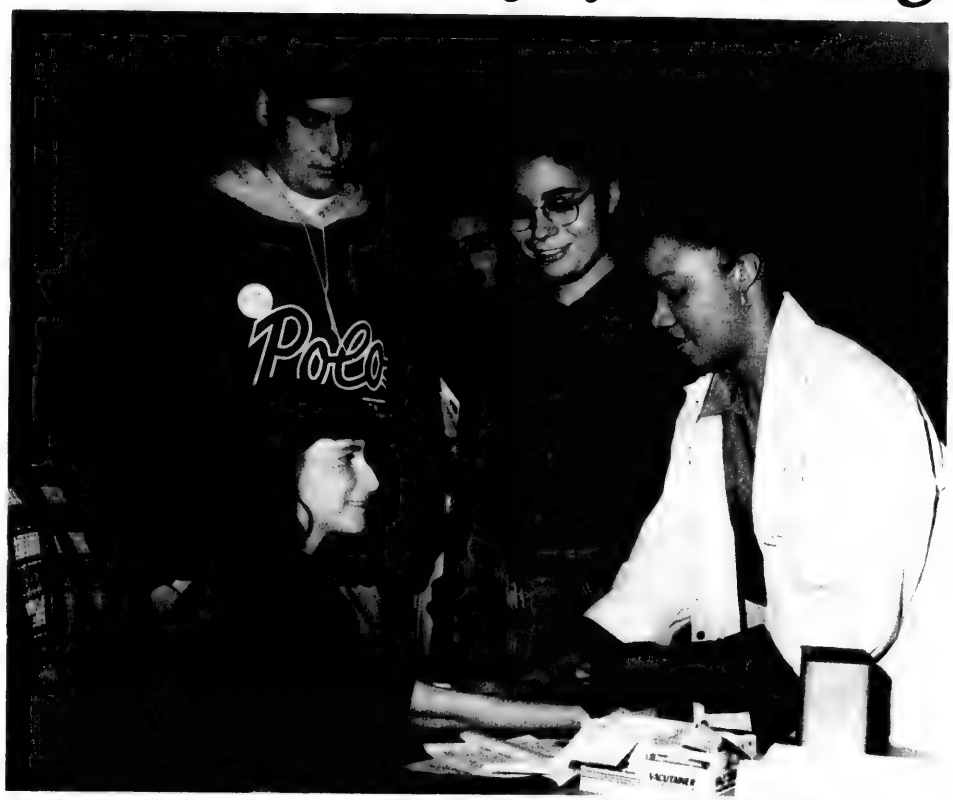
Saul Mednick told The CJN his "99 per cent Jewish" Forest Hill Lions Club raised $750 for the cause at an emergency meeting.



Audey Stanleigh and Jay Feinberg look on sympathetically as a 15-year-old potential bone marrow donor is tested by Dynacare Labs technician Marci Parker. [Alron photo]

The student council of United Synagogue Day School Bayview Campus, with the help of teacher Cherie Sachar, organized a Sports for Life fundraising marathon for students in grades 3 through 8.

Youngsters gave their own pocket money, as well as collecting sponsors for the event, during which they walked or jogged some 2,000 laps around a park near the school.

The last count was $4,562.82 — and the money is still coming in.

Feinberg and his mother, Arlene, said they were overwhelmed by the response of the Toronto community, calling it one of the warmest.

BBYO lends a hand

TORONTO — More than 500 people, mostly teenagers, according to drive organizer Marshall Deltoff, appeared at the Bathurst Jewish Centre last Thursday night for a screening run by B'nai Brith Youth Organization (BBYO).

Deltoff said that, along with an impromptu screening held at the B'nai Brith baseball awards banquet the previous night, over 2,700 people were tested in Toronto during the week.

BBYO members manned the registration desk, acted as traffic control, and sold chips and pastries to raise funds for the campaign.They also donated the proceeds of a dance held earlier in the month.

Stark signs lined the walls, noting that the Feinbergs could no longer cover the cost of the tests. While BBYO members' tests were covered, others had to pay before being tested, explained Andrea Harendorf, who initiated the BBYO effort.

Jay Feinberg told The CJN that he hopes to return in a couple of weeks to do more testing, but he added with a twinkle, "hopefully not for me!" — L.S.

NOBEL PROTEST

Beilin opens door to Hamas

"Hamas is a very, very problematic organization, an organization that uses the cruelest terror. But within it there are certainly those who are less extreme, and if they want to enter into a relevant discussion with us, I am not sure it's our job to say that because their name is such and such, it's forbidden for us to talk to them," Beilin said.

* * *

Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin on Sunday officially informed the Likud that PLO Chairman Yasser Arafat would not be invited to this Wednesday's signing of the peace treaty with Jordan.

Rabin sought to pre-empt an opposition boycott of the ceremony, after the Likud Knesset faction urged him to make sure Arafat would not be present.

Nevertheless, some Likud MKs said they would stay away from the signing, although a majority were expected to put in an appearance. Most are also likely to support the pact.

The ceremony was also to be boycotted by the National Religious Party, which has criticized the government for "staging an elaborate production while Israeli blood is being spilled."

Moledet has come out against the agreement, chiefly for "giving Jordan a foothold on the Temple Mount."

Likud leader Benjamin Netanyahu came out solidly behind the agreement, arguing that "it presents a model of the sort of agreement the Likud can support, because basically it offers an example of a 'peace-for-peace' deal, not one in which Israel pays and the Arabs take, Israel loses and the Arabs win ... the agreement with Jordan is one with an established state, which aspires to live side by side with Israel. This puts it in sharp contrast to the deal with the PLO, which has already failed abysmally and whose underlying shortcoming is in the fact that the PLO still aspires to replace Israel."

U.S. President Bill Clinton's first stop on his Mideast tour this week is in Cairo on Wednesday. He is scheduled to meet Arafat and Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak. Later that day, Clinton is slated to attend the signing ceremony at the Israel-Jordan border, north of the Red Sea resorts of Eilat and Aqaba.

He is scheduled to address the Knesset on Thursday, as well as tour the Old City and visit Yad Vashem.

Israel's cabinet on Sunday approved bringing in another 19,000 foreign workers to compensate for the labor shortage caused by the closure of the territories following last Wednesday's bus bombing.

Finance Minister Avraham Shohat said he supported the move in order to avoid a slowdown in construction and damage to agriculture. However, he conditioned his support on bringing the workers for a limited period only.

Otherwise, he warned, the workers will bring their families and the state will have to provide them with services.

British MP says Arafat worthy of Nobel Prize

By RON CSILLAG
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — While most Jewish organizations and leaders continue to express grave misgivings over the co-awarding of the Nobel Peace Prize to PLO leader Yasser Arafat, at least one Jewish official says he's "delighted" by it.

Greville Janner, a British Labor MP and president of the Commonwealth Jewish Council, says he hopes Arafat "will live up to the good name" the prize brings with it.

Janner told the recent annual meeting of the Canadian Council of Christians and Jews that he proposed awarding the prize to Arafat because without the PLO leader, "there would be no peace."

Awarding the prize to the background negotiators of the PLO-Israel accord would have been "like giving an award to the screenwriters instead of the actors," Janner told The CJN in a brief interview.

"I know Arafat fairly well," he said. "I also know Rabin and [Foreign Minister Shimon] Peres. They're brilliant people. Those three men have created a miracle. They have opened up hope, and that's what the Nobel Prizes are all about."

Greville Janner

Asked about ongoing terror in the Middle East and Arafat's inability to control it, Janner noted that last year's peace prize went to South Africa's Nelson Mandela and former president F.W. de Klerk well before apartheid was dismantled.

As for the extremist Muslim Hamas movement, "They are as much Arafat's enemy as Israel's."

Janner said he fears that, through terrorism, Hamas will accomplish its chief aim: to derail the peace process. That was evident, he explained, when the group kidnapped Israeli soldier Nachshon Waxman. Israel immediately suspended peace talks during the crisis.

"Terrorism is not a political philosophy. It's a disgraceful means of achieving what you want."

He said jokingly that the "great miracle" of the Mideast is not that Rabin shook Arafat's hand, but that Rabin and Peres shook hands.

Janner had fond words for Canada, despite his recollection of the anti-Semitism he encountered at Bishop's University when he was evacuated to Montreal during World War II.

One reason Canada has been spared terror attacks is government vigilance and assurances that Ottawa regards terrorists as criminals, Janner said.

Now is the time, he remarked, for Christians and Jews to reach out jointly to Muslims and Arabs.

Gerry Weiner brings science background to Weizmann Institute

By FRANCES KRAFT
CJN Staff Reporter

TORONTO — If Gerry Weiner has his wish, he will soon become known as "Mr. Weizmann" instead of "Mr. Multiculturalism."

The former minister of multiculturalism and citizenship will become the national executive director of the Canadian Society for the Weizmann Institute of Science on Nov. 1.

A pharmacist by profession, Weiner, 61, says that the position will allow him to combine his health care expertise with the close ties he feels for Israel.

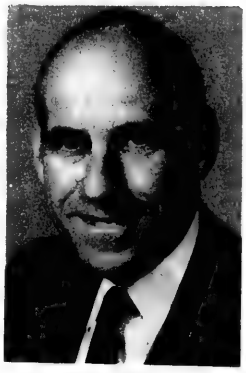
Because he has no prior affiliation with the Canadian Society for Weizmann, which has its headquarters in Toronto, one of Weiner's first tasks will be to become better acquainted with "the people who have dedicated themselves to the Weizmann cause so that their cause becomes my cause."

The Weizmann concept of a "family" of supporters appeals to Weiner. "It fits well with my spirit, [which is] to bring people together," he told The CJN recently during a brief trip to Toronto.

Both as a longtime community volunteer and as a federal politician for nine years, Weiner has abided by the belief that "everything is possible.

"If a cause or issue was brought to my attention, I usually adopted it as my own. 'No, I can't' was never a part of my vocabulary," he said.

Even as a federal politician whose positions ranged from secretary of state to minister of immigration, Weiner made a point of being accessible. His home phone number was always listed, he said.



Gerry Weiner

Weiner, a native Montrealer, hopes that his move to Toronto won't be perceived as "disowning his rights.

"I'm leaving because this happens to be where Weizmann is, and where I'm doing most of my work," he said. "I'm very comfortable with the linguistic duality in Montreal. It's not an easy decision. There's always a bit of remorse at leaving, but it's still one country. I'm hoping I can still help Canada continue to understand itself [in terms of] diversity."

Weiner intends to spend much of his time travelling throughout Canada on behalf of Weizmann. The Canadian society has offices in Montreal and Ottawa as well as Toronto. He expects to take the Weizmann message beyond the Jewish community, he said.

Although he has been "a constant visitor" to Israel, he has never been to the Weizmann campus in Rehovot. That will be remedied in a few weeks when he will attend the semi-annual meeting of the executive directors and the board of governors.

Weiner sees his new position as "an ambassadorial role" for Weizmann. "I'm thrilled to be able to continue to work within the community in a role that complements my efforts of the previous decade where I spent a lot of time building partnerships."

Pollard parole said unlikely

VANCOUVER — Jonathan Pollard will be up for a parole hearing late next year but his sister Carol told the Vancouver Sun she doesn't think there's a chance he'll get parole.

In Vancouver to address a community rally at Schara Tzedeck Synagogue, Carol Pollard said in an interview that she thinks her brother will eventually be released from prison, where he is serving a life term for spying on the United States for Israel.

Pollard said the continued imprisonment of her brother stands as evidence that Israel is being redefined as an enemy of the United States by people in the government who feel relations with Middle East countries that produce oil are more important.

She said that attitude is puzzling considering the information he gave Israel concerning poison gas and nuclear development in countries like Libya, Iraq and Syria.

Beilin calls for new Israel-Diaspora link in message to CJC conference

By MAURICE LUCOW
CJN Western Correspondent

VANCOUVER — Yossi Beilin, the controversial deputy foreign minister of Israel, didn't show as scheduled at the Western conference of Canadian Jewish Congress held here Oct. 22-23.

Instead, he sent a message explaining his views about strengthening Jewish continuity and identity.

Transmitted to Congress Pacific region director Erwin Nest through the Israel embassy, Beilin's message called for the establishment of a "Jewish international democratic institute to serve as the main liaison between Israel and Diaspora Jewry."

The institute, Beit Israel, would be committed to Jewish education, assisting immigrants from distressed countries and "the most important goal, bringing youth [aged 17] from the Diaspora to visit Israel" on a month-long program.

The program "would be a gift from the Jewish people to the young generation," Beilin believes.

Yossi Beilin

Funding would come mainly at the expense of social welfare activities in Israel not related to immigration, the message stated.

Beilin said "this age (17) is the most crucial stage in establishing one's identity. The direct contact with the State of Israel is the key to strengthening the relationship between the Diaspora and Israel."

The deputy foreign minister acknowledged his proposal "may raise doubt" about its feasibility. He would test the idea in at least two Jewish communities before implementation.

Beilin called also for an international census to locate unaffiliated Jews.

The message, received before last Wednesday's bombing in Tel Aviv, said advances in the peace process and the strengthening of Israel's economy "has placed Israel on the path towards peace and prosperity. At the same time, Diaspora Jews continue to integrate into their own communities, causing an increase in assimilation."

Because of the prospect of peace and prosperity, Israel's relationship with the Diaspora could be diminished, Beilin suggests, and the problem of Jewish continuity must become one of prime concern.

Atlantic rabbis form a beth din

By JOEL JACOBSON
CJN Maritimes Correspondent

HALIFAX — Three Orthodox rabbis in Atlantic Canada have formed a beth din (religious court) to arbitrate spiritual matters and make decisions on kashrut.

Rabbi Shlomo Grafstein of Beth Israel Synagogue in Halifax said the trio, which includes Rabbi David Spiro of Fredericton's Sgoolai Israel Synagogue and Rabbi David Ellis of Moncton's Congregation Tiferes Israel, will try to "keep it simple to help our communities.

"We will continue to send people to Montreal for conversion or divorce but, by getting involved in kashrut and arbitration, and by arranging for speakers to visit each community, we hope to upgrade levels of Jewish commitment in our region."

Rabbi Ellis said the beth din is important to arbitrate cases between Jews. "According to Jewish laws, two Jews who have an argument are not supposed to go to a secular court to solve it. If there is a proper [beth din] structure, they are to settle the affair among themselves."

He said a beth din is cheaper and avoids legalese. "It is a matter of educating the public," said Rabbi Ellis.

While major food producers receive a COR, MK or other national kashrut designation, there are some regional manufacturers whose kashrut the rabbis can verify.

For example, one Halifax baker's challah and bagels have recently been approved by Rabbi Grafstein. He has also sanctioned cottage cheese from Scotsburn Dairy in Nova Scotia.

Rabbi Grafstein said he visited a Halifax-area seafood producer, hoping to approve its smoked salmon, but discovered shellfish is processed in the same containers.

"We can make arrangements to visit, unannounced, local food manufacturers," said Rabbi Ellis, "and will even get together to make a group visit if the producer is large enough."

Disabled veteran Shabi Cohen, with Canadian Julia Sax and wife Shoshana Cohen, at opening of new Beit Halochem centre in Jerusalem.

Recreation centre opens for disabled Israeli soldiers

By LEORA FRUCHT
CJN Israel Correspondent

JERUSALEM — Danny Liani lost his eyesight during Israel's 1982 invasion of Lebanon.

"When I was injured I said to myself that I would never forget Jerusalem. Now I see that Jerusalem has not forgotten me," said Liani, during a moving ceremony held this month to mark the opening of Beit Halochem, Jerusalem's new sports and recreation centre for disabled soldiers.

Liani, a member of the IDF's Golani Brigade, is one of 5,000 veterans who will benefit from the $16.5 million centre, which was built with the support of Canadian Jewry.

Many of those donors were on hand for the inauguration, which was attended by President Ezer Weizman, Deputy Defence Minister Mordechai Gur and Chief of Staff-designate Amnon Shachak.

The 30-member delegation from Beit Halochem Canada included organization president Michael Sax, filmmaker Ivan Reitman and businessman Alex Raab. Canada's ambassador to Israel, Norman Spector, was also present.

The centre, situated in the Malcha neighborhood of Jerusalem, is the first Beit Halochem (Fighters' House) in the capital, and the third in the country. Canadian donations of $2 million paid for all the equipment in the new centre, including physiotherapy and sports facilities, computers and furniture.

MONTREAL — It's ba-a-ck!

The Brown Derby Restaurant and Delicatessen, which closed in September after its longtime owner declared bankruptcy, has reopened under new owners.

The 39-year-old establishment, beloved by generations of Jewish Montrealers, was bought by Macy's Terminal Enterprises Ltd., whose previous restaurant experience includes running the cafeterias at the Voyageur bus terminals at Berri and in Ottawa.

The company's secretary-treasurer Phil Levi said Macy's is a Montreal firm that's been around since 1947. It also owns a number of tobacco shops, news-stands and depanneurs.

Former owner Harry Fleisher filed for bankruptcy listing $478,083 owed to creditors and assets of $225,000 in court documents, making a deficit of $253,083.

"We believe there is no reason a restaurant with that following, quality of food and volume cannot make money," Levi said.

The Brown Derby's take-out and catering service was back in business last Friday, and the restaurant was in full operation by Monday.

Levi said the new owners have lowered some prices and plan to reduce others soon. "We want to be affordable," he said.

The place has also been spruced up and more renovations are foreseen, he said. The hours were to remain about the same and most of the laid-off staff have been rehired.

Former manager Harvey Wolfe has also returned, but now he shares the duties with Bert Simon of Macy's Terminal.

Exodus of Syrian Jews ends as Chief Rabbi arrives in Israel

Jerusalem Post Foreign Service and Jewish Telegraphic Agency

JERUSALEM — Syrian Jewry's spiritual leader arrived at Ben-Gurion Airport last week, marking the end of the dramatic and secret exodus of most of Syria's Jews.

Last Tuesday, Rabbi Avraham Hamra descended the El Al airplane from New York onto the tarmac, where he was engulfed by public officials, dignitaries and relatives, while hordes of reporters were kept at bay by airport security personnel.

"Only a week ago, I sat with the rabbi for three hours (in New York) and he told me his dream" to make aliyah, said Uri Gordon, head of the Jewish Agency's department of immigration and absorption, as the airplane landed. "Now his dream has come true. It's a historic day."

Rabbi Hamra, 51, served as spiritual and communal leader in Syria for 25 years. He will now live in Holon, home to a large Syrian community.

(The rabbi was in Toronto earlier this month to thank the community for its help over the years. [CJN, Oct. 13].)

Reciting the Sheheheyanu blessing, he expressed thanks to the governments of Israel, Canada, the U.S. and Syria, and to the Jewish Agency, the American Jewish Joint Distribution Committee (JDC) and the various other groups that made the exodus from Syria possible.

"I have spoken with President Hafez Assad, and we can look forward to new and good relations in the Middle East," Rabbi Hamra said.

But he side-stepped reporters' questions about the political significance of the exodus, saying that the remaining 280 Jews in Syria are free to leave when they wish and that 16 had left Damascus the previous day.

He predicted that the community's synagogues and cemeteries "would be all right" now that there is no longer a spiritual leader in Damascus.

Despite Rabbi Hamra's reticence on the subject, his sister, Pnina Nehushtan, a resident of Bat Yam for the past 20 years, said he hopes to play a role in mediating peace with Syria.

Rabbi Avraham Hamra and Judy Feld Carr, chair of the National Task Force for Syrian Jews, in Toronto earlier this month.

Expectations of a political role were echoed by his mother, Esther. "He has great charisma and great pull," she said in perfect Hebrew, which she said she learned in childhood.

At a ceremony inside an airport hall, Rabbi Hamra, who arrived with his wife, mother and six children, said he believed his arrival in Israel marked the start of a wave of Syrian Jewish aliyah from New York, "because this is our home."

Since 1948, the JDC helped sustain the Syrian Jewish community with more than $10 million (U.S.) raised by the United Jewish Appeal.

In Canada, the Dr. Ronald Feld Fund for Jews in Arab Lands has helped the Syrian Jewish community with direct aid for 20 years.

Since April 1992, 3,800 Jews left Syria, most of them for the United States, and between 1,200 and 1,300 were then brought to Israel by the Jewish Agency in a covert operation.

During the ceremony, Rabbi Hamra sat at a table in front of a big welcome banner, flanked on one side by Gordon, and on the other by Foreign Minister Shimon Peres, Jewish Agency Acting Chairman Yehiel Leket and Absorption Minister Yair Tsaban, who presented the rabbi with an immigrant's card.

Peres praised Rabbi Hamra for carefully navigating Jewish life "in a land in belligerent relations with Israel. He did it so as not to endanger Jewish lives, or Jewishness, and to provide hope" to his flock to come "back home."

"The redemption of Jewish life begins again," said Peres.

The occasion signals that "Israel is the state of the Jewish people, open to anyone who wants to come, especially those under oppression," remarked Leket. "It is our responsibility to save them, rescue them and bring them back to our homeland."

Leket said that in talks with Assad, Rabbi Hamra had displayed "combined leadership qualities and Jewish wisdom" and that "this allowed us to bring out (Syrian) Jewry."

Michael Schneider, executive vice president of the JDC, lauded Rabbi Hamra for overseeing financial aid to the community over the years.

"He took care of the disadvantaged and the needy with courage and integrity and preserved Jewish continuity, sometimes at great risk to himself."

"You have now come home with your mission accomplished," Schneider said.

Later, several hundred members of the Syrian community — veterans as well as new olim — cheered and cried with joy as Rabbi Hamra joined a celebration at the Holon headquarters of the Syrian Immigrants' Association.

"At long last, we have come full circle," declared association head Moshe Sasson.

Rabbi Carlebach dies of heart attack

By CYNTHIA GASNER
Special to The CJN

TORONTO — Rabbi Shlomo Carlebach, the composer, singer and raconteur who touched the hearts of millions of Jews around the world, died of a heart attack in New York City while awaiting the departure of a plane to Toronto to spend Shabbat with his family. He was 69.

Rabbi Carlebach is credited with having founded the baal teshuvah outreach movement in the 1960s. He became internationally famous for his spiritual performances and his melodies that have become part of synagogue and ceremonial services worldwide.

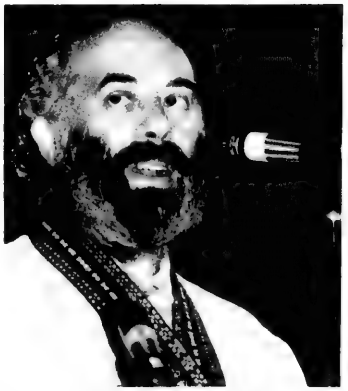
Known as the father of modern Jewish music, the renowned chassidic folk singer revolutionized Jewish music. He blended contemporary with chassidic melodies and composed Am Yisroel Chai, Od Yeshama and hundreds of other melodies.

Through his stories, soulful music and teachings, he reached Jews of all ages and all religious backgrounds. His love of God and of all Jews radiated to everyone who heard him perform. His mysticism attracted many alienated young people who returned to their Jewish heritage because of his influence, spirituality and charisma.

The guitar-playing rabbi founded The House of Love and Prayer synagogue in San Francisco and established Moshav Or Modiin in Israel. He was the rabbi at the Congregation Kehilath Jacob in Manhattan, the synagogue established by his father.

His smiling face, full head of white curls and beard became a symbol of unity for Jews around the world. He performed in large concert halls and at small gatherings in the United States, Canada, Israel, Morocco, Australia, France, Germany, Austria, Poland and the former Soviet Union. His early concerts in the Soviet Union electrified huge Jewish audiences in Leningrad and Moscow.

Rabbi Carlebach's funeral took place on Oct. 23 in New York City at his congregation and the burial was held in Jerusalem the next day.



Rabbi Shlomo Carlebach

Rabbi Yisroel Travis, a teacher at Eitz Chaim Schools in Toronto, attended the funeral. He told The CJN that about 3,000 people from all segments of the Jewish community were there. "They were all crying and singing his songs over and over," Rabbi Travis said.

Rabbi Carlebach is survived by his wife, Elaine (Neila) Carlebach, two daughters, Neshama and Nadara of Toronto, and a sister, Shulamith Levovitz of Monsey, N.Y.

The Shlomo Carlebach Foundation has been established to compile and publish Rabbi Carlebach's music, to establish a scholarship in Jewish music, and to initiate other educational programs. For information, contact The Shlomo Carlebach Foundation, 185 Davenport Rd., Toronto, Ontario M5R 1J1.

Canada reacts to Tel Aviv bombing

Ouellet on Attack

OTTAWA — Foreign Affairs Minister Andre Ouellet last week expressed his "indignation" over the "savage" Oct. 19 bus bomb attack in Tel Aviv that left at least 22 people dead and some 50 injured.

"Canadians are mourning these innocent victims who were attacked in a cowardly manner by the enemies of peace," a statement from Ouellet's office said. "This attack bears witness to the fury of those who continue to traffic in hatred. The contempt provoked by their disgusting cowardice should rally people of goodwill everywhere."

The minister expressed his solidarity with those who continue to strive for peace in the Middle East "through enormous obstacles."

* * *

Jewish Groups Outraged

TORONTO — Jewish organizations in Canada had swift condemnation of last week's Tel Aviv bomb attack.

B'nai Brith Canada weighed in first, urging "equivocal condemnation by governments worldwide of Hamas and other terrorist groups" and strong measures by the Palestinian Authority to stop terrorists.

BBC extended condolences to the the victims' families, as did Canadian Jewish Congress.

CJC said it supports Israel's efforts "in tracking down and eradicating these cold-blooded murderers and their supporters."

The Canada-Israel Committee expressed the Canadian Jewish community's "protound shock and outrage" at the bombing and said it supports Israel's policy of pursuing peace with the Arabs while fighting terrorism.

The CIC also called on the Canadian government to confront Islamic terrorist groups and countries which sponsor or support their activities.

* * *

Canadian Arab Network Reacts

TORONTO — Ziad Malawi, editor of the Toronto-based Arab-language Al-Mersal newspaper, said in a statement that the Canadian Arab Network "strongly condemns the bombing and extends its "deepest condolences to the victims, their families and to the people and government of Israel.

"This senseless and brutal act could only be viewed as a blunt attempt to derail the peace process in the Middle East."

* * *

We're Sorry, However...

TORONTO —Palestine House in Toronto called last week's bus bomb attack in Tel Aviv "a horrible crime committed by a madman whose main objective was blood and revenge, and destroying the peace process.

"We condemn in the strongest terms [the] crime, which is as heinous as the massacre at the Hebron mosque last February and must be condemned by all. Our hands and hearts go to the victims and their families in Israel."

However, the statement continued, "Israel has been warned before to heed such acts by expediting the implementation of the peace process by withdrawing its forces, vacating the settlements, handing over sweeping powers to the Palestinian Authority and improving the economic and political situation. Ignoring or bypassing the national and political rights of the Palestinians will encourage violence and will deny the Israelis the security they desire."

* * *

CFPN Condemns Attack

TORONTO — Canadian Friends of Peace Now (CFPN) co-chairs Simon Rosenblum and Ester Cole issued the following statement:

CFPN condemns in the strongest possible terms the terrorist bombing of a bus in downtown of Tel Aviv, which murdered 22 Israelis and injured many more.

Our deepest sympathies go to the families of the victims. We stand in complete solidarity with our brothers and sisters in Israel at this trying time.

The latest attack, coming the week after the tragic kidnapping and murder of IDF Corporal Nachshon Waxman and the shooting of innocent civilians in downtown Jerusalem, is clearly the continuation of a campaign to use terror and intimidation to undermine the peace process. Terrorists must be denied the realization of this goal.

To continue the peace process, it must be unmistakenly clear that all parties in the negotiating process unequivocably condemn terrorism and are taking active steps to combat it.

Hamas terror condemned

He also called on Muslim leaders and Arab intellectuals to unequivocally voice their outrage over Hamas terrorism.

"This major constituency has remained ominously silent," he said.

Hecht conveyed messages of condolence from Minister of State for Multiculturalism Sheila Finestone; provincial Cultural Communities Minister Bernard Landry; and Yvon Loubier, Bloc Quebecois economic affairs critic who visited Israel last year on a trip organized by the CIC-Q.

Israeli consul Aviva Raz-Shecter vowed that Israel would root out those responsible for the Tel Aviv attack.

She said Israel will neither surrender to terrorism nor stop the peace process, because to do so would serve Hamas' purpose.

Raz-Shecter also read the names of 13 of the 21 victims.

The synagogue's Rabbi Joshua Shmidman, while recognizing the necessity to continue the peace process, questioned doing so if the process is not "rational," if terrorism appears to succeed.

Earlier in the day, an estimated 300 students joined together in condemning the killings at a rally at McGill Uniiversity, organized by the Hillel Jewish Student Centre.

Students held up a huge Israeli flag and placards reading, "Stop the Insanity!" and "When Will It End?"

Hicham Morzouk, Egyptian vice-consul in Montreal, attended the rally but did not speak.

Hillel director Mark Zarecki said McGill Arab groups were also invited to participate but did not return Hillel telephone calls.

Speakers at the rally included Bergman; Rabbi Chananya Berzon of the Young Israel of Chomedey; Raz-Shecter; Hillel Rabbi Dovid Merling and David Galston, both of McGill Chaplaincy Services; and Savik Yeghoyzn, president of the McGill Student Society.

The synagogue memorial service was organized by CIC-Q; Federation CJA; Canadian Jewish Congress, Quebec region; B'nai Brith Canada; Centre Hillel; Communaute Sepharade du Quebec; Canadian Zionist Federation; CIJR Student Board; Betar-Tagar; and the Federation Sepharade du Canada.

Demonstrators hold protest rally in Dizengoff Square

Jerusalem Post Foreign Service

TEL AVIV — Some 40,000 protesters from around the country rallied peacefully in the city's central Dizengoff Square last Saturday night, 50 metres from the site of Wednesday's bus bombing in which 22 people died.

The demonstration lasted until about 10:30, when sporadic brawls and confrontations erupted between groups of demonstrators and armed police. Some arrests were also made, and mounted police were sent in to restore order.

Hundreds of uniformed and undercover police were sent to keep the peace, but no violent incidents were reported until the evening's end.

Only one right-wing demonstrator was detained and later released after he tried to incite the crowd. Plainclothes detectives also mingled among the protesters.

"We came to identify with the victims," said one Lod resident. Others waved torches and banners reading: "We were here a long time before, and we will stay for a long time."

Other banners read: "This peace is killing us," "1994 Government: The Final Solution," and "Rabin is lying, Jews are dying and God is crying."

Protest organizers included right-wing party members and settlement leaders.

Massive video screens showed a replay of Wednesday's news showing gruesome details of the attack.

"There can be no peace without security and now it's either peace or security," said Likud leader Benjamin Netanyahu, addressing the crowd.

He accused Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin of making a grave mistake by making Gaza a refuge for terrorists. "The IDF must do whatever is necessary everywhere west of Jordan to uproot terrorists and bring them to trial."

The government, he added, should not turn its back on terrorism. "Whoever runs away from terror will only be chased by it," he said. "The terrorist who got on the No.5 bus did not want to kill the peace process, but to murder Jews," he said.

The Jewish Theological Seminary of America wishes to thank

MR. WILLIAM M. DAVIDSON

for his exceptionally generous and unprecedented gift of $15 million to fund the creation of the

WILLIAM DAVIDSON GRADUATE SCHOOL OF JEWISH EDUCATION

at the

Jewish Theological Seminary

The Graduate School of Jewish Education will be the largest and most comprehensive of its kind, offering a fully accredited doctorate of education in religious studies, in addition to Ph.D. and M.A. programs.

The School is dedicated to creating a new class of professional Jewish educators, supporting local Jewish education efforts through the development of new teaching curricula and materials, and conducting the most extensive academic research yet undertaken in the field of Jewish education.

Mr. Davidson's gift underscores the urgent need for enriched Jewish education in North America and recognizes that there can be no shortcuts to securing Jewish continuity. Specifically, his gift will form an endowment devoted entirely to supporting programming by retaining current and adding additional, top-flight faculty, providing scholarships and fellowships to the most outstanding students, and funding research into improved methods of Jewish education.

The Seminary, on behalf of the entire Jewish community, wishes to extend its sincere thanks to Mr. Davidson for no less a feat than making possible the revitalization of Jewish education in North America.

The News in Brief

Should Germany Take Part?

AMSTERDAM — As Holland prepares for the 50th anniversary of its liberation from the Nazis, Jews here are joining the debate over whether Germany should be invited to participate in the commemorations.

Representatives of Holland's Ashkenazi, Sephardi and Liberal congregations recently weighed into the debate with a statement that the Jewish community in Holland was not in favor of inviting Germany to next year's commemoration, scheduled for May 5.

"Emotionally our community has still a long way to go to commemorate the dark period of 1940 to 1945 jointly with Germans," the statement said. "The wounds have by no means yet been healed. The fact that over 80 per cent of the Jewish population was murdered is still in vivid memory with the survivors and their children."

In contrast to the views of the congregations, Ronny Naftaniel, director of the Centre for Information and Documentation on Israel, supports German participation.

Free Screenings of Schindler's List

MOSCOW — After months of delays and bomb threats from far-right thugs, more than 1,000 people — Russian military students, concentration camp survivors, World War II veterans and Jewish families — packed a large theater in central Moscow this month for what may be the first in a six-month series of free Sunday screenings of Schindler's List.

The event was organized by Rabbi Yosef Cunin, an American who oversees the Chabad Lubavitch Bolshaya Bronnaya Synagogue, following discussions during the High Holidays about "how to make the atmosphere for Jews here more comfortable."

Instead of offering tickets only to religious Jews, Rabbi Cunin wants to present the film to assimilated Jews and Russians from various walks of life.

Rebbe Receives Gold Medal

WASHINGTON — The late Lubavitcher rebbe, Rabbi Menachem Mendel Schneerson, has been awarded the Congressional Gold medal, joining the ranks of fewer than 100 other Americans.

Both the House and Senate unanimously agreed to bestow the honor earlier this month.

The posthumous award "reflects further the long-held appreciation of this august institution of the message of the rebbe and his contribution to the educational, moral and social fabric of our society," Rabbi Abraham Shemtov, national director of American Friends of Lubavitch, said in a statement.

The gold medal and 10,000 bronze replicas should be finished by spring.

Jewish Terrorists Strike

JERUSALEM — An apparent arson attack against a telephone switching centre in Petah Tikva by Jewish terrorists last Tuesday morning caused an estimated $8 million in damage, the Bezek telephone company said.

Spray-painted on the wall of the building was the message: "The Jewish intifada has begun. The entire state of lowlifes will go up in fire. Kahane people and Judea and Samaria. The dog Yitzik (sic) Rabin equals Hitler; the time will come when we get even with him."

Communications Minister Shulamit Aloni, who visited the facility, said: "Whoever committed this act of vandalism is not only the enemy of peace, but even more so an enemy of the public who belongs behind bars. Only terrorists are able to disconnect 25,000 homes with children, old people, factories, and hospitals."

* * *

Tomb to Re-Open

TEL AVIV — The Tomb of the Patriarchs, closed to Jewish and Muslim worshippers since the Hebron massacre in February, is expected to re-open by the end of October, Deputy Defence Minister Mordechai Gur said last week.

Gur made the prediction during a visit to Hebron, where he visited the Tomb, focus of repeated unrest since the February massacre of 29 Palestinians by a Jewish settler.

Since then, Israel has beefed up security at the site, including the installation of closed-circuit television cameras to monitor visitors.

Israel's security plans also call for the separation of Jewish and Muslim worshipers, who will be confined to different parts of the complex and will be required to pray at different times.

Rally for Ron Arad

JERUSALEM — Several thousand people gathered in Tel Aviv earlier this month for a rally marking eight years that Israeli navigator Ron Arad has been missing.

Arad bailed out from a fighter plane over Lebanon in 1986 and was believed to be held by pro-Iranian forces.

Arad's brother, Hen, called on the Israeli government to pressure Syria to bring about his brother's return.

"We are not just directing an appeal to any government to help," Hen Arad told Israel Radio. "I really believe the Syrians can help, and I know what I am talking about."

Former Israeli President Chaim Herzog called on the world Jewish community to demonstrate outside Iranian embassies, demanding Arad's release.

U.S. Delegation to Probe MIAs

JERUSALEM — A U.S. Congressional delegation is to return to Syria soon to probe the fate of Israeli soldiers missing in action.

The delegation will include staff members of the House Foreign Affairs Committee. The group first visited Syria, Lebanon, and Israel last January and "is determined to get back there in the next several weeks," according to a Capitol Hill source. A firm date has not yet been set.

"The good news is they [Syria] want to deal with this humanitarian issue untied to the [peace] process or other things, and they want to renew efforts on this," he said.

"The bad news is we don't have anything. It's been almost 11 months since the idea of giving special attention to this humanitarian issue came up, and there's relatively little discernible momentum on this since January."

Museum Returned to Community

PRAGUE — The Czech government has officially returned the Prague Jewish Museum to the city's Jewish community.

The museum, confiscated by the Nazis in 1939 and subsequently taken over by the postwar Communist regime, houses one of the world's largest collections of Judaica, some of whose priceless objects date to the 16th century.

President Vaclav Havel attended an Oct. 13 ceremony marking the return, along with other Czech government officials, Israeli Ambassador Moshe Yegar and leaders of the Czech Jewish community.

Havel said he was pleased the museum was being returned to its rightful owners and expressed hope that this was just the beginning of the process of satisfying Jewish claims.

In May, the Czech parliament enacted legislation calling for the return of property seized from individuals during World War II.

Community Centre Opens

BUDAPEST — Exactly 50 years after Nazi forces took control of Budapest and Adolf Eichmann ordered 50,000 Hungarian Jews to march to Germany as slave laborers, a Jewish community centre was festively inaugurated in Hungary's capital earlier this month.

The newly rebuilt Balint Jewish Community Centre of Budapest is to serve as a social and educational hub for Hungary's estimated 130,000 Jews.

It contains a library stocked with books and video and audio tapes, a teacher resource centre linked by computer to universities all over the world and an arts and crafts centre.

The community centre, with a 10-person staff, also provides counseling, support groups and social programs for Holocaust survivors and their families.

It is housed in a two-story building that belonged to Budapest's Jewish community before World War II, when it was confiscated by the Nazi regime. It was recently returned by the Hungarian government.

Hamas terrorism must not be allowed to block peace

By YESHAYAHU ANUG

Rarely, maybe never in Israel's history, has one single fortnight been so filled with both gloom and hope. Three major tragedies, of which the carnage in Tel Aviv was the most devastating act of Arab terrorism ever perpetrated against Israel, have seriously threatened the fragile peace process.

But the same period also yielded the peace treaty with Jordan. And between terrorist acts, this year's Nobel Peace Prize winners were named, with Yasser Arafat as an improbable laureate. As a final reflexion on the way irony often works, ask yourself how many people who were watching the unbearable scenes of the Dizengoff Street massacre also remembered that the invention of Alfred Nobel, which made him rich and famous, was the one that produced the tragedy.

Whether Islamic fundamentalism will succeed or fail in its objectives will depend on the ability of all the targeted societies, Arab regimes included, to resist its onslaught. The military, suicidal wing of Hamas is but a small fanatical group not fully controlled by its political hierarchy, which operates in the open, and whose main activity in social welfare, is particularly successful in some poor and corrupt Arab environments.

As far as Israel is concerned, in the wake of the latest wave of terror, an all-out offensive with hitherto unused methods against the Hamas power structure will soon be under way. It is also likely that Israel will not carry this burden alone. At the same time, the principal enemy of Hamas, the peace process, must continue more vigorously than before, for, in the long run, it holds the best hope for success.

For now the most important battlefront is to maintain Israel's internal standing, the country's stamina and morale. The reaction of the Israeli public to the scenes of horror and devastation, massively beamed into the homes of the nation by the competing media, was mature and realistic. The mobilization of all services and the behavior of the public were, on the whole, exemplary. Much less impressive, literally scandalous, was the performance of some politicians who used the tragedy to agitate and incite the riff-raff against the government.

The tragedy in Tel Aviv came only days after the sad story of the soldier murdered during the failed attempt to rescue him. The operation was carried out by the same elite unit which had triumphed in Entebbe in 1978. In such operations, the line between triumph and tragedy is very thin. Had Corporal Nachshon Waxman been saved, one more page of glory would have adorned that unit's impressive record and Yitzhak Rabin, the man who ordered both missions, would have been acclaimed for his daring. It was not to be.

But just imagine what would have been said of the prime minister had Waxman been killed, as were other hostages before him, if he had not attempted the last minute rescue operation.

While, in the case of Waxman, the opposition supported the government's action, Rabin was criticized for his handling of the issue by some of the media and even by some members of his coalition.

"This is not the time to criticize the prime minister for his decision to act," said no other than Corporal Waxman's father, a very pious and gentle man. When also asked why the fervent prayers at the Western Wall, attended by tens of thousands the day before the tragedy were not answered, he candidly explained that the Almighty, for His own reasons, does not always respond positively to supplications.
